Dogs on Alcatraz Isle

Alcatraz prison, the Devil's Island of America, a prison on a rocky island in the middle of San Francisco bay, fortified with all the latest scientific gadgets, and manned by the most experienced crew of prison workers, has found it expedient to reinforce its crew with trained police dogs.

Sanford Bates, director of the Federal Prison bureau, declared that "Dogs are better prison guards than men. Their powers of sight, smell and hearing are far keener. They are trained to knock down the man they are sent after, but not to hurt him."

A Glorious Tale of World's Most Colorful City

"SAN FRANCISCO" UNFOLDS VIBRANT LOVE STORY OF BARBARY COAST

A new and truly romantic team is brought to the screen in Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "San Francisco," playing at the Strand Theatre, in Clark Gable and Jeanette MacDonald, Thursday of this week.

For the first time the rugged, two-fisted, jaw-socking Gable of old and the lovely Miss MacDonald with the voice that thrills, are brought together, with Spencer Tracy sharing stellar honors.

"San Francisco" has drama, love interest, comedy and spectacle. Gable has the rough and tough type of role in which his screen public likes him best. Miss MacDonald has the ideal part to give her opportunity to sing, and when she sings there is a reason for her singing for her songs are a part of the plot.

It is a story of the Barbary Coast of thirty years ago, opeing on New Year's Eve, 1906, and continuing through one of the most disastrous dramas of the century, the San Francisco earthquake and fire.

Gable is the boss of one of the most popular resorts on the Barbary Coast. Miss MacDonald is the small town girl who wanders into his dance hall, filled with ambition to become a great singer. Beginning her career on the Coast, she succeeds in rising to operatic heights, but returns to the Coast to sing in tights for the man she loves.

Gable has never been seen to greater advantage than in his present role in which he gives a performance that stands out for its power and sharply etched character delineation. Miss MacDonald, singing songs which range from simple ballads to glorious operatic arias, surpasses even her superb work in "Rose Marie" and "Naugh Marietta."

FIND HIGH GASOLINE TAX RATES REDUCE REVENUE, HURT TRADE

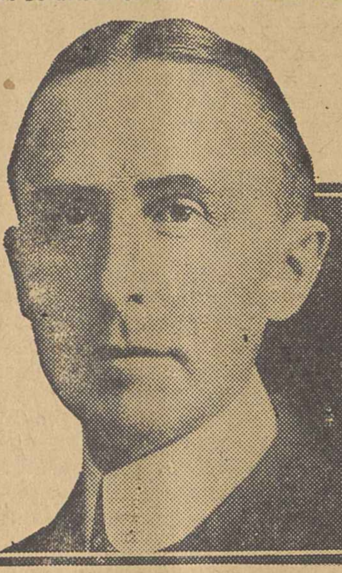
Excessive gasoline tax rates appear to be a definite barrier to increased sales of motor vehicles and consumption of motor fuel, and indirectly curtail both state revenues and business income, it is revealed in statistical analysis made by the American Petroleum Industries Committee.

It was found that in eight states with excessive gasoline tax rates, 1935 sales of new motor vehicles increased only 22.4 per cent over those of 1934 as compared with an increase of 44.5 per cent in the other states and a nationwide increase of 42 per cent. A study of motor fuel consumption over the 10-year period 1925-1934 disclosed that while consumption per vehicle increased 31.1 per cent as comparable group of states with reasonable tax rates, the increase was only 22.4 per cent in the eight states with excessive tax rates.

Spearman's Novel Brought Opening For Screen Star

Frank H. Spearman, author of "Gunlock Ranch," this paper's new serial, is credited with giving the late Wallace Reid his start as a motion picture actor. While in his heyday shortly before death overtook him, Reid said he "rode into fame on the screen with a play by Frank H. Spearman."

In his latest novel, "Gunlock Ranch," the famous Western author has returned to the field of his first literary conquest to gain new recognition as an old-time writer who could "come back." Spearman was born in Buffalo, N. Y., and spent his boyhood in Wisconsin. Orphaned when fifteen years of age, he was forced to leave Lawrence college at Appleton, Wis., and go to work as a salesman for his brother.



FRANK H. SPEARMAN

Spearman was married to Miss Eugenie Longergan, daughter of the late Thomas Longergan, pioneer Chicagoan. Delicate in health, he went to McCook, Neb., where he started writing while regaining his health. Since that time he has lived in Chicago and Hollywood.

Spearman's railroad short stories occupy a niche of their own in American fiction. Two of them, "Held for Orders" and "The Nerve of Foley," are still in print. "Whispering Smith" is one of his most famous novels, while his outstanding Western books are "Nan of Music Mountain," "Laramie Holds the Range," "Selwood of Sleepy Cat" and "Flambeau Jim."

Legion Conclave Meets Aug. 23

With reports for the past few days showing that the epidemic of poliomyolitis is on the wane in Alabama, Dr. Francis Marion Inge, Department Commander announced yesterday that the postponed Alabama American Legion Convention would be held August 23-25, inclusive at Huntsville. The dates were set by the Alabama Department Executive Committee following a conference with Dr. J. N. Baker, State Health Officer.

Dr. Baker said the situation seemed encouraging and that, if the improvement continued, there would be little danger by the time set for the convention. Those who plan to attend the convention are advised to use the alum-picric acid spray before going to Huntsville.

All plans have been made for the convention, and Huntsville is waiting for the Legionnaires and their families with a royal welcome.

Schools Suffer Due To Property Slump

STATE MUST TURN TO OTHER SOURCES FOR SCHOOL REVENUE

Montgomery, Ala.—Property assessments in Alabama dropped 26 per cent between the years 1930 and 1935, according to a recent study made in Montgomery. For the first four years of this period the decrease was gradual, averaging about 3 per cent each year. During the year 1934-1935, however, the drop approximated 14 per cent.

"Thus what was a slow decline in assessments between 1930 and 1936, became a tobaggon slide in 1935," said Mrs. James Fitts Hill, president of the Alabama Congress of Parents and Teachers, Monday in commenting on the causes of the existing shortage in school money.

"Before the depression property taxes furnished about two-thirds of the money needed for the public schools," continued Mrs. Hill. "This 26 per cent decrease in property values, therefore, is the principal cause of the trouble the schools are facing today—a fact not fully understood apparently by the people-at-large.

"As has been explained repeatedly, the public schools, not including the colleges, since 1930 have lost more than $5,000,000. Of this loss 56 per cent or more than half, was caused by a drop in real estate values. To be exact, the loss from this source alone approximates $2,800,000.

"Before Alabama can provide normal school terms for its children it must follow the example set by most of the other states which have, also, suffered seriously from a decrease of property values since the onset of the depression. These other states have been compelled to turn to other sources than property for their school revenue. It is folly for Alabama to admit the loss of 54 per cent of its school revenue from property taxes alone and at the same time do nothing to make good this loss," said Mrs. Hill.

According to the study quoted by Mrs. Hill, appropriations to the public schools by city councils and county boards of revenue dropped 60 per cent between 1930 and 1935. School revenue from tuition fees and donations in this same period dropped 73 per cent.

COLLEGE WATER SYSTEM WILL BE IMPROVED

Construction is in progress this week on a large 80,000 gallon filtration plant in connection with the water supply system of Alabama College. The structure is of solid concrete, and is located near the big overflowing spring which has been the college water supply source for several years.

This is one of the PWA projects which has been on schedule for this community for some time. It will be completed soon.

Business Shows Upward Trend

PRICES OF FARM PRODUCTS GO UP WITH RISING TIDE OF TRADE

Rising above the customary recessive tendencies, business conditions during the week gave multiplying evidence of improvement, according to the weekly review by Dun and Bradstreet. Even in the areas affected most severely by the drouth, retail distribution widened steadily, as prices of farm products reaching upward and relief payments spread.

Wholesale buying stayed close to the peak of the week previous, due to more markets opening formally their fall season.

The recession in a few of the leading industrial indices was too minor to retard the general advancing trend. The cooler weather curtailed electric output 0.5 per set for the week end shortened the rise over the 1935 level to 14.5 per cent, but for the sixth time in the industry's history, the sendout exceeded 2,000,000,000 kilowatt hours. Production of bituminous coal increased 2.8 per cent more than that mined in 1935.

The fourth consecutive weekly gain in steel operations carried the rate forward 0.6 point to 71.5 per cent of capacity, maintaining it above the 1935 level for the 25th straight time. Recovering the slight loss of the week preceding freight car loadings reached a new high for 1936, surpassed the peak that had held since October 12, 1935, and were larger than the comparative number since 1931. Production of lumber was widened 3 per cent for the week, shipments 5 per cent, and new orders 4 per cent. Compared with the 1935 figures, production was up 33 per cent, shipments 34 per cent, and new orders 37 per cent.

In contrast to an advance of 7.8 per cent in the previous week, bank clearings were below the corresponding 1935 aggregate by 7.0 per cent. Despite the small gain in commercial failures, the 16-year low was held, with the decline from the 1935 number nearly unchanged at 34.4 per cent.

Loyd Collins Kills Self With Rifle

William Loyd Collins, age about 27 years, shot and killed himself Monday afternoon with a 22 rifle. He was a son of Miles A. Collins, at whose place about a mile north of Calera he was at the time he took his life.

It is said that despondency over ill health was the cause of his action. He leaves a widow and one child.

Burial services were at Collins Chapel in Chilton County Tuesday afternoon, with Jeter in charge.

CONDOLENCE TO THE GRESKY FAMILY

Vice-Admiral F. J. Horne, Commander Aircraft Battle Force, U. S. Navy, has dispatched to Mrs. Paul Gresky, the following expression of sympathy:

"It is with sincerest sympathy that I write to you regretting the untimely death of your husband, and I desire to extend to you my sincere condolences.

"Your husband died in the line of duty, and gave his life for his country as surely as if he had been killed in action against an enemy."

Mrs. Harvey Bledsoe of Columbiana spent the week end with her sister, Mrs. Jack White, and Mr. White.

Dr. H. W. James To Leave College

An Associated Press dispatch from Silver City, New Mexico, August 3, said Dr. H. W. James, 43, director of the School of Education, Alabama College, Montevallo, has been elected President of the New Mexico State Teachers College, Ira L. Wright, chairman of the Board of Regents, announced Monday.

He succeeds the late Dr. Hoyt C. Graham, who died last June. Dr. James will take charge with the opening of the Fall term in September, the dispatch said.

Dr. James has been in Montevallo 13 years, as director of the School of Education at Alabama College. His many friends here and throughout Alabama will regret that he is to leave.

Funeral Held For World War Hero

Funeral was held in Biloxi, Miss., Monday morning for Col. Dallas Smith, native Alabamian, World War hero and head of the Veterans' Facility, a home and hospital for ex-soldiers in Biloxi, where he died Saturday night. Burial will be at 2:30 p.m. Tuesday in Opelika, his home town.

Colonel Smith, who was 54, was decorated for bravery by two nations, receiving the American Distinguished Service Cross and the Purple Heart, the French Croix de Guerre and a medal from the State of Alabama.

A member of the National Guard before the war, he served with the U. S. Army on the Mexican Border.

During the war, he was captain of Company I, 167th Infantry, Alabama's "Rainbow Division" unit. Promoted to major, he served with the Army of Occupation in Germany and was made lieutenant colonel just before returning to the United States.

Hospitalized as result of a serious leg wound received at Chateau Thierry, he later returned to the front. During the war he was made Republican candidate for governor of Alabama and was offered the post of assistant secretary of war.

He became Southern director of the Veterans' Administration shortly after the war, supervising the insurance division and serving as ordinator for 11 states. He designed the Veterans' Facility at Biloxi, where he later was director for three years.

Military rites will be conducted at his burial tomorrow by Company I, 167th Infantry, Alabama National Guard.

Surviving are his wife; one son, Bingham Smith, and two sisters, Miss Effie Smith and Mrs. W. D. Varner, Opelika.

ALABAMA SCHOOL FACTS

The Minimum Program makes the state take greater school responsibility relieving the local districts.

This change is recommended because:

1. It is in loss of local property taxes that revenue has fallen most;

2. Many counties are too poor to support a minimum term at minimum salaries;

3. The tendency in the nation is for the state to assume a greater share.

Between 1929 and 1934 the various states combined increased their share of the school burden 50 per cent.

Public schools are asking $1,700,000 less than they spent in 1929-30. Colleges are asking $1,400,000 less.

This makes education's request total $3,100,000 less than was spent in 1929-30.

Last year all education was forced to operate on about seven millions less than in 1929-30.

Yet enrollments increased 11 per cent in the public schools and 30 per cent in colleges.

Additional Details Concerning The Death Of Paul Gresky

Mr. John L. Gresky has received a letter under date of July 26, from H. B. Miller, Lieutenant, United States Navy, San Diego, California, which gives more details of the circumstances concerning the fatal accident which resulted in the death of Paul Gresky on July 23. The letter of Lieutenant Miller contains the following:

"The accident occurred at Santa Maria, California, about 250 miles north of San Diego.

"The squadron to which your son was attached to was on routine training flight. While circling the field preparatory to landing the right wing of the plane in which your son was flying appeared to collapse at an altitude of about 1,000 feet. Before Paul or Lieutenant Oliver could leave the plane it had reached an altitude which did not permit the use of their parachutes. Moreover, their escape from the plane was delayed by their heroic effort to fly it clear of a large gathering of people diretcly below them. Had they not done this, a large number of people would surely have perished. Thus, they gave up their lives in order that they would spare the lives of others. To say that this is carrying out the loyalty and courage of American youth is understanding the heroic facts.

"The entire squadron of VS-9S, of which your son was a member, join me in expressing our sorrow and sympathy to you and Mrs. Gresky in this time of grief. You should know that every officer and man in this Squadron had the highest respect and admiration for Paul. A finer man we never had, always ready to do more than his bit. A clean, courageous youngster so deeply interested in aviation that on his own he learned to fly at a commercial flying school. His love for aviation was such that if he could have chosen his means of departing from this earth, I am certain that he would have selected the air. To us it is the loss of a shipmate—a good shipmate—a happy shipmate—and that is the ultimate to those of us in the service, which is a relatively small, closely knit organization, and one in which a loss such as that of your son leaves a vacant space impossible to fill."

HIGHWAY WORK TO START SOON

RESURFACING OF ROAD FROM CALERA TO BIRMINGHAM GETS COURT OKEH

Montgomery, Ala.—H. H. Houk, state engineer, announced today work would begin this week to complete resurfacing, widening, and straightening the Shelby County link of the Bee Line highway between Calera and Birmingham.

The project, which started several months ago, was halted recently when Shelby County authorities were undecided as to their legal authority to buy rights of way due to the county having reached its constitutional debt limit.

Atty. Gen. A. A. Carmichael rendered an opinion yesterday that "even though a county has reached its constitutional debt limit, it can pay out of its general fund for furnishing rights of way for a state road."

Material for the project was purchased by the State Highway Department and the work will be done with convict and free labor.

Former Chelsea P. M. Arrested

A former Chelsea, Ala., postmaster, wanted on charges of forging money orders while he held that governmental post 20 years ago, was arrested Tuesday near Boulder Colo., said the Associated Press.

The man, Adrian B. Weldon, was traced by Postal Inspector T .C. Gibbs, who reported he sent a certified copy of an indictment pending against Weldon in U. S. Court here to federal authorities in Colorado last week.

The accused man, who Mr. Gibbs said escaped jail after his arrest at North Platte, Neb., 19 years ago, in the same case, was traced through mail sent to his parents at Winter Point, Fla. The postal inspector said Weldon pleaded guilty on arraignment after his arrest in Nebraska and did not contest his removal to Alabama to face the charges . He escaped jail on the night following the arraignment, said Mr. Gibbs.

Weldon is accused of forging money orders for approximately $1,500 while he was postmaster in the Shelby County town in 1915 and 1916.

Arrest Reported

After his arrest on his small mining claim near Boulder, The Associated Press quoted Weldon as saying:

"I've never been able to forget this thing, even with the passage of time. I want to go back now and get it over with." Weldon said he was married in Colorado and has two children, adding his wife knew "everything and was willing to stand by me."

Mr. Gibbs said Weldon would be returned to Alabama for trial in Federal Court here.

County Schools To Open Sept. 14

DATE IS SET BY RECENT ACTION OF THE COUNTY SCHOOL BOARD

At its meeting on Friday, July 31, the Shelby County Board of Education, set September 14th as the opening date for all schools in the county this year. According to Superintendent Appleton the fact that the elementary schools only had a six months term last year and were unable to promote the elementary and high school pupils makes it necessary to open on the same date this year.

For children attending schools only six months last year promotions are to be made at the end of the first month of school this fall. High Schools and some elementary schools in the county operated long enough terms last spring to promote pupils. Because of this children going into the Junior High Schools from last years six month schools at the end of the first month will be entering one month late. If the custom of opening these elementary schools one month later than the high schools should have been continued this year these children would have had to enter the high schools two months late. School officials expect to make regular promotions next spring on this plan if funds are sufficient to operate a full term this year. However on present estimates of funds available, only a five and three-fourths month term in sight. In the event this is not increased promotion of pupils in the schools will be still further complicated. It is hoped that the citizens of the county and state can plan with the Legislature some means for furnishing sufficient funds for a full term of schools for our children.

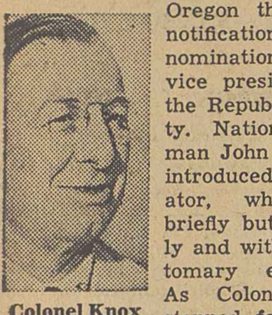
Frank Knox Notified of Republican Vice Presidential Nomination—Spanish Rebels Winning Victories—Third PWA Building Program.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union.



Colonel Knox

FACING an enthusiastic crowd that completely filled the big Chicago stadium, Col. Frank Knox received from Senator Steiwer of Oregon the official notification of his nomination for the vice presidency by the Republican party. National Chairman John Hamilton introduced the senator, who spoke briefly but forcefully and with his customary eloquence. As Colonel Knox stepped forward to deliver his speech of acceptance he was greeted by a roar of applause that continued for many minutes. His fellow citizens were glad to express their gratification for the honor done him, and the thousands from outside Chicago were no less warm in their appreciation of the candidate. In the streets surrounding the stadium was another vast throng of people who, unable to get into the building, listened to the proceedings as broadcast by a loud-speaker system.

Unlike Governor Landon, Colonel Knox devoted much of his address to the alleged failures of the Roosevelt administration which, he said, had the most glorious opportunity in the history of the nation but ignored its responsibility, failed in its job and defaulted in its obligations.

"From the day that it took office," he declared, "it embarked on a series of hysterical experiments on the economic life of a burdened people. At a time when universal co-operation was a necessity it initiated a campaign of abuse and vilification of business men. At a time when the credit of the country should have been strengthened it inaugurated a policy of credit adulteration and currency experiment that demoralized foreign trade and frightened domestic finance. It set up a system of regimentation of industry that reduced production and prevented re-employment. By coercion of congress it forced the passage of reform measures so recklessly drawn that they hamstrung the revival of enterprise and paralyzed the renewal of investment. It installed a regimentation of agriculture that destroyed food and reduced foreign markets and increased the cost of living and multiplied the expense of relief.

"At a time when private industry was struggling desperately for a new start it set up governmental enterprise to compete with private business. At a time when the burden of taxation was already hard to bear it embarked on a policy of squandering public funds and increasing the weight of taxes. At a time when united effort and mutual good-will would have completed recovery it promoted sectional hatred and class strife. At a time when returning business confidence was ending depression it began a campaign to terrorize business and subjugate the banks. At a time when confidence in the character of government was vital, it established a spoils system. At a time when the economic system was worn and emaciated it performed major surgical operations upon the industrial body to see what was inside. It adopted an economic philosophy of scarcity and forced it upon a hungry and distressed people. . . .

"No one can define the New Deal or even describe it. But we know what it means. It means federal control over local business, over local bank credit, over local wages, over local conditions of work. It leads to federal regimentation of the labor, the business, and the home of every American citizen. It leads to price-fixing and production control by federal authority. It leads inevitably to the extinction of the small business man, to the end of free enterprise in America."

Before the ceremonies started there were four big parades, converging at the stadium; and elaborate musical programs were provided both inside and outside the building.

THE WEEKLY crop report and weather summary of the Department of Agriculture revealed that the drouth and high temperature were playing havoc with the corn crop in most of the leading producing states. In some sections there will not even be fodder and over a much larger area no grain will be obtained this year. There were good rains, however, in parts of the central and eastern areas and improvement was noted there in both corn and pasturage.

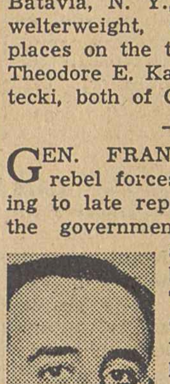
The present drouth in Iowa, the department said, has caused greater damage to corn than that of 1934. The summary reported almost complete destruction of the crop in two southern and two western tiers of counties, with serious damage in some other sections.

Threshing of winter wheat revealed expected yields, the report said, but spring wheat conditions were termed disappointing.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT ended his 437 mile cruise when his yacht docked at Campobello island, New Brunswick, where he has a summer home. He shaved off the sidewhiskers he had grown to surprise his wife and mother and went ashore for a picnic and a reception with members of his family and friends in the summer colony of the island. Canadian Royal Mounted police joined with the American secret service men in guarding the distinguished visitor.

Mr. Roosevelt remained at Campobello only two days and then took a special train to Quebec, where he visited with Lord Tweedsmuir, governor general of Canada.

TWO MEMBERS of the American Olympic boxing squad failed to take warning from the fate of Eleanor Holm Jarrett and broke training rules soon after their arrival in Berlin. Roy Davis, manager of the boxers, advised that they be sent home, and the American Olympic committee so ordered. The two delinquents were Joe J. Church, featherweight, of Batavia, N. Y., and Howell King, welterweight, of Detroit. Their places on the team were filled by Theodore E. Kara and Chester Rutecki, both of Chicago.



Gen. Franco

GEN. FRANCISCO FRANCO'S rebel forces in Spain, according to late reports, were pressing the government troops seriously and winning some bloody encounters. This despite the claims of Madrid that the Fascists had been checked. The rebel columns advancing on the capital from the south were reported to be threatening communications between Madrid and the eastern seacoast at Valencia and Alicante, chief sources of the government's food supplies. Indeed, it was announced by the insurgent radio station at Seville that the garrison at Valencia had revolted and gone over to the rebels. Leaders of the insurgents claimed they held Huelva, important seaport, and all the territory between Seville and the Portuguese border. The loyalists directed a strong attack on Saragossa but advices from the front reaching Perpignan, France, said their three columns were ambushed by the rebels in a narrow canyon and lost perhaps 2,000 killed.

General Franco has been quoted as saying the revolution, when successful, will result in a military dictatorship for the time being.

The government, now a red dictatorship, has taken possession of all church property and assumed control of all industry and agriculture. It also has confiscated the merchant marine to form a defense fleet. The loyalists were encouraged by victories in and around San Sebastian.

Claude G. Bowers, American ambassador to Spain, was cut off from communication with the summer quarters of his embassy at San Sebastian for several days, being himself at his summer residence in Fuentarrabia, close to the French border. He finally got in touch with the embassy and removed the staff to his villa. Mr. Bowers also provided safe haven for a number of other foreign diplomats and their families. He said he had ascertained that not a single American had been injured in the civil war. American warships and liners were utilized to evacuate all the Americans in ports where their lives were in danger.

Later Ambassador Bowers and his staff went aboard the cruiser Cayuga, taking with them some of the American refugees.

EMPHASIS is placed on smaller scale projects to be completed speedily, in the third building program of the public works administration, which was opened by the allotment of $22,742,034 by President Roosevelt. It includes 352 projects in 37 states, and the largest of these is a courthouse for New York city to cost the government $4,835,000. The average allotment is only $64,323.

Secretary Ickes, PWA administrator, said that, in addition to 45 per cent donation, PWA will lend $2,142,000 to help communities defray their 55 per cent share of the cost. President Roosevelt has ordered that all projects "be commenced by October 1, 1936, reach a peak by the end of the year and be completed by October 1, 1937."

LONDON newspapers were taught a severe lesson in fair dealing, in connection with the case of George McMahon who was arrested for menacing King Edward with a revolver recently. The Daily Express and the Evening News editors and their respective proprietors, Lord Beaverbrook and Lord Rothermere, were fined $2,500 each for contempt of court because the papers printed articles calling McMahon's act an attempt on the king's life, the attorney general stating that it was not yet proved to be an attempted assassination. A movie distributing agency was fined $250 on the same charge.

TWO MEN were killed and nine seriously injured when a breechblock blew out in a bow turret of the U. S. S. Marblehead which was engaged in gunnery practice fifty miles off San Diego. The cruiser immediately steamed to port under forced draft. The dead were Leo Steve Morande, second-class seaman, Eureka, Calif., and Percy William Cofer, boatswain's mate, Washington, Ga.

UNOFFICIALLY, Germany admits that she is re-fortifying Helgoland, the Gibraltar of the North sea which was demilitarized by the treaty of Versailles. The report that the Nazis were taking this action was brought up in the English house of commons and Foreign Secretary Eden said the government did not intend to deal separately with the question, hoping for a fresh effort for European peace "in which Germany would play a full part." He hinted that Great Britain would let the affair pass without comment as one of Germany's "minor affronts." It was believed France would take the same stand.

IOWA Republicans nominated Barry Halden of Chariton, editor and American Legion leader, for the United States senate seat made vacant by the death of Louis Murphy. His Democratic opponent is Guy M. Gillette.

The state Farmer-Labor party delegates met in Des Moines and named former Senator Smith Wildman Brookhart as their candidate for the seat. Until recently he has been connected with the New Deal farm organization.

In Oklahoma's runoff primary young Representative Josh Lee won the Democratic nomination for United States senator, badly defeating Gov. E. W. Marland. Lee's Republican opponent is Herbert K. Hyde.

ACCORDING to a report put out by the National Association of Manufacturers, "excessive speculation in farm lands appears at last to have ended and opportunities for farm operators to rent land or purchase on equitable terms are now restored."

The report, prepared by the association's committee on agricultural co-operation, was stated to be based on an analysis of the relationship between farm commodity prices and the market value of farm real estate.

King Edward

MORE than 100,000 persons stood in silence at Vimy, France, as King Edward VIII of England unveiled the magnificent memorial built by France to commemorate the heroic capture of Vimy Ridge by the Canadian forces in April, 1917. After greeting President Lebrun of France in French, the king said:

"We raise this memorial to Canadian warriors. It is an inspired expression in stone chiseled by a skillful Canadian hand of Canada's salute to her fallen sons. It marks the scene of feats of arms which history will long remember and Canada can never forget. And the ground it covers is the gift of France to Canada."

The dedication culminated ten years of labor and an expenditure of about $1,000,000 on erection of the memorial. The work was completed after earlier delays in construction because of difficulties in finding the 7,000 to 8,000 tons of special stone required.

Walter S. Allward, Toronto architect and sculptor who designed the monument for the Canadian battlefields memorial commission, supervised the preparations for the unveiling.

SIR HENRY WELLCOME, who was born in a log cabin in Wisconsin 83 years ago and who became one of England's greatest scientists and explorers, died in London following an operation. His scientific achievements ranged from the establishment of physiological laboratories to pioneering in the field of archaeological survey through the use of airplanes. He won the Royal Humane society life saving medal in 1885 and as late as 1927 founded the Lady Stanley Maternity hospital in Uganda, Central Africa.

ACCORDING to announcement by a Polish news agency which is generally considered to be the mouthpiece of the Polish foreign office, an accord has been reached between Berlin and Warsaw on the policies to be followed in the Free City of Danzig. The Nazis are said to have agreed to give explanations that will take the sting out of recent incidents in the city.

Childhood
Tugwell's Little Girl
Holland Buys Planes
Rev. Webber Knows

Childhood lasts longer in France than in America and it is real childhood. Boys in their teens, writing letters, call their fathers Cher petit pappa, "Dear little papa" — imagine that from an American "prep" school.

Arthur Brisbane

Little French girls play innocently with Toto, their little dog, hardly knowing that such things as francs exist, when much older than Assistant Secretary Tugwell's intelligent young daughter, Marcia, aged twelve, who, in partnership with her friends, Mary Frances Cottrell and Joyce Helmick, organized "a laundry for washing dogs." They advertised: "Small dogs, 30 cents; middle-sized dogs, 35 cents; groomed and washed. Dogs not good-natured must be sent with muzzles, and we cannot wash large dogs."

Too bad that parental severity broke up the dog laundry. It had announced working hours "10 a. m. to 5 p. m. on Saturdays," the studious little girls' only holiday, "all hours after school on other weekdays."

What a good example for government enterprises: the little girls really meant to work to "groom and wash" the dogs, not merely stand around and collect the 30 cents.

Plucky little Holland and her wise queen seem to have decided that the 1914 "war to end all wars" did not finish its job. Holland went through the big war safely, selling butter, cheese, eggs, not disturbed, not making any bad $10,000,000,000 loans.

Now Holland is buying 13 heavy bombing planes in Baltimore, spending $1,500,000 for the 13, and spending many other millions for other killing machinery.

That means work and wages in Baltimore; it may mean poison gas and death for some of Holland's neighbors.

Foreign countries read everything said about them in America; not that foreign countries care what Americans think, or attach importance to American opinion, as such; but America has money, raw products, and governments that are sometimes whimsical, changeable and boyish.

Europe, Asia and Africa watch with equal interest statements of Americans that count and more numerous Americans that float like feathers in the air.

One simple - minded Russian pointed with pride to the statement of a clergyman in our Union Theological seminary.

That gentleman, Rev. Charles C. Webber, has a plan for a better government, not based on the text about rendering unto Caesar that which is Caesar's. The big idea is to take away what is Caesar's.

Eight hundred young people were told by Reverend Webber: "God, who is not content with things as they are, is a revolutionary Being, constantly seeking to make all things new."

Rev. Webber, "recognizing this," about God being a revolutionist, has a plan to help God in his efforts; a plan as simple as A, B, C. Capitalism, he says, must be abolished. Rev. Webber wants a planned and planning social economy in the United States. Under the Charles C. Webber plan, people would own and manage such things as industry and property; no money would be spent for war, and youth would rule.

Those brought up with the old-fashioned idea of God might ask Rev. Webber, respectfully: "If God really is a revolutionary 'constantly seeking to make all things new,' why does He not carry out His will and 'make all things new' every few minutes? Can it be that He needs the help of Rev. Webber? Lenin and Stalin got along without that help."

Also arises this question: With capitalism abolished, who would build the churches, the Union Theological seminaries, and pay salaries to Rev. Webbers for reading the mind of the Divinity?

Dean Swift should have known Rev. Webber when he wrote his tale of a tub.

France calls Paris the "aerial port of Europe," proudly. In America the still prouder title "Chief Air Traffic Port of the Whole World" is claimed by Miami, Los Angeles, San Diego, Chicago, Cleveland, and with a great deal of reason by San Francisco and Oakland, thanks to the magnificent bay, and to the fact that the greatest air line, running from America to Asia, starts from that neighborhood.

To Lure Farm Vote

Washington.—There seems to be little doubt any longer that President Roosevelt is getting ready to spring a new surprise among his many surprises and that he will employ it to wean away as much of the farm vote from Governor Landon of Kansas as is possible. The President usually has a card up his sleeve, one that he can pull out with a flourish and one that, on the surface at least, carries very convincing prospects in the particular line he has chosen.

In this instance, it seems rather well established that you may expect the President to come forward shortly with a brand new proposition for greater co-operative effort between the farmers and the city consumers. He is likely to present this new proposition—some of his critics have been unkind enough to describe it as a new rabbit from the hat—in a dressing that will be quite alluring. It is not clear yet just when the new plan will be offered by the President and his New Deal associates, but the guess can be made that it will come in time to permit a full exposition of the program by the New Dealers in advance of election. By the same token, it is apparent that the President's 1936 promises for the farmers will be disclosed late enough so that the Republicans will have little time to pick it to pieces.

The tip-off on the fact that Mr. Roosevelt is developing another farm program comes in Mr. Secretary Wallace's latest book "Whose Constitution." Of course, the secretary's observations may not be charged directly to the President. Nevertheless, it is the opinion of many of us who have watched the New Deal wheels go around that the secretary of agriculture usually leads the procession in offering new suggestions for New Deal activities.

Secretary Wallace is a candid man and his frankness continuously has been of an engaging sort. For the reason that he is of this type, I think it can be said usually that his views reflect what is going on beneath the surface. That is, his views ordinarily serve as a trial balloon, whether the secretary realizes it or not, and if they are watched closely, an accurate forecast of what is coming may be made.

It might have been that the secretary's book would have escaped attention as a vehicle carrying a message from the inner circle of New Dealers except for one line that was tucked away in the Democratic platform, or the platform adopted by the Philadelphia convention.

The sentence in the platform with which the secretary's book may properly be connected reads: "We will act to secure to the consumer fair value, honest sales and a decreasing spread between the price he pays and the price the producer receives."

Some observers here have linked that proposition with a thought that Mr. Roosevelt proposes to organize not only co-operatives among the farmers but to link those co-operatives with similar co-operatives among the consumers. The conviction held by these individuals is that Mr. Roosevelt, astute politician that he is, is seeking to kill two birds with one stone. In other words, they contend that his plan will be thrown out as an inducement for the farmers to support his policies and re-elect him and that when he deals with the voters in great industrial areas he will point out to them the possibility of cheaper food in this manner.

It is to be remembered in connection with the reported new farm program that Mr. Roosevelt has sent a commission to Europe to study the co-operative idea. There has been no fanfare, no blare of trumpets about the departure of these men, each being an avowed New Dealer and each one being thoroughly dependable. That is, they are men who can be depended upon to present the facts they gather in true New Deal light. They have been in Europe now about a month. It is expected they will remain at least one month longer. If, then, they take a month to write their report it becomes obvious that we can expect another New Deal farm program, based upon the co-operative idea, to emerge from the White House around October 1. It is just 30 days from that date to the election.

Campaign Issues

We now have had acceptance speeches by both Mr. Roosevelt and Governor Landon, his opponent. To the extent that the keynote speeches of the national conventions indicate the trend of mind of the party workers and to the extent that the acceptance speeches tell in a way the deeply rooted views of the candidates, the issues of the campaign are drawn.

Of course, it has frequently been the case that the issues of July are not the issues that decide the election in November. There are those students of politics who are saying this year that the questions discussed by President Roosevelt and Governor Landon in their acceptance speeches are going to have very little to do with the decision of the voters three months hence.

I can report only on a consensus among political authorities on this point. That consensus seems to be that Mr. Landon is going to stick to discussion of the major problems as he sees them and that Mr. Roosevelt's strategy will be governed entirely by whatever changes take place in campaign conditions.

In other words, these writers in Washington who have gone through many a harried political battle, seem to feel that Mr. Roosevelt's campaign strategy is going to be exactly like the policies he has followed in his present administration. By that I mean, to quote the President's own words, that "If one thing fails, we will try something else."

There is the conviction among these same writers that Governor Landon will resort to no oratorical flourishes nor will he employ any of the tactics that Mr. Roosevelt has so often used in his fireside radio chats. Further, it is quite evident, I believe, that Governor Landon will make the burden of his plea to the American people an appeal to restore what he considers to be the American form of government. It was quite obvious from his acceptance speech, as it has been evident in some of his pre-campaign pronouncements, that he favors the common sense idea in government management and that he will permit nothing to swerve him from that course.

But it should be said, it seems to me, that if Governor Landon is able to maintain that plane throughout his campaign, he will be deserving of great commendation. There are many observers here who believe he has undertaken a task of the most difficult kind. The governor has built up or others have built up around him an atmosphere of simplicity. It has reached a high pitch. The question is—can he keep the campaign attuned to that pitch from now until November? If he does, he will surprise a great many observers.

Farley Irked

Lately, I have heard through underground channels that Democratic Chairman Farley is getting a little irked at the methods employed by the youthful John Hamilton, who is chairman of the Republicans. "Big Jim" has taken a leave of absence as postmaster general, you will remember, in order to devote his time to re-electing President Roosevelt. He is now in a position to battle and, judging by his record, he can be expected to carry on a vigorous fight. That makes it all the more surprising to know that "Big Jim" has grown a little bit peevish as a result of the nudging and the razing that the red-headed Republican chairman has been handing him.

Six weeks elapsed between the nomination of Governor Landon and the date of his formal notification. During this time, Mr. Hamilton alone had to carry the Republican ball. He made numerous speeches and minced no words in any of them. He struck out straight from the shoulder at Mr. Farley.

During that time, Mr. Hamilton really had no one firing back at him. It was exactly the same condition as obtained before the Republicans had selected a candidate and Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Farley had no one to fight back at them. The test for Mr. Hamilton, therefore, will come when Mr. Farley gets into action and the Democratic campaign is fully under way. He is young in national politics and some of the success of the Republican campaign is going to depend upon how Mr. Hamilton conducts himself, when Mr. Farley starts jibing and knocking down the Republican chairman's ears in the heat of battle.

There is another phase of the campaign that is going to be interesting to watch. For three years, Mr. Roosevelt has had open channels on the radio, has had the utmost freedom in picking his spots for delivering new pronouncements or his appeals for patience by the people. But that time has passed insofar as the President is concerned. He is now confronted with competition. What I am trying to say is that everywhere and every time the President speaks, he will speak with the knowledge that a fighting opposition is ready to leap on every word and every proposal that he makes. This is an entirely different circumstance than any Mr. Roosevelt has faced since he entered the White House March 4, 1933.

STAR DUST

Movie • Radio

★★★By VIRGINIA VALE★★★

THE death of Thomas Meighan may not mean very much to the younger movie-goers, but it will shock those who remember him as one of the big stars of the days of silent pictures. Like many stage stars, he was not too sure at first that he would like pictures.

But he did "The Miracle Man" and with it hit his stride. Oddly enough, Lon Chaney made his name in that picture too. And so did Betty Compson, who was finding it none too easy to climb the ladder of fame.

Nobody suspected that "The Miracle Man" would be such an epoch-making picture as it was. But it established its three leading actors as stars almost overnight.

Charles Laughton

And speaking of star-making pictures, see what's happened to the people who appeared in "The Private Life of Henry the Eighth," none of whom were well known in this country till it was released—and the rest of the world had acclaimed only Charles Laughton, of the cast.

But since then Laughton, Robert Donat, Merle Oberon, Wendy Barrie and Binnie Barnes have been welcomed by Hollywood. All have been extremely successful in American pictures.

Since her marriage Jean Parker has been luckier than many Hollywood brides; she has had assignments that provided a pleasant honeymoon. First they went to Texas, on location with the company that was making "The Texas Ranger"; now they're off to Mammoth lake and the mountains for "King of the Royal Mounted." Now all she needs is an engagement with some company that's headed for Honolulu, Hollywood's pet honeymoon spot.

Joe Penner is going to make that picture at last. And because children have become sure-fire hits on the screen, he'll be assisted by Patsy Lee Parsons, a five-year-old who sings and dances. The dancing teachers of this land ought to give Shirley Temple a medal or something. Everywhere—even out in the country where you wonder where and how they can take dancing lessons, you see little girls doing tap dancing nowadays. And Shirley is responsible for that!

Just one more story of the way things happen in Hollywood. Samuel Goldwyn wanted a German actress for a role in "Come and Get It." He was sure that none of the local talent measured up. So he had old German films run off for him, for days and days, in the hope of seeing exactly the right actress in one of them. If he found her, of course he'd have to find out where she was, and put her under contract, and have her brought to California at once.

He found the girl in a picture called "Frederika" and the wheels began to turn. Then it was discovered that she is Mady Christians, who has been right in Hollywood for two years, yearning to make a lot of pictures but not getting too many assignments.

Joan Crawford

Remember Joan Crawford in "Dancing Lady"? The picture is being re-issued, not because of Joan's popularity, but because Fred Astaire had a small part in it. Nelson Eddy had a bit, too—just a flash and he's gone. And now see what fame the gentlemen have attained on the screen! Fred Astaire has achieved an unprecedented popularity in the gay night club type of vehicle; Nelson Eddy has become the idol of millions of movie goers as well as radio listeners.

ODDS AND ENDS . . . Don't miss "The Moon's Our Home" if you want to see a very funny picture . . . Richard Arlen has just entered the Vancouver $5,000 golf tournament; he'd rather golf than eat . . . Joe E. Brown and his wife went to Peoria, Ill., for the opening of his picture, "Earthworm Tractors," Peoria being the world's tractor center . . . This last year in radio has proved that the public doesn't care any more for programs that depend on gags instead of funny situations . . . And the fact that Ed Wynn failed to regain his former popularity is one proof of it . . . Rubinoff (and his violin) turned down an offer to reappear with Eddie Cantor . . . Constance Bennett, Simone Simon, Loretta Young and Janet Gaynor will work together in "Ladies in Love"—and Hollywood looks for displays of temper from at least three of them before the picture's finished.

Gunlock Ranch

SYNOPSIS

Sleepy Cat, desert town of the Southwest, is celebrating the Fourth of July. Jane Van Tambel, beautiful daughter of Gus Van Tambel, hated owner of Gunlock ranch, has arrived from the East for the first time. She watches the Frontier Day celebration in company with Dr. Carpy, crusty, tender-hearted friend of the community. Henry Sawdy of the Circle Dot ranch, tricked in a fake horse race the day before by Dave McCrossen, foreman at Gunlock, plans revenge. He enters Bill Denison, a handsome young Texas wrangler, in the rodeo which McCrossen is favored to win.

Tenison, when introduced, looked over Sawdy's hope in his usual cold-blooded fashion. Jake Spotts, the profane barber-shop-and-bar magnate, appeared meantime. Tenison asked for six hundred dollars. Jake counted his roll. He showed four hundred odd. "Give me the four, Jake," said Tenison calmly.

"I c'n get all you want up at the bar, Harry," suggested Spotts, thin, tall, bald-headed, hollow-jawed, and hollow-eyed.

"There's no time to make the trip, Jake," interposed Sawdy, nervous. "The races are pretty near over, and the trick ridin' comes next."

"No matter," interposed Tenison. "I'll borrow a couple hundred from Harry Boland."

"Why, Boland's backin' the Gunlock outfit."

"All the better. I'd just like to double-cross the . . ."

Within the next five minutes he was talking to Boland. "What's next on the program?" asked the Medicine Bend gambler after the preliminaries.

"Trick ridin'," said Boland.

"Chance to pick up any money on it?"

"Sure, if you can place any money. Bet on McCrossen, ridin' for Gunlock."

"The rustler?"

"Hell, he's foreman at Gunlock now."

"I suppose Van Tambel wouldn't feel easy if he had an honest man stealin' for him. All right. If you say it's McCrosson, lend me a couple of hundred, Harry. I'd like to make my fare up here, anyway."

Boland counted out two hundred dollars and handed it over. Tenison handed half of it back to Boland, "Put this on McCrossen for me—I'll see if I can place the rest on him myself. Who's ridin' against him?"

"Two or three buckaroos. The Circle Dot outfit have entered a young fellow—we'll clean 'em, same as we did yesterday," predicted Boland.

"I heard about that—suckers will always fall for it, Harry. Well, I'll go over and talk to Sawdy and Lefever—see if they got any money left—maybe I can get a small bet."

Boland was fat and short. He never breathed easily; but he would not have been able to breathe at all if he had heard the next talk between Tenison and Sawdy.

"How does it look to you, Harry?" blurted out Sawdy.

"Like many things have looked before takin'; they don't always look so good after. Here's Jake's four hundred. I'm addin' six hundred—that makes your thousand. I don't know about that cigarette trick. I never saw it done but once."

"Where was that?"

"In Madison Square Garden."

"Who pulled it?"

"A young fellow—a Texan—I didn't get his name."

From the judges' stand came the clang of the bell. The jockeys rode up to hear the decision. When they had ridden away, the announcing judge called for the contestant in the next event—the fancy riding.

Four entries rode up and were checked in. First came McCrossen, Gunlock foreman, tall and spare, long-haired and straight as a statue, riding the identical mare that had taken the Circle Dot money the day before.

Next for entry came a Gunlock brave, accoutered with banded hair in scant Indian fashion. The third hope was a local boy in brave apparel.

The fourth to rise up was the night wrangler of the Circle Dot outfit—not an alarming threat either in looks or in reputation. He rode the horse on which he had been so badly beaten the day before, Lefever's little chestnut gelding.

Three judges had been chosen to name the victor—Jim Laramie, a north-country cattleman, himself a rider of no mean ability; John Selwood, a mining man who likewise knew how to ride; and an ex-sheriff, Bill Pardaloe—now a deputy.

The first test came in Indian-style riding. This meant bareback first with bridle stripped; then with bridle. The Reservation entry was at home in this.

Pardaloe gave him a hundred points and waited for the next man. The local boy passed out on this test. McCrossen made a splendid showing, but his size was against him for that style of horsemanship.

The wrangler, almost as large a man, seemed able better to twist and wind himself around his gelding. The last time he raced down the course it looked at a distance from the grandstand as if the horse had lost his rider, so completely did the wrangler hide himself on the opposite side.

The judges, at least, decided that no buck they had ever seen ride could hide himself more effectually from a foe—they gave the Texan par with the buck. McCrossen fell a few points under the two.

Wild West riding followed. In this McCrossen made a perfect score. His long, lithe body in action, his perfect ease and his striking garb brought enthusiastic applause. The wrangler, now well thought of, was a disappointment in this test. He got through all the work, but seemingly unevenly and with an effort. He dropped to eighty points, with McCrossen at par. Even the local boy and the Indian passed him.

"Looks like yesterday over again," said Harry Boland, disposed to jeer at Sawdy. "Guess your boy shot his bolt on the first round."

The laugh seemed to bore into Sawdy. "We don't quit yet," he blurted out like one baffled but not beaten.

"What do you think, Harry?" Boland was appealing now to Tenison.

"Looks like the wrangler is through," assented Tenison. Backing then to one side and speaking loud to Boland, he added: "Put that money of mine on McCrossen—he's got the act in the bag."

"Well, better luck next time, Henry," said Boland, resuming his prodding of Sawdy.

"I don't ask any better luck," retorted Sawdy. "My boy is the best rider in this bunch, an' I know it."

"Henry," asked Boland, "have you got any money that says that?"

Sawdy fairly hated the sound of the fellow's sneering voice. "The boy's just havin' an off spell—might be all right next event."

"But you wouldn't bet on it?"

Sawdy looked at his tormentor gravely. "You want a bet, eh?"

"Sounds like it, don't it?"

"What odds'll you give?"

Boland turned to Tenison to laugh. "Here's a man with the best fancy rider on earth and askin' odds on him."

"Askin' odds on him today only," explained Sawdy defensively. "He's just off color today."

Boland sneered again. "An' there ain't going to be no trick ridin' tomorrow. That's a fine proposition of yours, Henry."

"I'll have my boy in the saddle tomorrow for any kind of ridin' you name against any rider you name," retorted Sawdy.

"What odds you askin', Sawdy?" asked Boland, dangerously near to a sneer as he questioned.

"On the showin' the boy's made," responded Sawdy impressively, "and only on the chance he can pull himself together by tomorrow, I'm askin' two to one."

"How much do you cover at that?"

"All you can raise."

"Sawdy," snapped Boland, "I'll go you a thousand, two to one." The judges' bell clanged for the trick riding. Sawdy in consternation rushed toward the stand. "Hold on," he cried throwing up his hands. "Five minutes, gentlemen—just five minutes," he shouted. "My man is changin' his boots. Five minutes, please!"

"Does it take him five minutes to take off his boots?" bellowed Bill Pardaloe. "I c'n kick mine off in five seconds. Start the ridin'!" ordered Bill, clanging the bell impatiently.

"For God's sake, Bill Pardaloe!" shouted Sawdy, "hold on, hold on—give me at least three minutes." If a wink from the foot of a two-story balcony might be described as stentorian, such was the slow, agonizing wink that Sawdy cast up at the impatient judge.

Pardaloe looked at his watch. "I'll give you two minutes," he said sternly. "Be ready or default!" But both men quite understood that this remark was for public consumption rather than literal enforcement.

Sawdy raced hastily back to Boland, who, in fact, had followed him part way to the stand. "You said a thousand at two to one," panted Sawdy. He drew hastily from his pocket a roll of bills and laid the money in Tenison's hands. "Count that—they're mostly fifties. Now, Boland, put up or shut up."

"Just a minute!" Boland conferred with his cronies—a group of them were already about him. There was a turning sidewise, a digging into pockets, an assembling of wads; the thousand was hurriedly put into Tenison's hands.

Boland was excited, Sawdy particularly calm. "Boland," he said casually, "I'm hungry."

"What do you mean, Sawdy?"

"I'm hungry for another thousand, same odds."

"Like hell, I guess."

Sawdy pulled from another pocket a second roll of bills.

"Put up, Boland, or shut up, just's you like."

"Sawdy, I'll bet you five hundred more, even money." It was purely a bluff, but it brought an unpleasant surprise.

"I want to be fair, Harry Boland," retorted Sawdy, "just's you was, yesterday. Put up your five hundred, buddy. I'll cover it."

The words were a blow to Boland. Sawdy's not even pausing to insist on odds as the money went up told him that somebody, somewhere, had loaded something. Sawdy hustled back to the stand and winked anew at Pardaloe. The bell clanged. The contestants rode up. The wrangler now, as Jane Van Tambel saucily whispered to Dr. Carpy sitting next to her, was a symphony in brown, from head to foot—a skeleton brown jockey cap, close-fitting brown jersey, brown jersey riding trousers, and low, soft, brown boots made up his rig.

McCrossen clung to his scarlet sash and silk shirt—nor had the Indian or the local boy changed.

As the riding went swiftly forward and the feats grew more difficult, the boy and the Indian were eliminated.

McCrossen took these stunts readily, the wrangler riding fourth, and easily, in all the tests after him. These two riders seemed indifferent in all the earlier feats. They rode standing, feet first or head first; twirling rifles, turning lightning-like in the saddle to face forward or backward at full speed.

With the struggle narrowed to the two seemingly even-matched riders, sectators began to wonder how the contest could be decided. The judges, after conference, asked for a further trial of the familiar feat of picking objects from the ground.

Already these feats had been made a feature and creditably performed. But some word had reached the judges that there might be further possibilities in this field. The two contestants were asked to propose their own stunts, tossing for first choice. McCrossen won. A lady's white handkerchief was dropped, and, riding at speed, turned backward in the saddle, McCrossen picked it from the ground. The wrangler followed suit.

It was now the Texan's turn. Sawdy ran out on the track to his side. "Give him the saddle-and-bridle trick," he whispered.

The wrangler, still breathing fast, demurred. "He's seen it done. Probably he can do it himself, Sawdy."

"No matter. It'll make a hit, tire him out."

"I'm getting tired of this show myself. It's been pretty long," objected the rider. "Leave it to me, will you? I'll give him one he's never seen." There was a further whispered conference.

"Go to it!" exclaimed Sawdy, after a moment, seemingly confident of his representative. Then he turned to the little grandstand.

"Ladies 'n' gentlemen an' honorable judges," he began. "Circle Dot has tried to contribute in a humble way to your entertainment this afternoon. You're all anxious to see this contest, grand as it has been, brought to a decision. Our entry for the prize will now present a feat never before seen in Sleepy Cat."

Reining to the middle of the track, the wrangler drew from a buttoned breast pocket of his jersey a packet of cigarette papers and a small sack of tobacco. Seated on his pawing horse, he rolled his cigarette, put away the makings, hung the cigarette on his lip, and lifted his hat as he looked up at the spectators and felt in another pocket for a match. While doing so he awkwardly dropped the cigarette; it fell from his lip to the dusty track. He bent over in the saddle to look regretfully down at the cigarette where it lay.

Sawdy stepped to the side of the grandstand and, after his usual salutation, began, hat in hand: "Our Circle Dot wrangler seems to be a little awkward today—nervous, maybe. You see, ladies, he hasn't had such a bevy of elegant women to look at for many, many weeks. We've been on a long, hard drive an' haven't seen so much as a picture of a smart girl for nigh three months—no wonder he's nervous."

"Hear! Hear!" cried Carpy and his group. Sawdy, surprised, looked up. "Where?" he demanded. And getting only a laugh, continued:

"Whatever the reason, ladies an' gents, the boy has dropped his cigarette. He's makin' motions to me to pick it up. But it's too much to ask of a fat man. Let him pick up the cigarette himself. Go, boy, go!"

As the wrangler cantered leisurely down the track, Sawdy, as spieler, continued to explain:

"He will now try ridin' at top speed, to pick up his cigarette. If he succeeds, I am sure you will all be willin' to see him enjoy smokin' it, after a hard hour's work. If he fails under these speed conditions, he will retire as gracefully as possible from the track an' turn a similar job over to his esteemed rival. Our wrangler will use the quirt on his pony for the first time today. All we'll ask is, just please give the boy quiet when he rides up."

The wrangler had wheeled his horse fifty yards down the track and sat waiting for Sawdy's signal.

The cowman raised a warning hand. "Are you ready?" The wrangler nodded. "Go!" shouted Sawdy.

Quirting his pony smartly and bending in the saddle as the wiry little gelding sprang in long leaps ahead, the wrangler, nearing the stand, swung over to the right so low in the saddle that he trailed his hand in the dust.

CHAPTER II

ONLY the soft clatter of the pony's hoofs as he now flew down toward the grandstand struck the ear. A slender streak of dust rose from where the fingers trailed along the track. As he neared the vicinity of the cigarette, the wrangler lifted his fingers just above the dust and bent his straining eyes ahead. He passed the grandstand like a flash.

As he did so, his right hand was flung out, just once, and his fingers struck at the dust. He dashed ahead, straightened himself gradually in the saddle, and, holding his right hand high, checked the pony and rode slowly back.

The judges clambered down from their stand and ran out on the track. They looked in vain circles for a trace of the cigarette; stirred up the dust where it might be hidden. But the wrangler, riding back toward them, held the damaged cigarette.

Boland was wild. He rushed out to join the judges. "It's a plain trick," he shouted. "He pretended to pick up one cigarette an' had another in his hand."

"Where's the cigarette he dropped here in the first place?" asked Pardaloe, pointing to the track. "It was right here. I seen it." He appealed to the other judges. "You seen it." The two nodded assent. "What you talkin' about, Bo?" Boland was industriously searching the track. "Find it! But be careful you don't try to drop another cigarette like it!"

"The horse might have picked it up on his hoof," bellowed Boland. "Yes," commented Selwood. "Yes. Examine the pony's mouth, too, Boland. He may not have swallowed it yet. I say, gentlemen," he added, "the Circle Dot boy has done a clean job. Now, let's see McCrossen perform."

But McCrossen, stubbornly rejecting all his backers' entreaties, refused to perform. "Wouldn't I be a sucker to try to beat a man at his own game?" he demanded.

"That trick's no part of frontier ridin'. It's never been done before at a Sleepy Cat celebration."

"It's progress, gentlemen; progress, I call it. If it ain't been done in Sleepy Cat, it's been done plenty at other celebrations. So you," thundered Sawdy, "want a brilliant crowd of fair women and brave men to set here year after year an' be bored stiff with the same old tricks? Gents!" he appealed to the judges, "I call for judgment."

The judges huddled. At a little distance Sawdy and Lefever huddled with the wrangler on the gelding. Presently Lefever stepped over to the judges. "Gents," he announced, "before you decide, we make another proposal. Our man will now undertake to duplicate any trick on a horse that the Gunlock champion wants to try. We want to be perfectly fair."

"You mean," retorted Selwood, "you're mean enough to beat the boots off him an' carry away the boots. Well, Boland," he called out, turning to the saloonkeeper, "you heard that. Do you want to take that challenge?"

"McCrossen has done all the tricks and done 'em well."

"If you decline," declared Selwood, "judgment for the fancy riding goes to Circle Dot. It is so ordered. Stop your yawp, Harry Boland."

Boland continued to protest, but the verdict, announced to the spectators, met with wild approval. They declined to let the wrangler go. He was assailed with cries. "Do it again! . . . Once more! . . . Again!"

Sawdy, after a conference with the favorite, made a stentorian announcement: "If you'll all get off the track and shut up," he began, "our lad will give you one more exhibition."

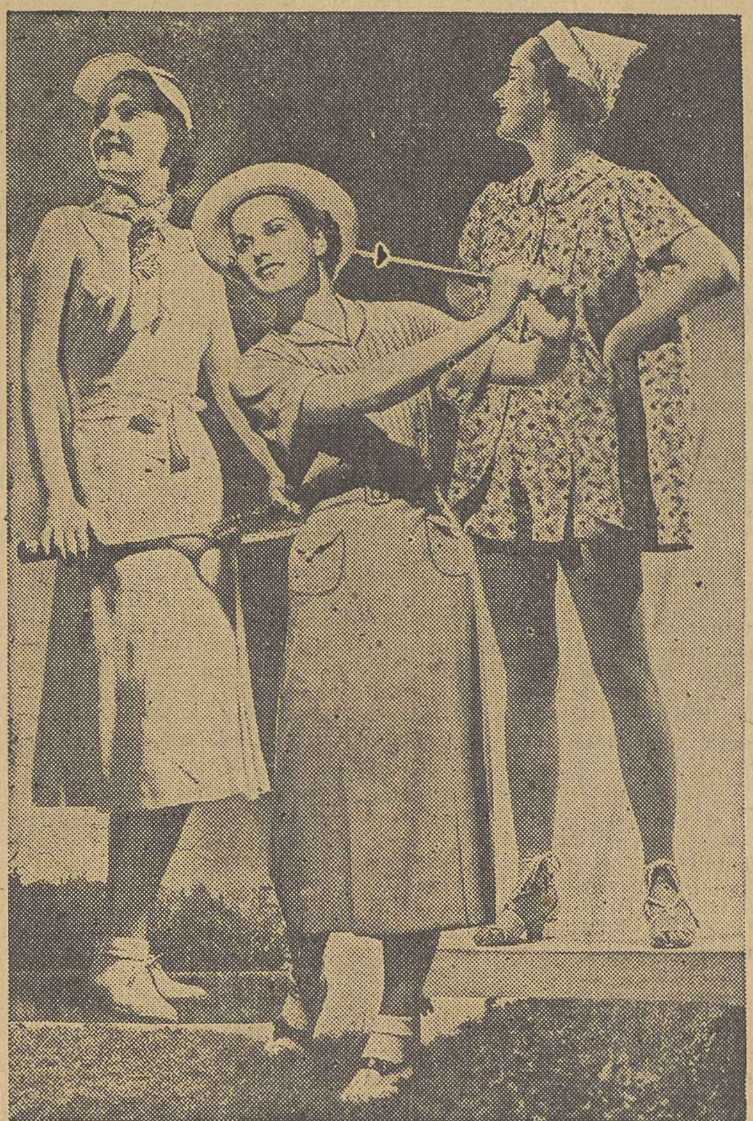
Early Use of Stocks

In Shakespeare's day every town and village was compelled to maintain stock to deal with the rogues and vagabonds who infested the country. A vagabond "caught in the act" was put in the stocks for three days and three nights on a diet of bread and water; if he repeated the offense in the same parish the time was doubled. It was up to the tramp to keep moving. When this punishment proved insufficient the stocks fell into disuse, and flogging and branding were substituted. In a number of museums in this country, says London Answers Magazine, there are iron masks with two square holes cut in each, so that the felon could be branded prominently on either cheek.

Silk for High Style Sports Wear

By CHERIE NICHOLAS



MIDSUMMER means sports, and this year sportswear in the fashion picture means silks, for every outdoor activity from golf to swimming or just lazing about.

The smart golfer, this season, wears a simple shirtwaist frock of washable end-to-end or striped silk shirting or of classic silk crepe of narvelous quality or some one or other of the new linenlike silks, if not silk shantung. These smart and practical silk shirtmaker dresses often have fly fronts, tucked bosoms and pockets for your golf tees as the model centered in the picture displays. Blue silk crepe fashions this stylish and practical frock.

Very feminine and graceful for tennis are short dresses of soft silk weaves such as silk jacquards or Chinese silk damasks which are light, cool and comfortable. They are usually cut short, with sunback decolletage, offering a refreshing contrast on the courts to the shorts and slacks that are so commonly worn. New for the tennis enthusiast is a white jacquard silk crepe frock cut on princess lines with a gored handling, the jacquard patterning showing lively little tennis-playing figures. See a model of this description to the left in the illustration. Note it has a squared decolletage and wide shoulder straps. Culottes are also a practical choice for tennis dresses.

For beach and bathing very smart women are wearing silk. The newest mode going is the little dressmaker suits fashioned whimsically of plain or printed silk crepes, silk shantungs and other novelty silks. Kind to the figure are they, being made in one piece effects with pleated or flared shorts. The most practical have matching jackets reaching just to the bottom of the suits as you see pictured to the right in the group. This model is of daisy-printed, dependably washable silk crepe. The shorts are pleated and the loose, matching swagger jacket has a youthful Peter Pan collar.

For the girl with a perfect figure there are also the silk lastex suits which fit the body like a glove and have touches of dressmaker detail at the bosom. The newest trick is to wear them with one's jewels. There is such a variety in silk bathing and beach suits this summer that you can have two or three entirely different types in your outing wardrobe.

Pajamas are a "must have" for a vacation outfit, whether they are elaborate models that must stay on the beach or in the cabana, or the womanlike strictly tailored types that can safely receive guests in your own home or go out to call informally at an intimate friend's. They are made in tailored silk linens, silk shantungs, novelty sports silks, silk crepes.

Bathing suits with halter bodices and wrap-around skirts made of print silks in gay peasant design are also very goodlooking, and add infinitely to the picturesque beach panorama.

The craze for prints increases rather than languishes. It seems to be prints for everything and instead of growing weary of them there is that in them that intrigues more and more as the season progresses. If the entire costume be not of print then fashion offers a compromise in the way of accessories of vivid silk print. Such accents as belt, triangle scarf and bag of colorful silk print enliven many costumes.

SAILOR SUITS

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

Fashions for girls are playing up nautical themes. It is said that "back to school" clothes will adopt such details as lacings and marine insignia. The sailor suit in navy and white of linen or light wool is an immediate favorite and will remain important throughout fall. The "gob" beret in white felt or pique with sprightly ribbon ends over the hair at back is ever so smart to wear with the new sailor-inspired dresses.

BRAIDED ELASTIC MAKES DANDY BELT

Golf is a game where enthusiasts are offered more accessories a season than can be squeezed into a dozen clubroom lockers. All are intended to improve a duffer's game, but most of them turn out to be gadgets that fail their purpose.

One really successful accessory, however, that will be very much in evidence on the golf course this summer, is a belt made of braided, silk-covered, elastic cord. The belt looks like one of the corded belts so popular this season for sports wear. The rubber cord supplies the extra "give" that every sportsman seeks, and makes for maximum playing comfort.

The belts come in the leading summer colors, including black and white combination, polar bear, marine blue and plain white.

Blue Jeans Sportswear Is Popular With Young Folks

Of particular interest to young people is the blue jeans sportswear worn by many of the debutantes. With these navy blue jeans are worn shirts of every shade popular this year, with contrasting ascots and scarves. A popular headdress is the halo in various colors and materials, which keeps the hair from blowing in the eyes, and is very attractive. For the very active amusements, sneakers are popular, with navy and white the predominant colors.

The tailored suit for week-end trips is much in evidence, as are culottes, tennis dresses and the highly practical three-piece dresses with shirts, shorts and skirts.

Quilt of Applique Is Popular; Easy to Do

PICNIC GROUNDS

Mr. Robert Holcombe, local manager of the Warrior Water Company, announces that his company has built a barbecue pit, with tables and benches on the property at the water plant in Montevallo.

The plan was designed and executed by the company in order to make the location a suitable and attractive place for outings, picnics, barbecues, etc., by any group or dinividuals who might be interested in using it.

The community will appreciate this action of the company, and no doubt the grounds will find a ready use at the hands of many who will enjoy an occasional outing there.

If you want to have a barbecue or picnic, see Bob Holcombe, and he will be glad to offer you the accommodations of the property.

THE NEW BRIDGE

Engineer Jack Burleson would not venture a positive statement for publication, but when asked Tuesday about opening the new bridge, he said: "If weather conditions do not upset our calculations, we may expect to be able to open the new bridge for traffic by the end of this week."

Mr. Burleson was kind enough to take the writer in his car Tuesday afternoon, and by a circuitous route managed, by some fancy turning and twisting, to get the machine on the bridge. He drove across it a couple of times, and we enjoyed the view immensely.

Still more do we agree with the advance expression of Dr. J. I. Reid, that this structure provides an impressive and creditable entrance into Montevallo.

DR. H. W. JAMES LEAVING MONTEVALLO

The many friends, neighbors, and associates of Dr. H. W. James in Montevallo and throughout Alabama, regret to learn that he has accepted a call that will take him away from us; but at the same time are gratified that his going away is a distinct promotion for him and a recognition of his abilities as an educator and a citizen.

When the next session opens September 8th, Dr. James will become president of the New Mexico State Teachers College at Silver City. He returned this week from a trip to New Mexico, and announced his acceptance of the position tendered him.

For the past thirteen years Dr. James has been director of the School of Education at Alabama College. In 1923, when he came here, the college had just begun to do degree work. The development of the college as a four year institute has been since that time. The standard of the school in teacher training has been earned during this period. While Dr. James would not claim responsibility for the accomplishments above mentioned, it is known, however, that he has initiated many of these accomplishments, and as Director of the School of Education, has had a most important part in the progress that has been made.

In his capacity with Alabama College, and through his contacts in educational channels he has become intimately acquainted with our educational system, and personally attached to educational leadership throughout the State.

As a citizen of Montevallo and of the State of Alabama, Dr. James has been actively engaged in many off-campus activities that mark him as a man who has made a lasting contribution to his community.

He has served as state chairman of the extension committee of the Alabama Association of colleges for the past six years, and has been elected for the coming year. He is retiring president of the State Association of Heads of Departments of Education.

He is past president of the Exchange Club of Montevallo, being instrumental in reviving the club by changing it to the Civic Club. He is a member of the public relations committee of the Alabama Education Association. He is a member of the Town Council of Montevallo. He is commander of Hendrick-Hudson Post of the American Legion. He is a member and past state education chairman of the Department of the American Legion of Alabama.

Montevallo commends Dr. James to his new position, to his new responsibilities, to the new friends he will make, with the full assurance that he will meet them with a zealous effort and ability to build for himself a great structure of usefulness among the educational forces of the State of New Mexico.

We regret to see him leave Montevallo and Alabama.

JOINT REUNION OF MESSER AND R. L. BLACK FAMILIES

On Sunday, July 26th, at the delightful home of Mr. and Mrs. R. L. Black, of Montevallo, a joint reunion of the R. L. Black family and the Messer families was held.

The members of the Black family present consisted of Mr. and Mrs. Black, their children, Mrs. Cutler Smith, and Mr. and Mrs. Claude Boone of Washington, D.C., Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Faucett of Northport, Ala., Mr. and Mrs. Aubrey Taylor of Clanton, Ala., and James Black of Montevallo. Those who were unable to attend were Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Price and little daughter, Nancy Lee, of Washington, D. C., Mr. and Mrs. Joseph B. Davis and little son, Bobby of Chicago, Ill., and Hollis O. Black of Washington, D .C.

Representing the immediate Messer family at this, their sixth family reunion, were: Mrs. M. T. Messer, the seventy-nine year old mother, of Wedowee, Ala., Mrs. Black's mother, two daughters and four sons, this being all of the family living except one daughter, Mrs. N. B. Burns, of Paudcah, Texas, who was unable to attend. The father, James F. Messer, and one daughter, Mrs. Frank C. Price, were the missing members.

The children and grandchildren attending the reunion in addition to the family of Mr. and Mrs. Black were: Mr. and Mrs. M. M. Guests began arriving on Friday, July 24th and continued arriving until Sunday. The Messer brothers thoroughly enjoyed challenging each other to match games of checkers, while the younger guests entertained themselves with music and various games.

The Sunday dinner was served in cafeteria style, permitting all members of the families to dine at the same time. During the afternoon pictures were taken of the entire crowd and separate families.

Every moment of the time was enjoyed from beginning to the end with each one taking advantage of the privilege of being together once more.

The Messers plan to have their next family reunion at the home of Mr. and Mrs. M. Messer of Columbus, Ga., the date to be during the summer of 1937.

A most enjoyable fishing trip was given by Mr. and Mrs. Aubrey Taylor of Clanton on July 28th, 29th and 30th, at the Taylor Camp on Coosa River, which is located about thirteen miles from Clanton. Those attending were the host and hostess, Mr. and Mrs. Aubrey Taylor, Mrs. R. L. Black and James Black of Montevallo, Mr. and Mrs. Claude Boone and Mrs. Cutler Smith of Washington, D. C., Mrs. Lewis Faucett of Northport, Ala., Miss Jimmie Messer of Jasper, Ala., and Robert James Glasscock of Montevallo.

State Capitol News

Montgomery.—Restored to full vigor and health, Gov. Bibb Graves will personally direct his legislative program for full school terms and adequate public health and welfare facilities.

This is the belief of his friends in the Legislature who have chatted with him during the past week. They declare the "little colonel" will not require the services of floor leaders, but that he will skilfully pilot the lawmakers from his own office.

All agree that the Legislature will be back on Goat Hill not later than Sept. 15. However, the Governor has refused to discuss plans for the special session with inquisitive newspapermen, answering their queries with indulgent, goodhumored smiles.

Nevertheless, several of his administrationists who've conferred with him say the date for the special session has been definitely set for mid-september, and that his call will include legalization of liquor and beer and either a one per cent gross receipt tax or special levies on natural gas, amusements and exported electric power.

"The leadership question can easily be solved by the Governor taking the helm," Rep. R. L. Goodwyn, of Montgomery, declared. "He has a majority in both the House and the Senate and I think the Governor's forceful and intelligent leadership will effect the desired results."

Rep. S. M. Blan, thinks the so-called "economy group" opposed to additional revenue for schools "have spent their money in futile foolery."

"They claim to have collected a 'war chest' of $50,000 to fight a sales tax though such a tax was never contemplated by Governor Graves. Part of that 'war chest' fund merely served to aid Mr. Jeff Beeland's premature gubernatorial campaign."

Senator Forney Stephens, of Oneonta, chairman of the Senate education committee, another recent visitor indicated he would revive his bill for reapportionment. He said he also would seek to tax property now escaping, expressing the belief that if this is done, no other new taxation would be necessary.

"I expect to reintroduce my bill requiring fire and theft insurance companies to file annual lists of insured property with the tax commission," he said. "I will add a provision to the original bill which was killed in a Senate committee last year, requiring all property owners to include in their assessments the amount of insurance carried on their real estate. Tax authorities have assured me that if we pass such a bill, no other source of taxation will be needed."

Meanwhile, the education department, the Parent-Teachers Congress and the Alabama Education Association have been conducting a vigorous campaign to raise more revenue for schools. They claim that about $3,800,000 is necessary to conduct a normal school term.

The following members of the legislature visited the capitol during the past week:

Senators, Stephens, of Oneonta; St. John, of Lawrence; Goldsmith, of Lowndes, Woodall of Elmore; Walton of Chambers; Riddle of Talladega; Locke, of Bibb; Kelley of Conecuh; Carlton, of Marengo; Parrish of Dale; Stoddard of Crenshaw; Dorsey of Lee; Mooneyham, of Montgomery and Chestnut, of Cherokee.

Representatives: McPhaul of Baldwin; Whigham of Barbour; Poole of Butler; Cox of Chilton; Devane of Choctaw; Wallace of Clarke; Rayburn of Cleburne; Braswell of Coffee; DeLoney of Colbert; Hendley of Covington; Hamner of Dallas; Tolbert of DeKalb; Bateman and Sanford of Elmore; Lusk of Etowah; Owen of Etowah; Calhoun of Houston; Arnold and Welch of Jefferson; Byars of Lawrence; Denson of Lee; Hill of Marion; Lee of Monroe; Sightler and Goodwyn of of Montgomery; Langdon of Pickens; Heflin of Randolph; Reid of Shelby; Buffington, of St. Clair; Miller of Sumter and Posey of Winston.

Dr. J. A. Keller, state Superintendent of education, announced $370,000 will be divided among Alabama public schools immediately. The fund was made available last week by Comptroller Charles Lee, on approval of the Governor.

The money was composed of $206,000 from the educational trust fund and $67,000 from the state 3-mill school levy.

About 200,000 noses were sprayed by public health doctors, private physicians and nurses to prevent infantile paralysis, according to an estimate by Dr. J. N. Baker, state health officer.

With the number of paralysis cases listed at 230 (note: figures subject to daily revision) and 14 deaths, health authorities in the state were busy combatting the epidemic of poliomiolitis with every possible resource, while at the same time endeavoring to prevent public alarm.

All military, school and religious meetings scheduled during July and August in the state have been indefintely postponed on advice of Dr. Baker.

"The preventive spray, composed of picric acid and alum was perfected by Dr. Leake of the U. S. Public Health Service," Dr. Baker stated. "No case of infantile paralysis has developed by a person who has received this preventive," he said.

With the task of prevention well under way, the state education department, through Dr. J. B. Hobdy, vocational director, announced that plans had been made to rehabilitate the "polio" children by giving them surgical treatment by the Crippled Childrens' Service, funds for which are provided under the National Social Security Act.

"When the incidence of the disease has abated," Dr. Hobdy said, "children who have been crippled or otherwise handicapped by it will be assembled at clinics where examinations will be made and hospitalization and treatment provided."

Vacancies Will Probably Be Filled Prior To Extra Session

Thirty days' notice must be given for elections to fill legislative vacancies in Alabama and as there are four to be filled the expectations are that before calling an extra session of the legislature Governor Bibb Graves will call four elections to fill the legislature vacancies and that would mean that an extra session cannot be started until the second week in September at the earliest.

The loss of Senator Shelby Fletcher in the Senate makes vacant the chairmanship of the most powerful committee in the Senate, the finance and taxation committee. Lieut. Gov. Thomas E. Knight will fill that vacancy when the state Senate is again called into session but so far there have been no rumors as to the probable successor of Senator Fletcher.

When Representative Clint Harrison of Marengo, was appointed to the Alabama Public Service Commission, the chairmanship of the powerful House ways and means committee was vacated. And in the case of Mr. Harrison's retirement the administration leadership in the House was also vacated.

Governor vs. Rumor

The second week in September is still being named by rumor as the probable date of an extra session. However, Gov. Graves will call the special session if one is called and he never follows rumor. He has not indicated to any person so far as the writer knows just what particular date the legislature will reconvene. He did say, however, that he was giving consideration to a special session.

Activity of the school interests indicates that they have an idea the legislature will be called into extra session. A propaganda bureau has been set up and it has been working strenuously for the last month or more. The more money and more tax advocates have been making every effort to make out a case for their trade. On the other hand anti-tax advocates have been propagandizing also and these anti-tax men have matched word for word and line for line the efforts of their opponents. It has been a campaign of propaganda so far. However, Gov. Graves has the facts and figures of the educational needs already in hand. He has had them in hand every day since he took office.

He will not be influenced in his program, if he calls an extra session, by the propaganda of either side but by the figures which are daily in hand at the office of the State Comptroller.

Wets Still Battling

From what can be learned it is very probable that county Democratic executive committees will nominate men or women to fill the four legislative vacancies . There will probably not be time for a Democratic primary and a general election also because such a course would require more than 60 days to get the vacancies filled.

In the meantime State stores and private profit advocates in the wet ranks are fighting a quiet battle for supremacy. From what the writer can gather the private profit advocates are in the lead. While the private profit advocates, or some of them, admit the State stores would turn more money into the treasury, they say that such a system would not give general satisfaction because it would add to the number of State employees and would not benefit owners of vacant buildings in the State or others who hope and expect to make profits from the sale of intoxicants.—Atticus Mullin in Montgomery Advertiser.

Spring Creek News

The recent copius rains have wrought wonders with drought baked crops. Cotton is shedding some but I hope enough will hang on to mature a fair crop. Early corn bids fair to make a normal yield. But hay has shown the greatest improvement. A few weeks ago it looked like hay would never do to mow again, but now it is fine. It has spread sideways and grown endways until it is fine All we need is fair weather and work and we will have plenty of hay. Then we have had ideal weather for germination of seed and growth of plants for fall gardens. The family who haven't a fall garden well on the way has slept away a fine opportunity.

One of our most energetic and resourceful citizens is fixing to leave us, Mr. A. T. Knowles. He has bought him a farm near Valley Grove and is building a five-room bungalow which he intends to electrify and fit with all modern conveniences. We are sorry to lose them but wish them happiness and success in his new home.

Miss Sarah Lee, who has undergone a serious operation in a Birmingham hospital, we are glad to say is reported as improving.

C. E. began at 7 o'clock p.m. Sunday by each committee chairman reading a written report of the committee's activities during July. Immediately afterwards went into rendering the program. Topic, "What Do I Owe My Government and What Does it Owe Me,"was ably discussed by Lawson Ingram, Mattie Frost, Beonica Ingram, Alva Nabors, Mary Sue Lee, and Mary Ramona Allen read the scripture responsively. Special music by Annie Laura and Mary Elizabeth Ingram. J. F. Allen talked on a Christian duty to obey the laws.

Terry and Cochrane Are Facing Crisis in Baseball Jobs

DEFINITELY Bill Terry and Mickey Cochrane now are in the midst of what higher class writers might term a crisis. Aside from their spot efforts to keep crippled and hard luck teams in the first division they also are undergoing tests which may determine whether it is worthwhile for them to continue in baseball.

Terry

Because each of them won a world championship early in his managerial career and so, immediately, was acclaimed as one of the greatest of all time pilots this view may require a bit of explaining. It involves putting the reverse on that old "Don't do as I do but as I say" bit of philosophy by which the youth of the nation once was entertained.

Terry possibly was the best first baseman who ever played the game and Cochrane holds similar high rating among the catchers. They took over their manager's jobs while still able to perform in sprightly fashion. They starred in their own right while their example undoubtedly inspired lesser teammates to reach hitherto (and since then) unthought-of heights.

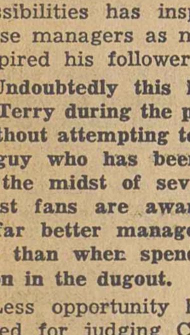
Now, when they are sorely tried by an assortment of the ailments which inevitably take toll of aging athletes, things do not add up the same. Reibers, Myatts, Leslies and such folk are hired men of average worth, but they simply do not possess the spark that makes Terrys and Cochranes. So, as has been apparent all season, the two managers immediately are beset by problems even more vexing than thyroids or sciatica while attempting to readjust their baseball lives.

If the law of averages operated properly there could be some compensation for all this. Blood streams, which formerly had to do double duty while generating both base blows and strategy, could be entirely at the service of deep thinking. In place of the line drives which once encouraged their championship ambitions the Tigers and the Giants could be inspired by daily strokes of managerial genius.

This, of course, would indicate a most sublime future but, unfortunately, neither Hoyle nor Hughie has much influence with the law of averages.

Both Bill and Mickey are men of action. They seem to function best, mentally as well as physically, while on their feet in the midst of heated action. Probably a proper appreciation of his own muscular possibilities has inspired each of these managers as much as it has inspired his followers.

Undoubtedly this has been true of Terry during the past two years. Without attempting to second guess a guy who has been trying hard in the midst of severe handicaps most fans are aware that he is a far better manager when playing than when spending an afternoon in the dugout.



Mickey Cochrane

Less opportunity has been provided for judging Cochrane as a dugout executive. Yet it is possible that the future may be even harder on him than on Terry. Mickey is an intensely nervous type—in some ways resembling Ty Cobb who failed as a manager. At least once during each of his best playing years when he could release pent-up emotions through direct actions he came close to just such a breakdown as finally overtook him this season. He also is excessively irked by players who cannot comport themselves according to his own high athletic standards.

During one inning at Yankee stadium recently I watched him. He made six trips from one end of the dugout to the other. He kneeled in front of the dugout five times. He sat down and immediately arose eight times.

There you have the question for the future. Will Cochrane wear himself out of the majors with worrying? Will Terry achieve the same results through disgust over the essential dumbness of his fellow men?

TIRES on those midget autos last only four miles during a race . . . Did the Giants pay $21 dividend on each share of stock last year? . . . Jockey Sonny Workman during his recent suspension improved his time upon the golf links where he is almost as good as he is in the saddle . . . Fortune tellers probably can improve their batting averages if they give Bob Pastor a high rating for 1937. The Washington Heights youngster is the most improved heavyweight of the year. . . . His coaches say that sixteen-year-old Bob Sandbach, kid brother of the Princeton star, will be even better than Ken.

If the president of the Phils had not vetoed the deal at the last minute a Frenchy Bordagaray-Johnny Moore swap would have been made in May . . . The Giants will operate the Jersey City club as a farm when an International league franchise is moved to Hagueville next season . . . Unless thoroughbred prices are upped considerably Colonel E. R. Bradley will not take his yearlings to the Saratoga sales next month. He still is annoyed at the low receipts obtained last August . . . Charley Gehringer and Billy Herman, the game's two best second basemen, share an easily understandable weakness. Ballplayers say they do not like to be slid into with spikes.

The U. S. G. A. is sadly perturbed because of rumors concerning four-ball tournaments and the auction pools which so often make them more than interesting to the performers. These pools—you buy tickets on teams you think are hot—often are worth from $1,000 to $3,000. That, so evil-tongued gents snicker, is enough sugar to bring the racketeers in so that they can arrange such "amateur" golf matches to suit their own high purposes . . Hun school, right there in the shadow of Princeton's famed Gothic towers, will have five regulars (Elverson, McNamara, Ober, Micheau and Shinn) on the Penn varsity next fall. . . . Don Lash, the runner, earns his way through college by mopping up floors in the dormitory at Indiana university . . . Ivy Wilson, the very good twenty-four-year-old girl athlete from the Mercury A. C., makes dolls' wigs when not winning 50-meter championships.

Landis Irks Scribe By Talking Golf

Judge Landis

A veteran reporter is very indignant because he had to wait fifteen minutes in Boston before getting some All-Star game information from Judge Landis. It seems that baseball's high commissioner was spending some time in entertaining his audience of club owners with blithesome comment concerning his golf scores.

Could it be true the New York racing commission now has planted dictaphones in the betting ring and other gossip juicy sections of local tracks? Or are naughty boys just blaspheming when they whisper that this cunning device, which was tried out last winter by Florida and Don Meade, produced a carload of worthless chitchat when secreted in the Aqueduct jockey room during the recent meeting?

There is more than a chance that the Ivy league, which now protects the more holy colleges from rude beatings in basketball and baseball, will also provide the same smooth gridiron guardianship in 1938 . . . Although he is a motorboat enthusiast, John D. Spreckels, millionaire horse owner from the West, believes in keeping aquatic sports in their proper place. He has no liking for the regattas which are becoming so popular with the regatta committees at too many Eastern racetracks . . . Another effort may be made next winter to put the Cards in Detroit and leave St. Louis as a one-club (American League variety) town . . . If Joe Louis can score a decisive victory over Al Ettore there need be little doubt about the Brown Bomber having the proper comeback ammunition.

Although he can take the wails of disappointed fans as well as he can give his money to Connie Mack, there is one rift in Tom Yawkey's serenity. The owner of the Red (and frequently) Socked Boston team has been hearing the whispers of his mates among the magnates. They refer to the youthful business man as a "Sap" and a "Sucker," which is rather hard to take considering all he has done for them . . . Each member of that great Husky crew is a native of the state of Washington, is working his way through college and never handled a racing sweep until his freshman year . . . Winsett, the big outfielder listed for the Dodgers, is a good hitter. That is, he is until the pitchers start throwing too close to him.

A Finnish vapor bath has been installed in the Olympic village at the request of Helsingfors . . . The bath was placed on the edge of a lake because the Finns like to cool off with a cold plunge after the baths . . . Paul Waner of the Pirates still uses a bat, now taped half its length to keep it from falling apart, that he borrowed during the 1934 All-Star game in New York.

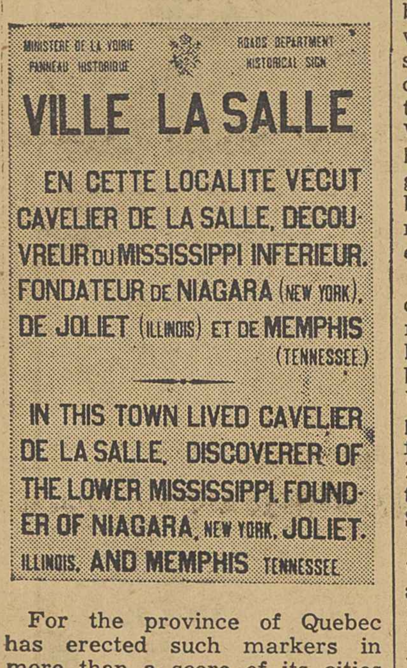
Sons of Quebec Who "Fathered" American Cities

BY ELMO SCOTT WATSON

AMERICAN visitors to Quebec this summer are due to learn some facts about the history of their own country of which they probably have never before been aware. At least, they will if their journeying happens to take them through certain cities, towns and villages on highways connecting these communities with Montreal and the City of Quebec and the main trunk roads in Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, New York and the Middle West.

At the entrance to these municipalities they will see signposts bearing plaques similar to this:



MINISTERE DE LA VOIRIE
PANNEAU HISTORIQUE
ROADS DEPARTMENT
HISTORICAL SIGN

VILLE LA SALLE

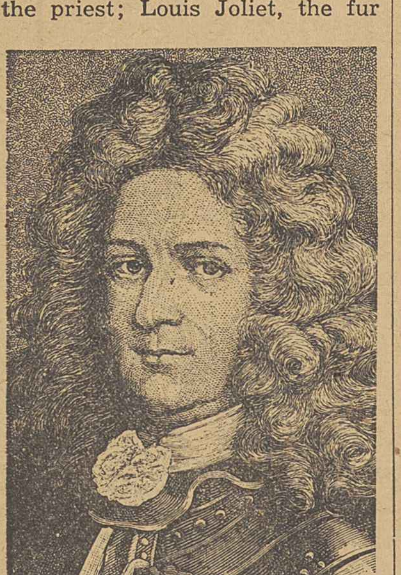
EN CETTE LOCALITE VECUT CAVELIER DE LA SALLE, DECOUVREUR DU MISSISSIPPI INFERIEUR. FONDATEUR DE NIAGARA (NEW YORK), DE JOLIET (ILLINOIS) ET DE MEMPHIS (TENNESSEE.)

IN THIS TOWN LIVED CAVELIER DE LA SALLE, DISCOVERER OF THE LOWER MISSISSIPPI, FOUNDER OF NIAGARA, NEW YORK, JOLIET, ILLINOIS, AND MEMPHIS TENNESSEE

For the province of Quebec has erected such markers in more than a score of its cities and towns. It has done this to commemorate the deeds of some of its "sons who made good in foreign parts" and to draw the attention of Americans to the historical link between it and their country through these men. The list of them is truly an impressive one. It includes explorers, fur traders, churchmen, soldiers and civil officers who had a leading part in the development of regions now embraced in nearly half of the states of the Union. Moreover, many of these "native sons" of Quebec "fathered" some of our most important cities, situated in all parts of the United States from New York to California 6and from Minnesota to Louisiana.

Outstanding in this list is the name of Cavelier de La Salle, who has the distinction of being the "founder" of no less than three American cities—Niagara, N. Y.; Joliet, Ill., and Memphis, Tenn. Another city in Illinois bears his name, as does the county in which it is located, and there is a La Salle county in Texas and a La Salle parish in Louisiana to commemorate the deeds of this intrepid explorer in the country where the last scenes in the drama of his life were enacted. Although La Salle was born in France, Ville La Salle was his "home town" and there the commemorative marker has been erected.

The City of Quebec, the first settlement in the province, founded by Samuel de Champlain (whose name is perpetuated in the beautiful lake in northern New York) was the home town of three other explorers in what is now the United States. They were Father Marquette, the priest; Louis Joliet, the fur trader, and an almost "forgotten man" of our early history whose explorations preceded those of the other two by 40 years. He was Jean Nicolet, discoverer of Lake Michigan, the first white explorer of the present state of Michigan, the first white man to set foot in what is now Wisconsin and by some historians believed to be the first white man to see the prairies of Illinois and the present site of Chicago.



SIEUR D'IBERVILLE

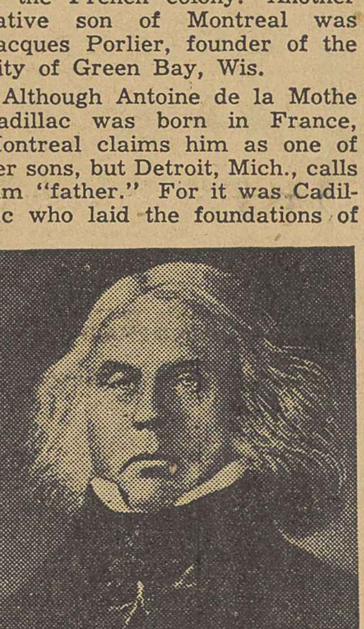
Illinois has a city named for Joliet; both Wisconsin and Michigan have Marquette counties, and the latter has a city named for the Jesuit priest. But neither state has thus honored Jean Nicolet. The province of Quebec, however, has done better by him—with both a county and a town bearing his name.

Out in Utah is a city which bears the name of a man who was born in the City of Quebec. It is the City of Ogden which honors Peter Skene Ogden, son of a New York Loyalist, who fled to Canada during the Revolution and who became one of the leading magistrates of the province. His son joined the Hudson's Bay company at an early age and as one of its factors played an important part in the early history of the fur trade in the Great West.

One of his contemporaries in this period was another Quebec-born boy, Dr. John McLoughlin, who also entered the H. B. C. service, established Fort Vancouver on the Columbia, reigned there as the "Emperor of the West" and has come down in history as the "Father of Oregon." Riviere-du-Loup was his birthplace and there the commemorative plaque has been erected.

Like the City of Quebec, that other Canadian metropolis, Montreal, was also the birthplace or home town of a number of notables in the early history of the United States. It was the birthplace of two brothers destined for fame by their exploits in the Lower Mississippi valley. One of them was Pierre le Moyne, Sieur D'Iberville, born there in 1661, who became the founder of the French colony of Louisiana and later founder of the City of Mobile, Ala. The other was Jean Baptiste le Moyne, Sieur Bienville, born in 1680, who became the founder of the City of New Orleans and of Biloxi, Miss. As governor of the colony which his brother founded, Bienville established the "code noir" which remained in force until the purchase of Louisiana by the United States and much of it was incorporated in the law of the American state which bears the name of the French colony. Another native son of Montreal was Jacques Porlier, founder of the City of Green Bay, Wis.

Although Antoine de la Mothe Cadillac was born in France, Montreal claims him as one of her sons, but Detroit, Mich., calls him "father." For it was Cadillac who laid the foundations of that city in 1701. At one time also he was commander at Fort Michilimackinac (on the present Mackinac Island, Mich.) and later he became governor of Louisiana. Another of Cadillac's connections with American history lies in the fact that in 1691 he was made lord of Bouagnat and Mount Desert, Maine, and nearly a century later the commonwealth of Massachusetts confirmed to his granddaughter, Mme. Gregoire, so much of Mount Desert Island as was not already granted to others.



DR. JOHN McLOUGHLIN

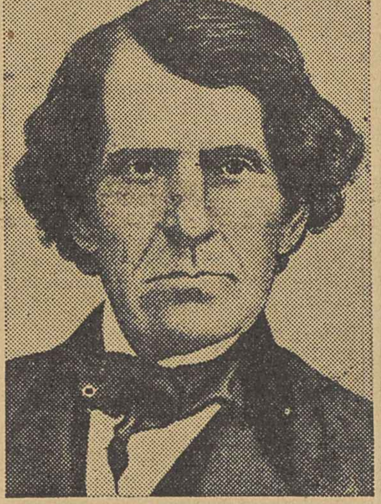
Another French-born "son of Montreal" was Daniel Greysolon Du Lhut, leader of a famous band of "coureurs du bois," fur trader and explorer of the Upper Mississippi, whose name is perpetuated in the modern city of Duluth, Minn. Two other explorers whose birthplaces are marked by commemorative plaques are La Verendrye, first white man in Wyoming and discoverer of the Big Horn mountains, who was born at Trois-Riviere (Three Rivers) and Nicolas Perrot, who lived at Becancour.

At the entrance of the village of Contrecoeur in Quebec stands a signpost which tells the visitor that here was born Captain Contrecoeur, "who erected a fort where now stands the city of Pittsburgh, Pa." But that is not his only claim to fame. For it was this same captain, who, as commandant of Fort Duquesne, sent out the force of French and Indians, to try to delay the advance of General Braddock and who won that amazing victory over the superior force of British redcoats and Colonials one hot summer day in 1755.

Visit the little town of Beaumont and the marker will tell you that here lived Jean Baptist Bissot, Sieur de Vincennes. He was not only a relative of Joliet, the explorer, but he was also an explorer in his own right. Moreover he was a trusted lieutenant of Cadillac and a renowned fighter of the Indian enemies of the French until he perished at the stake in a Chickasaw village in 1736. Before that time, however, he had built a trading post and earth fort on the present site of an Indian city which now bears his name.

To this little town of Vincennes in 1789 came a young man who was a native of St. Antoine on the Richelieu river in the province of Quebec and during the next few years his name became famous in the adjoining territory of Illinois. It was Pierre Menard. He was a friend of Francisco Vigo, the Italian trader who had been such an aid to George Rogers Clark in the conquest of Vincennes ten years earlier and he accompanied Vigo on a trip east to Carlisle, Pa., where they had an interview with George Washington in regard to a plan for defense of the western frontier.

A few years later Menard moved to Kaskaskia, Ill., the oldest town in the Mississippi valley, and from that time on he played an increasingly important part in the development of the territory. When Illinois became a state he was its first lieutenant-governor and he also was one of the founders in St. Louis of the famous Missouri Fur company.



NOEL LE VASSEUR

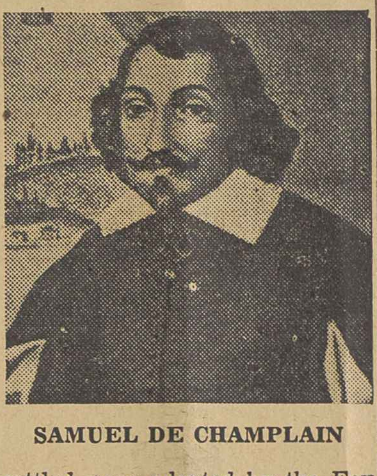
Almost as famous as Pierre Menard was his nephew, Michel Menard, born at St. Denis on the Richelieu in 1805. He became a fur trader in the Old Northwest at the age of sixteen, worked for his uncle in Illinois and Missouri and became so attached to the Indian mode of life that he joined a band of Shawnees, who later made him their chief. He went to Texas in 1833, became a member of the convention that declared the independence of the Lone Star republic 100 years ago and was the founder of the present city of Galveston.

It seems a far cry from such bustling modern cities as Milwaukee and Superior, Wis.; Ogdensburg, N. Y.; Sault Ste. Marie, Mich.; Dubuque, Iowa; St. Paul, Minn., and Kankakee, Ill., to the quiet little villages and towns in Quebec, but the visitor to the latter will find in the plaques which are erected there the link between them.

At Mascouche is one which tells him that here lived Repentigny, founder of Sault Ste. Marie; at Oka is one which records the fact that it was the home of Francois Picquet, who founded Ogdensburg; at Berthier was born J. B. Faribault, founder of Kankakee, and St. Michel d'Yamaska was the birthplace of J. B. Lefebre, who founded Superior.

Vital Guerin, a pious churchman who was born at St. Remi de Napierville, founded a mission, which he called St. Pauls, on the Upper Mississippi. Today the capital of Minnesota, its name shortened to St. Paul, occupies that site and a great deal more. In 1762 in the little town of St. Pierre-les-Becquets a boy was born to whom was given the name of Julien Dubuque. At an early age he left his native land and made his way through savage tribes to Prairie du Chien in far-away Wisconsin where he settled, was adopted by the Fox Indians and married a girl of that tribe. He began working the lead mines on the west bank of the Great River and today both the city of Dubuque, Iowa, which grew up from that mining camp, and a village named Julien, a short distance away, perpetuate his fame.

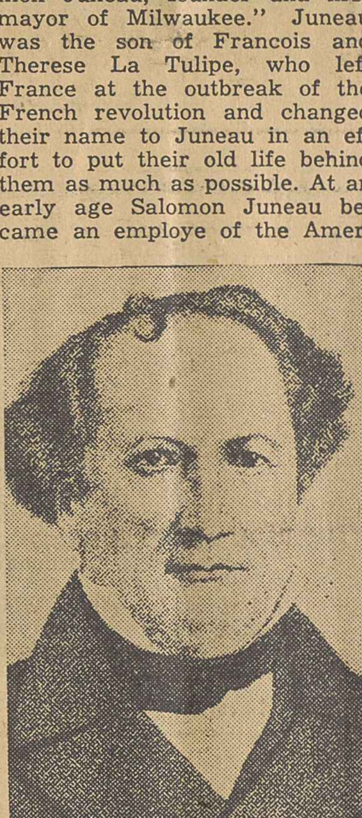
PIERRE MENARD



SAMUEL DE CHAMPLAIN

Another native of St. Michel was Noel Le Vasseur, who at the age of seventeen went West in company with 60 other adventurous youths, joined up with a certain Rocheblave (who was later the last governor of the territory of Illinois under British rule) and became a fur trader in the employ of John Jacob Astor. He roamed the new state of Illinois and became the founder of the present town of Bourbonnais, Ill. (Incidentally, this town was named for Francois Bourbonnais, and Beauharnois, the town of his birth, has a plaque commemorating that fact.) Le Vasseur became a great favorite of the Indians and his influence with them was so great that he was appointed United States agent to supervise the removal of some of the tribes from Illinois to Iowa. Resenting their forced departure from their homeland, the Indians threatened to stage an uprising and only the forceful character of Le Vasseur prevented a serious outbreak of hostilities. Because of this feat he has been called a "second William Penn."

In the town of L'Asumption stands a marker recording the fact that "here was born Salomon Juneau, founder and first mayor of Milwaukee." Juneau was the son of Francois and Therese La Tulipe, who left France at the outbreak of the French revolution and changed their name to Juneau in an effort to put their old life behind them as much as possible. At an early age Salomon Juneau became an employe of the American Fur company in Wisconsin and in 1818 settled on the present site of Milwaukee as agent for the A. F. C. Two years later he married and he and his wife became the first permanent white settlers in Milwaukee. He was the first postmaster of the new town, the first president when it became a village in 1837, and when it was made a city in 1846 he became its first mayor.



SALOMON JUNEAU

Among the other towns in Quebec where commemorative markers have been erected are the following: St. Pierre de Montagny, birthplace of Norbert Blanchet, first bishop of Oregon; St. Henri-de-Lauzon, birthplace of Louis Blanchette, founder of St. Charles, Mo.; Ste. Anne-des-Plaines, birthplace of Prudent Beaudry, a pioneer and a mayor of Los Angeles, Calif., and Louiseville, birthplace of Benjamin Gervais, founder of Gervais, Minn.

And last but not least is the little town of Maskinonge, where was born Francois Xavier Aubry, the man who won enduring fame as one of the greatest long distance riders in the history of the West. In 1846 Aubry rode from Santa Fe, N. M., to Independence, Mo., a distance of 800 miles, in eight days and ten hours, and two years later, to win a bet of $1,000, he cut down that time to six days! Aubry City, Ariz., and Aubry City, Colo., perpetuate the name of this great frontiersman.

Clean Premises, Get Rid of Flies

Eliminate Breeding Place, First Step in Driving Away Pest.

By JOHN A. AREY, Extension Specialist, North Carolina State College.
—WNU Service.

One female fly allowed to live and breed may leave millions of descendants by fall. Don't give them a chance to breed.

Flies are not only carriers of filth and disease, but they are a constant source of annoyance to cattle and livestock. Cows will not give as much milk if continually harassed by flies.

The first step in getting rid of this nuisance is to eliminate breeding places. Manure from stables should be removed daily, if possible.

When practical, it is best to haul the manure direct to the fields where it can be spread over the land. Where this is impractical, at least try not to leave large piles of manure lying around for many days at a time.

Clean up the premises of the house and barnyard. Any filth left exposed will serve as a breeding place for flies.

With the best of care, however, it will be impossible to destroy all flies in the larvae stage. Therefore, it is advisable to use traps, poisons and sprays in fighting this pest.

A good poison can be made by mixing three quarts of skim milk with one-fourth quart of formaldehyde and one-fourth quart of molasses. Place the mixture in shallow containers where the flies are, but where animals and poultry cannot get at it.

A good spray is very effective. Follow the directions given, and good results will be obtained.

Horses Riding in Truck Should Face the Right

When horses are loaded crosswise into an open motortruck they are safer if their heads are toward the outside of the road. Reports to the United States Department of Agriculture tell of horses seriously injured by passing traffic—often another truck—when they are loaded with heads toward the center of the road. The danger is greatest at night.

A common practice when hauling horses in open trucks is to load them half and half, that is, crosswise with every other head toward the center of the road. The length of the average horse from tail to breast is about the same as the width of the average live stock truck. Although horses are loaded conveniently and compactly in this fashion, with the head and neck extended over the side of the truck, it is safer to load them so that all face the outside of the road.

In any event, says the bureau of animal industry, horses in a motor truck should have good footing and be so secured that they are not upset by sudden stops and starts.

Flapping Canvases

A binder canvas usually fails first at the flap, due largely to whipping on the rollers. When flaps are badly worn, straw gets under them and wraps around the rollers. Much of this trouble can be avoided, says Wallaces' Farmer, by sewing shoestrings to the free end of the flap and tying the ends to the canvas slat ahead. This will hold the flap closed at all times. If the flap has already worn out, cut a new one from a discarded canvas, turn and hem one edge, and then tack the other edge under the last slat, or, better, under the last two slats.

Rotation in Pastures

Pasture experiments in Great Britain during the last few years indicate that better results can be secured from a rotation in pastures, and that while there are some lands which are continuously in grass, writes an agriculturist in the Montreal Herald, yet in many cases the laying down of land to permanent pasture is not regarded as good a system of farming as the plowing up of these pastures occasionally and establishing a rotation of crops including grass.

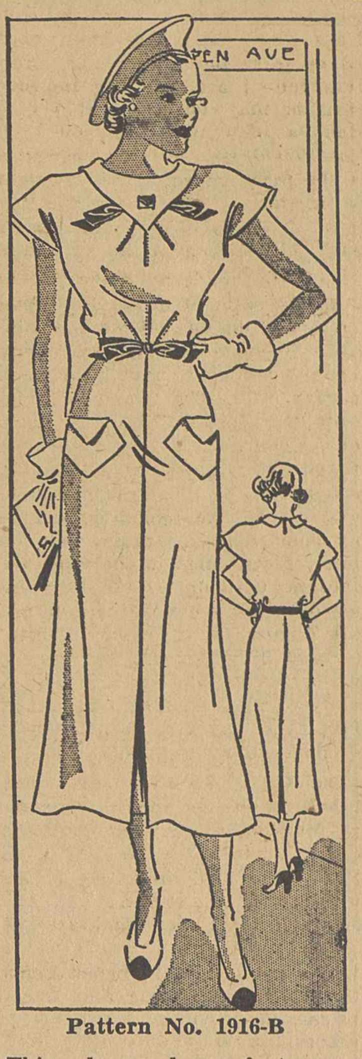
Peculiarities of Cucumbers

Cucumbers can be grown on almost any kind of soil, although they like sandy loams best. They like a soil that is well drained but one that holds moisture. Owing to diseases, a number of which attack cucumbers such as mosaic and bacterial wilt, a long-time rotation should be practiced for best results, says the Missouri Farmer, and they will do best on land where vine crops have not been grown during four years previous to their planting.

Weeds Here to Stay

Weeds, says a Northwestern university botanist, are here to stay. Prof. Oliver Duggins, after a study of 100 common American weed types, reached these conclusions: Deep roots enable weeds to survive cold winters; they can grow in a wide range of soils; they have long flowering periods and efficient methods of distributing seeds; they drive out neighboring plants, and they are indifferent to climatic conditions.

Captivating Daytime Frock



Pattern No. 1916-B

This clever dress features a flattering yoke which dips to a point in front and is equipped with twin slashes a few inches below the neckline to accommodate a ribbon bow of any color you wish to use. Most women like several different ones to which they match their accessories. Radiating tucks at the yoke and waist contribute a smooth fit and flattering effect, while center seams in front and back terminate in two kick pleats for reserved fullness where it will do the most good. The pointed pockets with shaped turned over flaps are novel. You'll want to make more than one dress, because the pattern is so easy to follow and the fabrics so numerous to choose from. How about seersucker, novelty cotton, linen, crash or silk.

Through Panama Canal

If a ship passes through the Panama canal without delay it will take from ten to twelve hours. Of this time three hours are taken up lifting and lowering the ship through the locks. The locks are 110 feet wide and 1,000 feet long. The airplane carrier Saratoga can get through the canal, but with considerable difficulty, as it has only two feet clearance on either side, being 106 feet wide.—Detroit News.

Afflicted Children To Get Aid From State and Nation

The plan of administration of the Crippled Children's Service of the National Social Security Act by the State Department of Education of Alabama offers comfort and encouragement to parents of children afflicted with infantile paralysis. When the ravages of the diseases have abated, these children will be assembled at clinics, approved by the State Health Department, where examinations will be made and hospitalization treatment provided for through the Crippled Children's Service of the Department of Education.

When all has been done to physically restore the crippled children, then the rehabilitation staff of that Department will plan courses in vocational guidance, followed by vocational training, placement in employment and superivision of their work when employed for a period of one year. This activity will make for economic independence for those children who are physically handicapped because of crippled conditions resulting from the present attack of poliomylitis. The Federal Government and the State of Alabama have planned well in this connection, and the State's Crippled Children's Service which has been in operation for ten years prior to the passage of the Social Security Act ,must of necessity be amplified.

Superintendent Keller, who has first responsibility for this program has just issued to the general public a letter, in which he calls to their attention the fact that the State Department of Education through the Division of Vocational Education maintains this service for crippled children and vocational training for crippled adults. The above two services are embraced in the National Social Security Act and the State Department of Education is designated by law as the official agency for their administration. Federal funds are available to Alabama when matched by state public funds.

The State Superintendent of Education is authorized by law to pay out all local funds for purposes only for which donations are made. Recent information from Washington indicates that, due to the present epidemic of infantile paralysis in the State, additional federal funds may be available for Alabama if matched by funds made available for Children's Service of the State Department of Education, the official state agency.

Dr. Keller's letter advises any individual, club, or organization, making contributions for assistance to children made crippled during the present epidemic, or other crippled children, to make the check for same payable to the State Crippled Children's Service, thereby making it possible for all private funds contributed to bring to the State an equal amount of federal funds.

The Division of Vocational Education through its field workers is responsible for seeing that the most urgent cases of crippled children are given first attention. Every dollar of local funds contributed will be held and will be spent on hospitalization and treatment for the children. Not one cent will go to overhead cost for administering the program .

Attention is called to the fact that the Department of Education will soon be confronted with the problem of arranging for hospitalization and treatment of a large number of children left lame and badly crippled from this dreadful disease. To meet this emergency, the State Government is paying only 28.58 per cent of the appropriation for cripple children clinic service.

People in the State should rally to this noble cause and do their share in providing for these unfortunate victims to get the best medical, surgical and after care possible, especially since it is very likely the Federal Government will provide an additional grant to the State to match every dollar made available to the Crippled Children's Service for this emergency.

A close cooperative working agreement is in effect between the State Department of Education, the State Health Department, and the State Department of Public Welfare. The State Crippled Children's Service is cooperating in every way possible with the Public Health Service in its present fight against this disease.

"Rhythm On The Range" At Strand This Week

The billing of the hit picture at the Strand Theatre Sunday and Monday tells an eloquent story.

"Rhythm on the Range" is announced as featuring Bing Crosby, Bob Burns and Frances Farmer. Two of the three top names are representatives of radio, and behind them can be seen a growing union of radio with the movies.

On one side, many a radio company is looking to Hollywood for program talent; on the other, Hollywood is fast discovering radio as a source of ever-fresh star material.

Until recently, the vaudeville circuits and the legitimate stage have been the main supply of new film faces. Today, however, the microphone route is becoming the most popular . As an indication of this fact, it might be mentioned that Burns himself was a vaudeville trouper and film player before he hit the air waves, but he had to broadcast before Hollywood "found" him.

New Talent Source

Picture people were beginning to wonder about future talent until they thought of radio . With legitimate vaudeville on the down-swing, there seemed no source for future stars to match the success of such circuit graduates as W .C. Fields. The ranks of the troupers were growing thinner and thinner. Radio was at first overlooked because the first radio comics to "go Hollywood" failed to click.

Crosby was one of the outstanding proofs to the film colony that the only thing needed to reach the ready-made audience of air fans was to choose the right radio performers; he was signed essentially as a radio personality for the first Paramount "The Big Broadcast." His click was so decided that he has been under film contract ever since.

Others Successful

Others to make the transition successfully have included Burns and Allen, Joe Penner, and — at latest report — Jack Benny, to have the leading role in Paramount's "Big Broadcast in 1937."

Bob Burns lived a short distance from the Paramount studio in Hollywood before he went to New York, crashed the air, blew his way to fame on his bazooka, and clinched a contract with Paramount He makes his bow in "Rhythm on the Range," and is expected to be one of the big attractions of the later "Big Broadcast."

Ace Tappers Have Leads In Musical

A gay, romantic musical, as fast-stepping as the "swing tunes" it features, is presented in "Three Cheers for Love," Paramount show with Eleanore Whitney and Robert Cummings in leading roles coming Tuesday to the Strand Theatre .

Miss Whitney and Cummings are aided by a cast of talented performers, including Louis DaPron and Olympe Brandna, ace dancers; William Frawley and Roscoe Karns in comedy roles; Veda Ann Borg, John Halliday, Elizabeth Patterson, Grace Bradley and Billy Lee.

Eleanore is the pep-filled ,tap-dancing daughter of Halliday, a Hollywood movie producer . Miss Borg, her step-mother, sends her to a finishing school which she believes ultra-correct.

The school, however, has been about to close. Miss Patterson, headmistress and a former vaudeville star, is persuaded by Frawley, an actor out of a job, to keep it open for the one prospective pupil. Frawley's plan is to star Eleanore in a "school show," invite her father, and land Hollywood contracts for himself and his whole troupe.

The vaudeville performers go into action; chorus girls pose as students, actors pose as professors. Eleanore, arrived at the schools, proceeds to fall in love with Cummings, a song writer who is "Professor of Music" in the plot.

Cummings, Miss Whitney, Miss Bradna and DaPron introduce several new dances in the musical, among them the sensational ballroom "Swim-Along."

Do you know the great shortage of college funds last year was because their money is not earmarked?

Educators say the present shortage can mean only the destruction of the school system.

Bette Davis and Warren William Coming to Strand

With Bette Davis, winner of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences awarded for being the best film actress of 1936, and Warren William in the stellar roles, "Satan Met a Lady," a Warner Bros. picture, is scheduled as the feature attraction at the Strand Theatre on Thursday and Friday of this week.

It is a riotous yet intensely gripping mixture of love and intrigue, concocted by that master of fiction, Dashiell Hammett, author of "The Thin Man."

Stamped with the earmark of humorous sophistication that characterizes the Hammett mystery plays, yet starkly dramatic throughout, the story revolves about the attempt of a band of crooks to get possession of an ivory trumpet presumed to have belonged to Roland, the legendary hero of French history, and to be filled with a fabulous fortune in jewels.

The talented cast also includes Alison Skipworth ,Arthur Treacher, Winifred Shaw, Marie Wilson and Porter Hall.

Miss Davis has the role of an unscrupulous woman of the world, a Lucrezia Borgia sort of charactor, who uses her many lovers as cats' paws in her greed for wealth and her desire to obtain the trumpet of jewels. In fact, she is not at all above committing murder in her mad quest.

She double crosses the other members of the band of crooks and finally engages a private detective firm to shadow one of her lovers and fellow conspirators, in order to get him out of the way and throw the blame on the detectives.

Both Hall, the partner of William in the detective agency, and the lover are found mysteriously slain that night. Later, there is still another man murdered while William is nearly bumped off with a blackjack.

William's role is that of a man of few scruples and less morals, a devil with the women who takes advantage of the fact that he is personally attractive to the gentler sex to work his way into their confidence and find their secrets which he uses to a monetary advantage. But he does solve the murder mysteries which have stumped the police, in order to save his own hide, and then turns one of the girls he has made love to over to the police. But he carries out all his deviltry in a humorous vein which brings as much laughter as thrills.

Treacher is another member of the band of crooks trying to get hold of the trumpet, a humorous English adventurer in league with Madame Barabbas, a woman old and wise in crime and chief of the band, a part played by Alison Skipworth.

Miss Wilson has the role of a dumb secretary to William, very much in love with him. Miss Shaw plays the role of William's former sweetheart, married to his partner but still in love with him.

Maynard Holmes is a gigantic, baby face killer, while others in the cast include Olin Howland and Charles Wilson, police officers, and Barbara Blane, a dancing girl, William Dieterle directed the picture from the screen play by Brown Holmes.

The first step toward the construction of Montevallo's new $52,000 postoffice was taken last Saturday, August 1, when an engineer planted the first stake in the lot, from which to lay off measurements for excavation for the foundations and basement. Actual work on the building will begin August 10.

Dr. Keller Delivers Strong Radio Appeal For Education

I come to you to plead the cause of the 665,000 school children of Alabama. A civilization can be measured by its attitude toward childhood and youth. The civilization that adopts a policy of self-indulgence without a thought of the future, loses its soul and signs its own death warrant. It is the unwritten law of nature that the parent shall give his food, his labor, and even his life, if need be, for his offspring. Even the birds of the air and the animals of the woods recognize this law. Human civilization itself is based upon it and so I have no fear that in the great State of Alabama the cries of childhood will fall upon deaf ears and closed minds

Recently our hearts have been filled with terrior because of an epidemic of that terrible disease, infantile paralysis. Extraordinary measures have been taken to stamp it out. The protection of the lives and bodies of our children has been made the first order of the day. War has been declared on this dreaded disease. Our Health Department has mobilized its forces doctors and scientists have been called in, all preventive measures possible have been instituted, and all the plans of the adult world world which might endanger our children hae been called off. We love our crildren in Alabama. I don't believe there is a person within the hearing of my voice but who would change the whole course of his life rather than kill or cripple a child.

But the sins of omission are greater than the sins of commission in this life. No, we wouldn't cripple the body of a child because we can see the horror of it. But we do cripple his mind and his soul because we know not what we do. Less than 200 children have been afflicted by the present infantile paralysis epidemic, and justly and righteously we have girded on our armor and attacked the enemy on every front. But the minds and the futures of hundreds of thousands of our school children have also been crippled this same year and we have done nothing about it as yet!

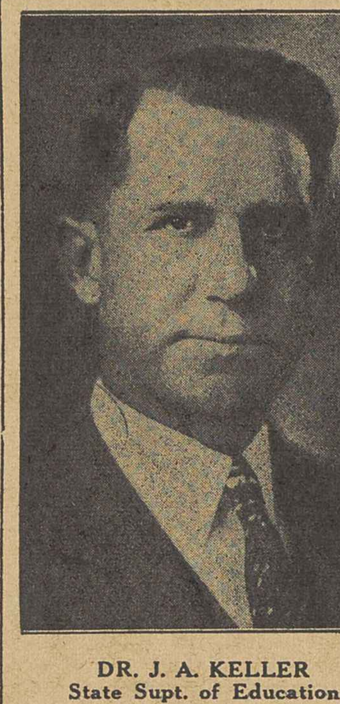
Gone is a year of eternity,
Gone is a year of hope and prayer,
Gone is our youth but we have our gold.”

That is something to exult about, isn't it? Disillusioned youth being denied its rightful chance to a respectable educational offering and being sent out into the world to compete in an unequal battle with boys and girls who have had a chance! Schools closed with the shortest terms in the United States in over fifty counties in the State and the outlook still blacker for next year! Crying economy and spending $2,000,000 more for tobacco than for elementary and high schools. All good citizens believe in economy in government, but there is no economy in destruction. There is no economy in a short school term with no promotion at all, or promotion based on a poor foundation which will result in failure in later years. The so-called “economy tax” has about hacked away the very foundation of the Alabama public school system. “Spare the dollar” has been preached over our State in reference to our educational system until many believe that it is a worthy slogan and do not realize that what they are really preaching is “spare the dollar and spoil the school or spare the dollar and handicap the child.” This slogan can be restated a number of ways. Carried to its logical conclusion it is simply the doctrine of personal selfishness. Spend less on our children and more on ourselves, spend less on our children and more on automobiles, spend less on our children and more on tobacco, etc. It is a well known fact that we are already spending in Alabama almost three times as much on gasoline alone as we are on public elementary and high schools.



DR. J. A. KELLER
State Supt. of Education

But the public is confused. I don't believe the people of Alabama really want to neglect their children. So many conflicting reports have been spread abroad the State that the public does not know what to believe. What are the real facts about education in Alabama? At the risk of boring you with figures I am going to review for you a few of the outstanding facts.

The simple truth is this: The total revenue receipts of public education, including elementary and high schools, institutions of higher learning, and miscellaneous educational agencies from state and local sources (excluding college fees) in 1929-30 were $23,325,000 and are only $16,320,000 in 1935-36. Thus public education has over $7,000,000 less money to operate on this year than it had in 1929-30. Although education has lost about one-third of its revenue since 1929-30, the average daily attendance of the elementary and high schools has increasel 11 per cent, and enrollment of the colleges has increased almost 30 per cent.

From what source has the revenue for public education decreased? The decrease in revenue has been great from both state and local sources. The public elementary and high schools and higher institutions of learning are receiving this year approximately $3,000,000 less money from the State than in 1929-30. On the other hand, the elementary and high schools are receiving approximately $4,000,000 less from local sources than in 1929-30. Almost $2,600,000 of this

We'll All Live Underground In 2036, Says H. G. Wells

The visitor to our shores in 2055 will be spared the eternal query: “How do you like our skyline?”

For by that distant day, according to the celluloid prognostications of Mr. H. G. Wells, whose “Things To Come,” will make its appearance at the Strand Theatre Thursday and Friday our skyline will have vanished like snows of yesteryear. As a matter of fact, visitors will have to crane their necks down to view the architectural wonders of our city, which will have removed itself to an enormous cavern under the earth.

A birds-eye view of this marvelous city of the future, as depicted in this breath-taking Alexander Korda production, reveals very little human activity of any sort on the earth's surface — a few low-flying planes, perhaps, a few gardeners working on wide sweeping terraces, a few occupied buildings of unfamiliar architecture. But there is a great arched highway along which flows a continuous noiseless traffic of streamlined vehicles, coming and going unendingly through a great vent. They are entering and leaving the underground city.

Shall we enter one of these strange vehicles and get a closeup of the great city? The streets are laid out in a style which we today might call “modern,” and are so supplied with plants and blooms and decorative fountains that they give the effect of a great park.

The houses are of glass, roomy but not large, with gracefully curved domes and no windows. Yet the rooms, like the underground city itself, are flooded with brilliant sunshine. The secret is this: they generate their own sunlight.

And the living room of the future, how will that look? According to Mr. Well's vision, it will be innocent of pillars or right angle joints. There are plants and a large center fountain with playing water. Wall decorations are simple and few, the outstanding one being a moving frieze, illustrated with slowly moving pictures of clouds, trees, and so forth. The furniture, made chiefly of a glass composition, combines beauty with utility.

MONTEVALLO DEFEATED BOOTHTON NINE TO THREE

The Montevallo team defeated Boothton last Thursday afternoon in an interesting game that was featured by good pitching, safe hitting, and wild throwing. The score was 9 to 3.

Hartley, pitching for Montevallo, was the outstanding player of the game. He went the entire nine innings, smooth and steady, chalking up 17 strikeouts, and allowing his opponents only four hits. Hartley had excellent support in the backstopping of catcher Eiland.

Boothton's batteries were Sherrod, Lawley and Sherrod, pitchers and Henderson, catcher.

The new residence of Mr. and Mrs. Ashley Jeter is now being constructed near the home of Mr. and Mrs. M. P. Jeter.

Worth-while Suggestion For Better Telegraph Service

The Times commends the following communication of Mr. J. R. Simpson to the consideration of the citizens of Montevallo. Mr. Simpson has no personal interest in the proposal, but is actuated solely by what is obviously one of the outstanding needs of the Town of Montevallo. We deserve better telegraph facilities and would support it adequately. Let us take the suggestion of Mr. Simpson and survey the question completely.

Editor Montevallo Times:

The town of Montevallo, with a permanent population of approximately 1,500, a transient population of an additional thousand, with numbers of notables visiting our town each year, and known throughout the nation as a center of culture, still clings to the “village” type of communication. I refer to our present facilities for telegrahpic communication.

There are towns in our state with less population, with less transients, with less notables touching their soil, that have a first class, independent, down town telegraph office.

In the first place the railroad telegraph office is located approximately a mile from the greater center of activitv of our town; second, the railroad employees are heavily burdened with increased revenue for the railroad over the preceding year, as well as with the increased telegraphic revenue, rendering it physically impossible for the local railroad people to give the service and attention that such an important institution demands. This letter casts no reflection on the local railroad people as to their willingness nor ability, simply a thorough understanding of their position, and realizing the needs of the town of Montevallo.

It is suggested by the writer that a meeting be held, plans be drawn to secure definite figures and facts, and if these figures and facts substantiate the belief that Montevallo needs the type of telegraphic service other small towns enjoy, then petitions be drawn to secure for our town the type of service it deserves, and will amply support.

Ban Lifted On Infantile Paralysis

In a statement given to The Times Tuesday Dr. Charles T. Acker, chairman of the Shelby County Board of Censors (Medical) said:

“After consulting with other members of the Board, in consideration of the fact that we have no new cases of infantile paralysis in this vicinity, it was decided that the ban heretofore requested on attendance of children at picture shows, churches, Sunday Schools, and other gatherings, might be safely lifted. And in accordance with that decision, the announcement is hereby officially confirmed.”

Dr. Acker further stated: “The public health authorities of Shelby County wish to express their appreciation to the people for the hearty co-operation they have rendered in the effort to minimize the danger of spreading the disease. Those in charge of public places have responded heartily by inaugurating such restrictions as were suggested, and the people have been exceptionally prompt in taking such steps individually as were recommended as the best preventive.”

State Responsible For Education

TWO IMPORTANT STEPS ARE NECESSARY SAYS MRS. JAMES FITTS HILL

Montgomery, Ala.—“The State is responsible for an adequate support of education because it alone has authority to employ the total wealth of the State as the base of taxation in supporting a service which, like education, affects the total population”, said Mrs. James Fitts Hill in a statement issued on Monday.

“In order to meet this responsibility,” Mrs. Hill said, “there are two steps the state must take: First it must see that each county meets the standards of a uniform local effort in public school support. Second, it must provide sufficient money from state-wide tax collections to supplement local effort and thus guarantee to all counties school opportunities that are reasonably good.”

“Under the Minimum Program Act,” she said, “the state has taken the first step by providing that the county tax and from the three-tre county tax and from the three-mill district tax, together with appropriations from the state's Public School Fund, shall be used to finance the minimum seven-month term. The remaining two mills of the county tax and the poll tax,” Mrs. Hill stated, “are set aside for the purpose of extending high school terms beyond seven months and for necessary debt service and capital outlay”

“To take the second step referred to above”, Mrs. Hill said, “it will be necessary for the state to find additional revenue for a complete Minimum Fund.”

In reply to the questions: To what extent are the children of Alabama dependent upon the Minimum Program Fund? Are we certain that the counties need the financial help from the state treasury to which all counties contribute in proportion to their wealth?, Mrs. Hill said:

“Answers to these questions are found in a study of the 1935-1936 school terms in the several counties. One purpose of the study was to determine how long a term the counties could maintain on “local support” alone By local support is meant the tax receipts used under the provisions alone. By local support its meant the tax receipts used under the provisions of the Minimum Program for the support of the seven-month term.

“The findings from the study were startling. For example, it was found that if the several counties had no money for schools except that derived from district, county, and the state three-mill tax, pledged for the minimum term, not one of the sixty-seven could have a seven-month school term. Montgomery would have the longest term, but, even so, her schools would stop at the end of six and one-half months. In contrast to Montgomery, Lamar and Marion counties with “local funds” alone would support a scant term of 1.9 months. In fact, with only “local support” the average term of the state would be but 3.4 months. Forty-nine counties, under such conditions, would have to close their schools before the end of four months. In thirty counties the term would be less than three months Four counties, Dallas, Jefferson, Lee, and Lowndes, would be compelled to close down before the end of five months, and only two, Mobile and Montgomery, could operate their schools beyond six months.

Shelby County Gets Total Of $46,544

PAYMENTS MADE BY HOME OWNERS LOAN CORPORATION

Residents of Shelby county received a total of $46,544 from the Home Owners' Loan Corporation during the three year period of refinancing operations which terminated June 13, 1936, according to the final figures furnished Judge John D. Petree, State Director for the National Emergency Council. This sum represented 29 individual loans.

A total of 16,617 distressed home owners in Alabama were extended aid in the sum of $37,036,794. Of this money it is estimated that $2,010,000 went toward the payment of taxes and assessments, the estimated average of tax and assessment payments per loan in Alabama being $121.

According to the 1930 United States Census reports there were 105,494 owned non-farm homes in Alabama. The Home Owners' Loan Corporation refinanced mortgages on 15.8 per cent of this number.

The total number of loans made in all states, Puerto Rico, Hawaii and Alaska was 1,021,817, involving the sum of $3,092,870,784, making the average loan $3,027.

More than 98 per cent of all money involved went for the refinancing of distressed homes by means of long-term replacement mortgages which are to be amortized fully over the term of the loan in small monthly payments. The balance of the money advanced went for the restoration and conditioning of properties.

It is estimated that $228,435,000 of the Home Owers' Loan Corporation advances went to the tax offices of the nation, with the national average tax payment per loan being $224.

The Harveys Are “Flying High”

To W. A. Harvey, 76, and his 70-year-old wife, age is just an opportunity for the fuller life.

Following this philosophy, they are celebrating their golden wedding anniversary by a trip from Montevallo, Ala., to Niagara Falls. This is the same journey taken by Harvey's mother on her wedding trip 85 years ago—except for tre mode of travel.

And that is where the fuller line come in. The Harvey's took to the air for the first time in their lives, flying all the way from Alabama.

Their reactions, as they told them on arriving at the home of their daughter, Mrs. Leslie Whitley, 3521 Patterson Street, Chevy Chase, Md., would please the testimonial writer of any air transport company. They say they will never travel by rail again.

“My daughter wants me to spend every dime I have before I die,” Harvey explained. “I don't know whether we'll go to that extreme, but we're determined to see a little life by the time we're through.”—The Washington Post.

MONTEVALLO DEFEATED LAY DAM LAST SUNDAY

Montevallo's baseball club went down to Lay Dam Sunday, and rung up a beautiful 10 to 7 victory over the powerful Lay Dam team that has few defeats against it for this season.

Harry Kendrick, Montevallo pitcher, was the explosion of pent-up fury that downed his former mates. Kendrick was pitcher for Lay Dam the first of the season, winning two games for them. He was released for another pitcher. His victory in Sunday's game was very gratifying to him, and has brought him much praise from the fans.

Kendrick allowed Lay Dam 8 hits, while his mates were garnering eighteen safeties off the pitching of Golson and Foshee for Lay Dam. But still more impressive, pitcher Kendrik annexed one of Montevallo's safe hits to his record, and it was a home run with two men aboard.

Eiland was catcher for Montevallo and Tatum for Lay Dam.

BASEBALL GAMES HERE TODAY AND FRIDAY

The Montevallo baseball team is scheduled for games at the high school ball park here this (Thursday) and Friday.

The Clanton team will come here for the contest this afternoon while Marvel will engage the locals Friday afternoon.

Suspension of Ten Unions Voted by Federation Council —Many Oil Men Indicted for Conspiracy— Metaxas Dictator of Greece.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union.

UNLESS John L. Lewis and his associates in the Committee for Industrial Organization repent and cease their "rebellious" activities before September 5, the ten unions they head will be under suspension from the American Federation of Labor. Such was the verdict of the federation's executive council which passed on the charges of John P. Frey, president of the metal trades division, that the CIO was "fomenting insurrection and rebellion." David Dubinsky, head of the garment workers, cast the only vote against the suspension order.

J. P. Frey

Lewis having definitely set himself against any peace overtures, it appeared that the suspension certainly would be put into effect. The next move will be up to the Tampa convention in the fall, which will be asked to vote the expulsion of the refractory unions.

The ten unions accused by Mr. Frey and found guilty are:

Amalgamated Clothing Workers, Sidney Hillman, president.

Oil Field, Gas Well, and Refinery Workers, Harvey Fremming, president.

Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers, Thomas H. Brown, president.

Ladies' Garment Workers, David Dubinsky, president.

Textile Workers, Thomas F. McMahon, president.

Flat Glass Workers, Glen McCabe, president.

Iron, Steel, and Tin Workers, M. F. Tighe, president.

Automobile Workers, Homer Martin, president.

Rubber Workers, S. H. Dalrymple, president.

Action on the International Typographical union, whose president, C. P. Howard, is secretary of the CIO; and the United Hat, Cap and Millinery Workers, part of whom are not associated with the CIO, was deferred. The suspended unions have a membership of about one million, or nearly one-third of the total in the federation.

The council stated:

"This is the first attempt ever made, during the existence of the A. F. of L., covering a period of more than 50 years, to set up a dual movement within.

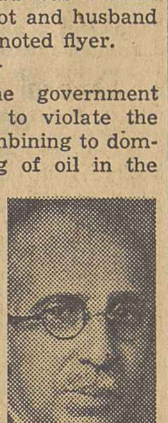
"It was the opinion of the executive council that it could not condone the setting up of a rival organization within the officially recognized family of organized labor, or tolerate and countenance it without sacrificing its self-respect or making an unconditional surrender to a minority group composed of members who are in open rebellion to democratic procedure and majority rule, as exemplified at the late convention of the A. F. of L."

Lewis characterized the council's action as one of "incredible and crass stupidity" and said that it was "dictated by personal selfishness and frantic fear."

SIX passengers and two pilots were instantly killed when a big Lockheed Electra plane of the Chicago and Southern Airlines crashed a few minutes after taking off from the airport of St. Louis, Mo. At this writing there is no explanation for the disaster. The plane was almost new and the weather not bad though skies were overcast.

The plane was bound from New Orleans for Chicago, and five of the victims were residents of the latter city. One of the dead was Vernon Omlie, a veteran pilot and husband of Phoebe Omlie, a noted flyer.

CHARGED by the government with conspiracy to violate the anti-trust law by combining to dominate the purchasing of oil in the Texas, Louisiana and Oklahoma fields and to fix prices of gasoline in the Middle West, 58 persons, 23 petroleum concerns and three publishing companies were indicted by a federal grand jury in Madison, Wis. Among the prominent defendants are Edward G. Seubert of Chicago, president of the Standard Oil Company of Indiana; Henry M. Dawes of Evanston, Ill., president of the Pure Oil company, and many officials of Standard Oil, Pure Oil, Deep Rock, Socony-Vacuum and various other oil concerns and their subsidiaries. Also in the list are Warren C. Platt of Cleveland, publisher of the National Petroleum News and Platt's Oilgram; his two publications and the Chicago Journal of Commerce.



H. M. Dawes

The indictment charged that the defendant oil companies formed pools in the east Texas and mid-continent fields for the purpose of purchasing gasoline at artificially high prices from independent producers, and in furtherance of such a scheme were members of associations which included the independents. Further it was charged that independent refiners, to aid the plan, had curtailed their production of gasoline.

This, said Mr. Platt, is exactly what the oil companies did with the approval of Secretary of the Interior Harold L. Ickes, administrator of the NRA petroleum code, when efforts were being made to limit the production of gasoline, prevent the flow of excess quota oil into market channels, and raise prices in that turbulent industry.

"The government's charge turns on whether a practice legally started and carried on under the recent NRA petroleum code was continued in illegal manner after the NRA was killed by the United States Supreme court," Mr. Platt said.

EXPERT crop statisticians estimate that, as a result of the record breaking drouth, this year's corn crop will be reduced to 1,572,000,000 bushels, which would be the smallest yield since 1881 except for the disastrous drouth year of 1934. In that year total production was 1,478,000,000, but the acreage was smaller than it is this season.

Argentine farmers are expected to profit to the extent of $50,000,000 or more as a result of the keen competition for corn between the United States and Europe, which has recently lifted prices about 17 cents per bushel in the Buenos Aires market.

There are only a few other countries which figure as exporters of corn, including South Africa and the Danubian states. The South African crop this year is reported as relatively small, due to drouth, while cables yesterday reported severe damage in Rumania as the result of intense heat and dry weather.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT was visibly aroused by Republican charges that the New Dealers were seeking to reap political profit from the drouth conditions. At his press conference he broke with the usual rule by permitting himself to be directly quoted as saying:

"It is a great disservice to the proper administration of any government to link up human misery with partisan politics."

The President said he was not ready to announce his drouth relief program, preferring to wait until the great plains drouth committee, headed by Rural Electrification Administrator Morris L. Cooke, completes its inspection of the entire drouth belt, and its study of the national resources board reports and those of reforestation, soil erosion and similar units.

THERE is another dictatorship in Europe, this time in Greece. Gen. John Metaxas, premier, announced that a general strike fostered by communists was likely to lead to serious disturbances, so, with the approval of King George II, he declared martial law, dissolving parliament, postponed elections indefinitely and mobilized all workers in essential services such as railways, in order that, called to the colors, they would be directly under government control.

Gen.Metaxas

Strong guards were mounted at power stations, gas works and other vital points and all soldiers and police not on guard duty were held in barracks ready for action.

Metaxas promised the enforcement of an eight hour day, a minimum wage and a social insurance system. He remodeled the cabinet, taking for himself the army, navy, air and foreign affairs portfolios. Dispatches to Bucharest said there had been clashes in the northern provinces of Greece between workers and the military forces.

DECLARING that it "will indorse no candidate" of party in the Presidential campaign, the American Liberty league states:

"The league is neither an adjunct nor an ally of the Republican party. It is not an adjunct of the Democratic party, even though many of its principles harmonize with the excellent platform adopted by that party in 1932 and proclaimed as 'a covenant with the people to be faithfully kept.'

"Certainly the league is not an adjunct of the New Deal party which for the moment has usurped control of the party of Jefferson, Jackson, Cleveland, and Wilson. It has not and will not contribute to any campaign fund."

DESPERATE fighting for possession of the passes in the Guadarrama mountains north of Madrid was going on between the government forces and the rebel troops. Loyalist soldiers were hurried to that region, and Madrid claimed some victories. However, the Fascists on the northern side of the range were said to be within sight of the capital and in position for a vigorous advance.

The rebels scored in the south by landing 2,000 Moroccan troops from Ceuta after a lively sea and air fight in which two loyalist warships were driven off. The loyalists were also reported to have met defeat near Avila, losing 600 men and some tanks and trucks.

On the twentieth day of the rebellion the government announced it had captured the provinces of Catalonia, Valencia, Murcia, Malaga, Ciudad Real, Guadalajara, Badajoz and the northern resort city of San Sebastian.

Fascist Italy has been accused of aiding the Spanish rebels, and it is asserted a number of Italian bombing planes were sent to them in Morocco. The leftist French government naturally is in sympathy with the Madrid government and Frenchmen, unarmed, have been given permission to cross the border to aid in putting down the rebellion. German and Russian sympathies, also, are ranged on opposite sides, and all this caused fears that a general war might result. France called on all other nations to preserve neutrality, and Spain warned Italy and Germany to keep hands off.

Day by day the struggle in Spain became bloodier and more ruthless. Summary executions of prisoners were common on both sides and these deaths were probably as numerous as those in battle. The government planes showered bombs on the rebel strongholds, virtually destroying many towns; and the Fascist bombers engaged in desperate fights with loyal warships.

NEW YORK Republicans are to nominate a candidate for governor at their party convention in September, and Col. Theodore Roosevelt has said in a letter that was made public that he is willing to accept that honor if the party so desires.

Col. Roosevelt

Colonel Roosevelt, now forty-eight years old, was the Republican candidate for governor in 1924 and was defeated by Alfred E. Smith. Since then he has been governor of Puerto Rico and governor-general of the Philippines.

SENATOR HENRY W. KEYES of New Hampshire has announced that he is not a candidate for reelection by the Republicans, preferring "to retire from active participation in public affairs." The Republicans therefore will choose between former Senator George H. Moses and Gov. H. Styles Bridges, both of whom have announced their candidacy for the nomination.

Kansas Republicans renominated Senator Arthur Capper, and the Democrats picked Omar Ketchum of Topeka. In Kentucky the Democrats renominated Seanator M. M. Logan, whose Republican opponent in November will be Robert H. Lucas.

Marion A. Zioncheck, the eccentric congressman from Seattle, reconsidered his decision to retire and announced that, at the request of his mother, he would be a candidate to succeed himself, "to show the people that I am neither crazy nor foolish." Five other Democrats and seven Republicans seek Zioncheck's seat.

IN THE first few days of the Olympic games in Berlin the American track team piled up such an imposing number of points that it appeared certain none of the rival teams could catch up. Jesse Owens of Ohio State university lead his mates in this victorious march, winning three championships, in the 100-meter and 200-meter runs and the broad jump. In the longer dash he lowered the world and Olympic marks. Ken Carpenter of California won the discus throw with a new Olympic record of 50.48 meters, and Gordon Dunn, also of California, was second. Earl Meadows of Texas was first in the pole vault with a new Olympic mark; and points were won by various other American athletes.

Among the women contestants Helen Stephens of Missouri distinguished herself by breaking the world record in two heats of the 100-meter dash.

A VOLUNTARY cut of $25,861,936 in the debts of 33,906 "distressed" farmers was reported by the Resettlement administration. The debts, it said, were scaled down by creditors, through the work of voluntary farm debt committees in bringing farmers and their creditors "together in a neutral atmosphere" during the ten months ended June 30.

Expenses of seeking debt readjustments, taken from a fund provided by President Roosevelt Sept. 1 last year, amounted to 1 per cent of the total amount of debts involved, the administration said. So far, $1,100,000 of the allocated $2,000,000 had been expended.

An able Frenchman, long since dead, wrote about choses vues—"things seen."

Arthur Brisbane

There are still many things to see and to hear, although there is nobody to write about them as that old Frenchman wrote.

At the head of the London Times' "personal column," some one pays to print this impressive extract from the Psalms:

"Seek the Lord, and His strength; seek His face evermore. Remember his marvelous works that He hath done; His wonders, and the judgments of His mouth."

You spend a moment wondering what kind of English man or woman, strong in faith, decided to put that text before statesmen that today seek the "face" of Hitler, Mussolini, Stalin, but forget the greater power of the Creator of those gentlemen.

After that, you read in the same Times this advertisement:

"Furs humanely obtained that can be worn with a clean conscience—full particulars from Maj. C. Van Der Byl, Wappenham, Towcester."

This being an ingenious and doubtless quite sincere appeal to the tender-hearted Englishwoman who does not like to think that the fur around her neck once belonged to an animal that suffered for days and perhaps weeks tortured in a trap.

Possibly the best way to "obtain furs humanely obtained that can be worn with a clear conscience" is to buy and wear some of the innumerable furs, from rugged bears to silky chinchilla, made from the skins of rabbits that are nourished in little hutches in the suburbs of Los Angeles, and fed with "rabbit hay," tender young alfalfa, grown on the Mojave desert, a good deal of it on a ranch owned and operated by this writer.

When you buy furs, no matter what kind, with a rabbit skin foundation, you may be sure that the animal suffered very little, if at all, and when you buy that fur you also buy honest American alfalfa, which is a vegetarian product.

F. C. Cobb wrote from the Boy Scout reservation at Allaire, N. J.: "The last four week-ends have been spent by our scouts collecting tent caterpillar egg clusters from wild cherry and apple trees along the highways of Monmouth and Ocean counties. Many thousands of egg clusters, each containing on the average 250 eggs, have been destroyed."

No better work could be done by scouts and other boys. It is far better exercise than perfunctory "hikes," often exhausting for smaller boys.

The fathers of the boys, also in need of exercise, can be useful mowing weeds along highways, excellent work for the lungs and for reducing the waist.

Edward S. Harkness, generous young New York financier, gave to Lawrenceville School for Boys a sum that will make possible important new building, plus rebuilding and a more extensive system of small-group instruction, with more teachers.

Mr. Harkness, who does not like publicity, refused to make public the amount of his gift to Lawrenceville, but he gave $7,000,000 to Exeter academy, $13,000,000 each to Yale and Harvard, to finance their housing systems. That gives some idea of the size of his gifts.

Some Americans will agree that it is a good thing to have men of unusual ability accumulate wealth and use it thus generously and wisely.

Old-fashioned Americans would rather encourage such gifts and praise the givers than inculcate the notion that anybody with brains enough to accumulate wealth in this country of opportunity is probably a thief and ought to be in jail.

Mussolini knows how a dictator can keep his hold on the people. He establishes 2,000 government camps where half a million poor children enjoy free vacations at sea and mountain resorts. For nine years Mussolini has carried on this work.

In Europe, English, French, German, Italian or Czechoslovakian will believe anything you say about American crime, and that is hardly surprising.

The heading "Chicago Politician Dies Under Hail of Racketeers' Bullets" surprises nobody. There might be mild surprise if the heading read, "Chicago Politician Does NOT Die Under Hail of Racketeers' Bullets."

National Topics Interpreted
by William Bruckart

National Press Building Washington, D. C.

Washington.—The United States is being given an object lesson in what happens when government attempts to interfere with nature.

The People Must Pay

American farmers these days are threshing their wheat crop. The production is that of a reduced acreage, an acreage that was planned on theory by the Department of Agriculture. The result is that this year's American wheat crop will approximate 640,000,000 bushels. That is about 145,000,000 bushels less than the average crop during the five years from 1929 to 1933. The result is a shortage.

Department of Agriculture figures indicate that the total wheat crop in the world this year will be something like 650,000,000 bushels below the annual production. In other words, the wheat crop is short everywhere on earth and the result is obvious.

In our own case, there is normally a carry-over each year of about 125,000,000 bushels but due to the shortage of the crop this year that carry-over is insufficient to make up the needs of domestic consumption.

Consequently, we soon will see heavy importations of Canadian wheat, a wheat that can be blended in milling with our own production and a very satisfactory flour results. Yet, it must be remembered that on all importations of wheat from Canada or anywhere else, a tariff of 42 cents a bushel must be paid. It is clear, therefore, that consumers of bread must pay that tariff because the importers are going to pass that item of expense along as part of the cost of the flour. In addition to the shortage in the United States, Canadian wheat production is reported to be something like 100,000,000 bushels under normal. There is sufficient production in Canada to permit of export, of course, but the shortage is bound to be reflected in the prices.

And mention of the price brings us back to the individual effect of the combination of acreage, reduced by government edict, plus the act of nature in visiting a drouth upon us. Scarcity always results in higher prices. It is the operation of the law of supply and demand. The Roosevelt farm policy has been predicated on the theory that scarcity would produce higher prices and thereby add to the farm income. But drouth and other production hazards cannot be predicted and, therefore, the American people find themselves in a position where the unpredictable has happened and the farmers are not getting the benefit of higher prices on a natural and normal production.

* * *

There seems to be a stronger demand for wheat now than at any time during the last five or six years. It indicates a restoration of buying power on the part of the masses. In other words, industry again is opening up to some extent and employing workers although the increase in employment has been small thus far.

Industry Opens Up

In consequence of this combination of circumstances, there is now a seller's market in wheat instead of a buyer's market in wheat. To say it another way, there are more people seeking to buy wheat than there are seeking to sell it and the consumers of flour will pay the bill. By way of contrast with present conditions, it may be pointed out that world wheat consumption has exceeded world wheat production in every year except one since 1929. In the 1932 crop year there was slightly more wheat produced in the world than was consumed. The result of the steady growth in consumption over production in the last few years has been to wipe out all of the carry-over—wheat stored in bins and elevators throughout the world—and in every country users of wheat are scraping the bottoms of their bins. The tragedy of it all is that, because of the reduced acreage and the drouth in the United States, American farmers are not in a position to take advantage of the higher prices thus established by the sale of surplus wheat which may have been accumulated if the acreage had been normal.

Instead of the United States really controlling the market for wheat, we are in a position where a good many other countries may be encouraged to grow more wheat. The natural and obvious results of this will be to further curtail the outlet for American wheat which so long has been relied on by many foreign nations that are non-producers of wheat.

I do not know how far the New Deal intends to go in revising its basic economic policy regarding crop controlling. I can be sure of only one thing in regard to the New Deal plans: The visitation of the drought in two years in which the political planners of the New Deal attempted to upset natural laws has proved the inability of man to alter the course of nature and by the same token these conditions have proved the inability of government to change human nature.

* * *

A year or two ago, a committee of the American Bar association made a report definitely critical of the New Deal administration for having created so many agencies to which had been given functions almost like the courts. That report pointed out how such units as the now dead NRA and the equally dead AAA could issue rules and regulations that were enforceable as law. They called attention to the further fact that countless of these rules and regulations carried strict and severe penalties, even to the extent of a jail term for an individual violator.

Bar Offers New Plan

Lately, another committee of the American Bar association has published another report, again calling attention to the un-American principles established in such bureaucratic control. It offers a constructive proposal for the elimination of bureaucratic management of individual affairs from Washington. It proposes the establishment of an administration court which would have power to enforce these rules and regulations but would be equipped with the judicial right of determination so that the thousands upon thousands of regulations with their various penalties would not be enforced upon an individual accused of their violation without giving that alleged violator the right of a hearing.

Ultimately, the proposed court would take over the judicial work of all of the administrative agencies in Washington now numbering something like 75.

* * *

I suppose the condition can be explained by the fact that dozens of new bureaus have been set up under the scores of New Deal laws and that in the haste to get them into operation, no co-ordination was had between the various groups, but it is my belief that private citizens cannot be blamed for this condition. Since they cannot be blamed for failure of government to function properly, they ought not be compelled to answer for the silly differences in law which bureaucrats have written under authority of congress to draft necessary regulations.

Too Many Bureaus

Sooner or later the public is going to become fully aware of the serious character of this situation. It can be safely predicted, I think, that when the general public does find out what has happened, its wrath will not be easily appeased.

After all, congress is really to blame for this condition. It rushed through laws which President Roosevelt demanded and it did not take time to debate the provisions nor did it examine the sections to know fully what results would flow from them. In many cases, too many, statements of general legislative policy were not clear and congress abdicated its duties to the extent that it wrote into those laws provisions saying that the agency which was to enforce the particular law was given authority to write whatever rules and regulations were found to be necessary. Some authority of this kind always has been given in order to make the national laws flexible but they never have been given to such an extent as they have in the last three years.

Insufficient time has elapsed since the American Bar association committee came forth with its administrative court proposal for an analysis to be made of its potentialities. It may, and probably does have, weaknesses. It does, however, have a strong point in the general idea that a judicial body should determine whether an individual citizen has violated a bureaucrat's law and what the penalty should be rather than have that bureaucrat sit as prosecutor, judge and jury in telling the individual citizen what his crime has been.

It probably will be said that lawyers are very technical and always looking for loopholes. But in this instance, it seems to me the American Bar association committee deserves the highest commendation for speaking out boldly about an admittedly bad condition. It seems to me, likewise, that the committee, instead of being criticized, must be praised for unselfishness because as long as bureaucrats continue to exercise the functions they are now exercising under authority from Congress, the situation constitutes a field day for the lawyers. Few, if any, individuals living outside of Washington can come into the Capital city, find the agency that has charged them with violation of a bureaucrat's law and at the same time know how to defend himself. He has to have a lawyer and that makes an additional burden upon business.

Uncommon Sense

By JOHN BLAKE

©, Bell Syndicate—WNU Service

I am writing this on a hot day—a very hot day. The thermometer on my porch informs me that it is a hundred degrees Fahrenheit. I could believe that it is very much hotter than that.

Don't Watch the Thermometer

The people that pass my door have taken off their coats—if they are men.

The women, who refuse to be beaten even if they can't really keep cool, are wearing filmy raiment, but they don't pant the way men do.

But while I admit that I am inconvenienced, and wish I could be in Alaska and lean against an ice floe like a polar bear, I know that if I stop thinking about the weather and go to work I will soon lose myself in my job.

* * *

A little way down the street is a fire-engine house. The firemen have rigged a pipe up in front of the building and from its mouth spouts a continuous man-made geyser. All the children in the neighborhood, and they make as much noise as all the children in town, are stripped to their little buffs and are shouting joyfully as they bend down their backs and let the spray from the pipe run over them.

Every time there is a lull in the proceedings to change children—for there are too many of them to soak all at once—a flock of sparrows alight to have their turn at the cooling process.

* * *

But in the suburban town where I live, and in the great city which is not far away, men and women are doing their regular work.

If a fire should break out in another part of the town, the firemen who are now watching the children enjoy their shower baths would mount their ladder trucks and man their engines, and be off with a blare of sirens to do their appointed job.

If they decided they didn't want to get any hotter and stayed where they were perhaps the town might be consumed.

* * *

Men and women can do in a pinch what they have to do, whether the temperature is up or down.

When the need arises, especially the need to help others out of danger, their courage crops out and they all become heroes for the time being.

And I, who have nothing to do for the present but pound a typewriting machine would do well to forget the fact that it is uncomfortable, and stop breathing hard and making continuous trips to the refrigerator for ice cubes to fill my glass.

* * *

Rain or snow, cold or hot, one is easier in his mind if he forgets the discomforts that are bound to come, and to continue with his work.

And the more indispensable work he has to do, the more easily he will withstand the steaming streets and the torrid skies.

As long as it is not humanly possible to change the weather, the only intelligent thing to do is to forget about it.

Village of Tongues

More different noises and voices are heard in a villa in Uccle, Belgium, than in any other spot on earth. There, day and night, a staff of the Union Internationale de Radiophonie "police" the radio stations of Europe to see that they are adhering to their wavelengths. The place is a bedlam of squeals, whistles and roars and programs that come through in about 125 languages and dialects.—Collier's Weekly.

Gunlock Ranch

SYNOPSIS

Sleepy Cat, desert town of the Southwest, is celebrating the Fourth of July. Jane Van Tambel, beautiful daughter of Gus Van Tambel, hated owner of Gunlock ranch, has arrived from the East for the first time. She watches the Frontier Day celebration in company with Dr. Carpy, crusty, tender-hearted friend of the community. Henry Sawdy of the Circle Dot ranch, tricked in a fake horse race the day before by Dave McCrossen, foreman at Gunlock, plans revenge. He enters Bill Denison, a handsome young Texas wrangler, in the rodeo which McCrossen is favored to win, and lays heavy bets on him with Harry Boland, saloonkeeper and crony of McCrossen. Unknown to the crowd, Denison is a champion horseman. McCrossen and the young stranger tie in the various events. Denison drops a cigarette carelessly, and it is proposed that he try to pick it up riding full tilt. Racing down the track, Denison picks up the cigarette, Boland and the Gunlock ranch followers protest to Bill Pardaloe, ex-sheriff and one of the judges, but the verdict goes to Denison when McCrossen refuses to attempt the stunt. Entreated by the crowd, Denison agrees to perform another trick.

When the track was cleared and the men were again seated, the portly spieler continued: "To show there was no trick in the cigarette ride, and to show there's no collusion, I'll ask any lady in the audience to throw any little personal ornament of wear out on the track. That young lady next to Dr. Carpy"—he pointed—"isn't that a small bracelet I see on her left arm? Just the thing. Lady, if you'd lend us that bracelet for a minute, we'll show you some ridin'."

Sawdy was addressing Jane.

"Oh, I won't do it!" exclaimed Jane.

Sawdy looked pained, but kept his eye fixed on the bracelet. "Go ahead, girl, throw it out!" suggested Carpy.

"Never! The pony might step on it!" protested Jane.

Vexed, but unwilling to ignore the growing clamor of the spectators, Jane rose reluctantly, passed the slender gold band over her wrist, and, pausing for an awkward feminine throw, flung it out ungraciously on the track. The crowd applauded. Jane blushed.

The bracelet fell close to the grandstand side of the track. Sawdy thought too close, but the wrangler, riding over, nodded that he could make it.

The wrangler wheeled his horse, and cantered down the track. Wheeling again, he patted his pony's neck and headed up toward the grandstand. Again the pony took the quirt, leaped ahead, and, with the onlookers mostly standing to see and holding their breath, the wrangler dashed for the bracelet.

Once more he swung over to the right of his saddle till he could trail his hand easily along in the dust of the track. With eyes straining and every nerve taut, the wrangler, sighting the shining object, struck for it. At the same instant, out of perfect silence a sudden vicious yell rang from somewhere about the grandstand. The pony, startled, sprang straight sidewise, throwing his rider head first into the dust, and bolted across the track, dragging the wrangler, caught by one foot in the stirrup.

A murmur rose, breaking into cries of anger and shame.

The pony headed for the inside guard rail of the track fence.

But while the panicky spectators stared, speechless, the wrangler, dragged along at breakneck speed, shook loose his foot and, rolling with the momentum over and over on the track, sprang to his feet, covered with dust. The bolting pony cleared the fence and dashed across the field.

The angry wrangler steadied himself after a step or two, his eyes roving over the faces before him, striving to catch his breath. With his quirt still hanging from his wrist, his hair rumpled and his bronzed features dust-smeared, his shirt torn half off his back, and breathing hard and fast, he stood eyeing the crowd and raised his voice in a loud clear drawl:

"If the calf that just bellowed for milk isn't too much of a coward to walk down here, I'll agree to bottle-feed him with a quirt."

There were a few applauding laughs, many murmurs, and a general feeling of uneasiness among the spectators.

Suddenly from the midst of a riot of men talking at the end of the grandstand near Jane came a clash of angry voices. The next instant a bald-headed man with keen gray eyes and a dyed mustache, scattering onlookers right and left, pushed his way out of the gathering crowd and, stretching out his arm, yelled at the three Circle Dot cowmen standing on the track beside the contrite pony. "Look-a-here, Texas!" yelled the bald-head, beckoning. "Come here, you! You too, Lefever! Quick!"

"It's Jake Spotts," said the excited Sawdy. "Come on, boys!" With Lefever, and followed by the wrangler, Sawdy hurried to the irate barber's side.

"There's the skunk that yelled," cried Spotts, almost beside himself as he pushed the wrangler forward, and pointed, "That yellow-faced skunk right there, Barney Rebstock!"

"You're a liar," shouted the man accused, a slender, shrill-voiced, sharp-faced ranch hand. "I never did it."

A long-haired, mild voiced Indian standing near him spoke up: "Yes, you did. I stood right behind you."

Jane was sitting so close to the altercation she could have touched the nearest man. She rose in alarm. Dr. Carpy pushed her to his other side. She heard Sawdy thunder, "No more lyin', Barney! There's two witnesses."

That was almost all she could remember. There were a few more sharp words. Then the dusty wrangler, shortening his quirt, sprang at Rebstock, knocked off his hat with one hand, and with the other brought the heavy handle down on Rebstock's forehead.

There was instant uproar. McCrossen sprang forward to defend Rebstock. He was too late. His hand slipped to his gun holster. Carpy, jumping up, stood almost over the brawlers. "Hold on, there! Hold on!" he thundered. "The first man that draws a gun here, I'll run out of Sleepy Cat!"

Dr. Carpy was the only man in Sleepy Cat who could have done it. But his word was the last word in Sleepy Cat. No one cared to face his wrath. He turned to Jane. "Don't be frightened, girl. It's all over."

Cheers greeted the wrangler as he walked back with his cronies to where the contrite pony stood on the track. Although his attire was in much disarray, his manner put his hearers perfectly at ease. "I know," he said to those who had returned to the grandstand, and patting his mount, "that this generally well-behaved little Texas pony is as much ashamed of his conduct as I am, and I know he would like to apologize!"

He had the crowd with him. While they cheered, the wrangler remounted, cantered leisurely up the track and down, and brought the gelding to a halt in front of Dr. Carpy and Jane Van Tambel. Patting the pony affectionately on the neck with his left hand, and speaking softly, the wrangler tapped the little fellow with his doubled quirt on the right shoulder.

The pony pawed the dust in protest but gradually crooked his right foreleg, then his left, and knelt in apology to the grandstand. The crowd gave him loud applause.

Meantime, throwing his lines, the wrangler stepped off the pony, laid his hand on the guard rails of the grandstand track-fence, cleared it, and, picking his way among the spectators up to where Carpy sat, stopped before Jane.

He was covered with dust and sweat. Jane started. She saw a pair of keen brown eyes inspecting her from behind long dusty lashes. She saw a familiar object in his right hand, as he held it out to her and heard his low words:

"Lady, your bracelet!"

"Oh!" exclaimed Jane completely surprised. "Thank you!"

He tried to fade away among his boisterous following of uproarious Circle Dot men. But not every one was disposed to let him escape easily. Harry Tenison, who paid the stake money over to Sawdy at the Circle Dot quarters, insisted on meeting the Texan. He was dragged, reluctant, out of the sleeping tent and shook hands slowly with the Medicine Bend sport magnate.

"Where did you pick up that cigarette trick?" demanded Tenison. "I never saw it done but once. That was at Madison Square Garden."

"How long ago?" asked the wrangler.

"Two years ago last winter."

"It was done there that winter, I understand," said the Texan evenly. "Of course, it was under artificial light, so they had to use white paper."

"You been in New York, then?"

"Once or twice, sir."

"You've seen it done, then?"

"I have, sir. And I'm mighty glad I met you," drawled the Texan, cutting the interview short. He was not ungracious, but was somewhat fatigued.

"The boy can ride," said Tenison, rejoining Sawdy. "I told him I saw that cigarette act done in Madison Square Garden, two years ago. He said he saw it at the same time. I guess that's where he picked it up."

"Picked what up, the cigarette?"

"The act. He said they used a white-paper cigarette there on account of the artificial light—so he must have seen it."

"Who's they?" asked Sawdy bluntly.

"I suppose he meant the rider."

"I wonder if he meant himself. Why, Harry, he's the man that introduced that act at the garden, two years ago last winter."

CHAPTER III

TWO years later, back on her old father's ranch after two years in Chicago, Jane was riding the possessions one day to be hers. Wandering on her pony far in the Gunlock hills, she had lost her way toward the close of the day and had stopped to ask directions from a man standing at the door of a poor-looking cabin.

"Why, isn't this Gunlock Ranch?"

"Not yet." The man answered the question firmly, Jane thought.

"When I left the house this morning," she said indignantly, "they told me I could ride all day without getting off Gunlock Ranch. I must have ridden about a hundred miles. What did you mean by saying, 'not yet'? she asked suspiciously.

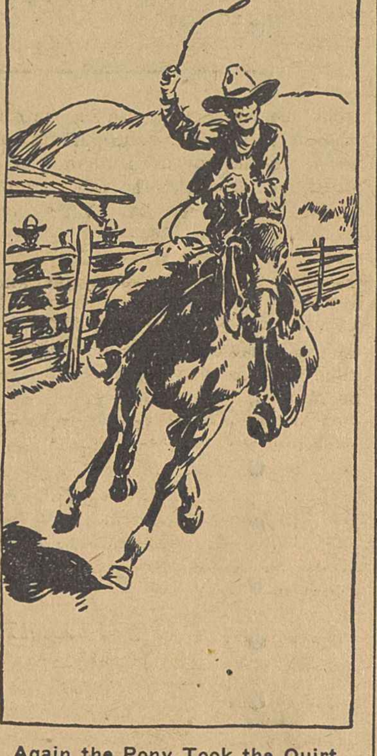
Bill Denison, before whose door she had halted, looked at Jane with curiosity. "Oh, nothing special," he said casually. "Only, that old man Van Tambel has stolen everything in the hills except this ranch."

At this outburst Jane first stopped breathing—then she breathed furiously. Her features hardened. "Why, how outragious!" she exclaimed. "You ought to be ashamed of yourself."

The young man held his ground. "Let me ask a question. Are you any kin of old man Van Tambel's?" he asked composedly.

"I don't care to discuss that question with you," was her defiant reply.

"I admit, if you are, I was kind of rough, speaking as I did," he went on. "I didn't know he had any relations. I worked for him a year once, and I never heard him tell of any. So I guess I have to apologize."



Again the Pony Took the Quirt.

"I should think you would apologize," declared Jane, scandalized.

"But," he countered, and the "but" was emphatic, "to tell you the truth, lady, I can't take everything back. You living over at the ranch?" he asked.

"I live in Chicago."

"And you're lost?"

"If I were not, I shouldn't be here."

"Now no matter how you and I may differ on some subjects," he said, "I'll start you on your way home, providing you want me to. Will you wait a minute while I saddle up?"

"I won't wait a second. I'll find my own way." So saying, Jane jerked her horse around.

"Well, I like your spunk, anyway," Tenison called out to her, "and I'll catch you in a couple of minutes."

"You can stay right where you are," she shot back. "I don't want you near me, anyhow."

As she rode away, Jane heard in an incredibly short time the clatter of hoofs beside her. She bristled inside.

"What are you chasing me for?" she demanded as Tenison rode up.

"I was afraid you'd fall off your horse," he retorted dryly. "Now skip the hard words," he countered easily as Jane angrily objected to his taunt and to his company. "You know you're used up; you don't know how to ride. You've used up your horse, and you don't know the country, and I've got to get you home, so turn around and follow me—do you know where you're heading for?"

She was too exasperated to speak.

"You're headed for the desert, and that's a poor place for a stranger to sleep in, night or day."

The fell warning checked Jane. She had heard stories about that awful desert; she had been warned to keep away from it. A revulsion of feeling swept over her. She was tired, tired enough to drop off her horse. Oppressed by a sense of loneliness, helplessness, and resentment at being ridiculed by a disagreeable stranger, her eyes filled with angry tears. She began to cry as she turned her horse's head to follow him.

"Hold on," he said kindly, "hold on. Nothing to cry about, not a thing. You're as safe as if you were in your bed at the ranch. I guess I'm pretty rough-spoken; but my bark's worse'n my bite. So you're from Chicago?"

"Yes."

"That's quite a burg, I understand."

"How far have we got to go to get home?"

"Considerable ways. If we could go as the crow flies, it wouldn't be so far. How long have you been out here?"

"Six weeks."

He was too polite to comment, though he had hardly need to ask the question—Jane was so evidently a tenderfoot.

"What's your name?" she asked in turn.

"Bill Denison."

"How long have you lived here?"

"Here and in the Panhandle most of my life."

"And how many years is that?"

"Nigh onto thirty years, I figure it to be."

"What are you so sore for on everybody at Gunlock ranch?"

"Lady," returned her companion, "if I told you, you wouldn't believe it. But I don't say I'm sore at everybody. And I'm not sore at you. I'm glad there's one decent person now at Gunlock—"

Jane bridled again. "One decent person! I like that!"

"Hang it, I didn't mean to make another break. Please excuse, and I'll hog-tie my troublesome tongue."

"Is it very much farther?' asked Jane, alarmed now by approaching darkness.

"Not a whole lot. But maybe you'd better mount off and rest a little if you need it. It's rough going from here on, for I'm trying to take a short cut."

"You're not lost, are you?" she demanded suspiciously.

"Not yet."

"But you might get lost?"

"Not tonight. And if you'll stick to the saddle a little ways farther, you can have a drink at a spring to freshen you up."

"How can you find it?"

"If you'd drunk from it as many times as I have, you could find it in a sandstorm, blindfolded—so could these horses, either of 'em."

The two were silent for a while. Presently Denison checked his horse. "Here's your spring, lady. Are you thirsty?"

"Choked. If you hadn't been so mean, I'd have asked you for a drink at your house—if it is your house."

"It's mine so far, but there's a hang-over lawsuit of Van Tambel's on it. Can you get down, lady?"

"I don't know whether I can or not. I've been in this saddle so long."

Her companion eased her to the ground. Jane refused to drink without a cup till he told her to cup her hands. Then she would not drink until she could see there were no snakes in the water.

"Nothing gets into that water; it would freeze a snake to death. But I can strike a light so you can see the water in your hands."

"I'd have offered you a drink at my house if I'd thought of it," he said, helping her to remount. "I didn't aim to be mean. You kind of took me by surprise."

There were lights everywhere when Jane knocked, very late, at the ranchhouse door. Kindly old Bull Page, one of the ranch hands, greeted her in the kitchen.

The girl was jaded to death. "Where's everybody, Bull?" she asked, dropping into a chair.

"Why, Miss Jane, they're all out lookin' for you."

"Looking for me!" exclaimed Jane scornfully. "Well, they must be loafing on the job. Where's Quong?"

"Quong's gone to bed, but I'll get some bacon and fried potatoes for you in no time," declared Bull. "Coffee?"

"Yes, and strong."

"Same as I take it. Well, well, how'd you manage to find your way home?"

"I didn't find it. I found a man and a cabin about a hundred miles from nowhere, and he brought me home. That coffee smells grand, Bull," sighed Jane. "Hurry up with the bacon!"

As she said the words, in stalked the ranch foreman, Dave McCrossen.

At the sight of the missing girl he struck an attitude of resentful astonishment. "Hell's bells, Jane!" he exclaimed. "Here you are home and we've been riding all over creation!"

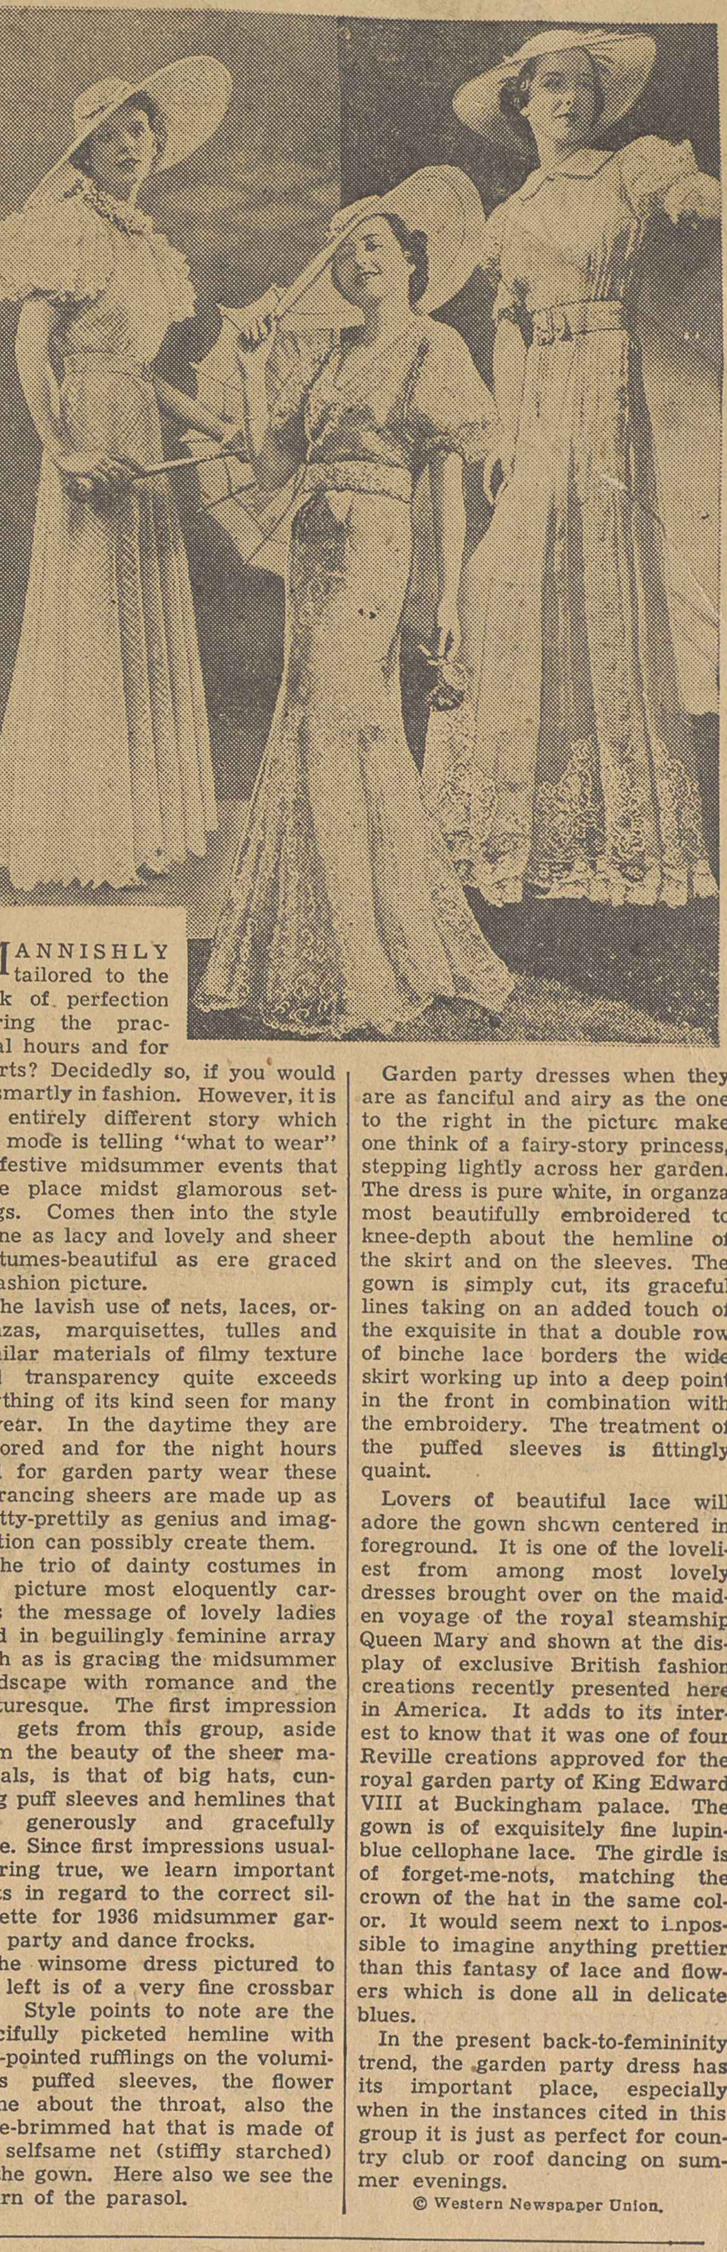
Sperm Whale Has Large Throat

The sperm whale could swallow a man. It grows to a length of 60 feet and has an enormous head, which amounts to about half its bulk and a third of its length. Its throat is broad enough to allow it to swallow a man. The sperm whale is found chiefly in southern waters, and in considerable numbers in the vicinity of New Zealand. Occasionally, though, it is met with as far north as the Arctic. One of a number of important points that distinguish it from other whales is that it has teeth. The throats of most varieties of whales are comparatively small—not more than four or five inches across.

Fashion Back to Femininity Trend

By CHERIE NICHOLAS



MANNISHLY tailored to the pink of perfection during the practical hours and for sports? Decidedly so, if you would be smartly in fashion. However, it is an entirely different story which the mode is telling "what to wear" at festive midsummer events that take place midst glamorous settings. Comes then into the style scene as lacy and lovely and sheer costumes-beautiful as ere graced a fashion picture.

The lavish use of nets, laces, organzas, marquisettes, tulles and similar materials of filmy texture and transparency quite exceeds anything of its kind seen for many a year. In the daytime they are tailored and for the night hours and for garden party wear these entrancing sheers are made up as pretty-prettily as genius and imagination can possibly create them.

The trio of dainty costumes in the picture most eloquently carries the message of lovely ladies clad in beguilingly feminine array such as is gracing the midsummer landscape with romance and the picturesque. The first impression one gets from this group, aside from the beauty of the sheer materials, is that of big hats, cunning puff sleeves and hemlines that are generously and gracefully wide. Since first impressions usually ring true, we learn important facts in regard to the correct silhouette for 1936 midsummer garden party and dance frocks.

The winsome dress pictured to the left is of a very fine crossbar net. Style points to note are the fancifully picketed hemline with like-pointed rufflings on the voluminous puffed sleeves, the flower ruche about the throat, also the huge-brimmed hat that is made of the selfsame net (stiffly starched) as the gown. Here also we see the return of the parasol.

Garden party dresses when they are as fanciful and airy as the one to the right in the picture make one think of a fairy-story princess, stepping lightly across her garden. The dress is pure white, in organza most beautifully embroidered to knee-depth about the hemline of the skirt and on the sleeves. The gown is simply cut, its graceful lines taking on an added touch of the exquisite in that a double row of binche lace borders the wide skirt working up into a deep point in the front in combination with the embroidery. The treatment of the puffed sleeves is fittingly quaint.

Lovers of beautiful lace will adore the gown shown centered in foreground. It is one of the loveliest from among most lovely dresses brought over on the maiden voyage of the royal steamship Queen Mary and shown at the display of exclusive British fashion creations recently presented here in America. It adds to its interest to know that it was one of four Reville creations approved for the royal garden party of King Edward VIII at Buckingham palace. The gown is of exquisitely fine lupin-blue cellophane lace. The girdle is of forget-me-nots, matching the crown of the hat in the same color. It would seem next to impossible to imagine anything prettier than this fantasy of lace and flowers which is done all in delicate blues.

In the present back-to-femininity trend, the garden party dress has its important place, especially when in the instances cited in this group it is just as perfect for country club or roof dancing on summer evenings.

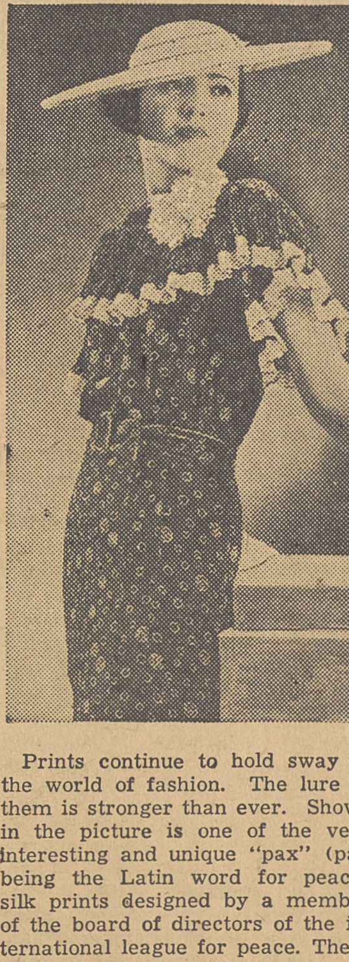
"PAX" SILK PRINTS

By CHERIE NICHOLAS



Prints continue to hold sway in the world of fashion. The lure of them is stronger than ever. Shown in the picture is one of the very interesting and unique "pax" (pax being the Latin word for peace) silk prints designed by a member of the board of directors of the international league for peace. These really handsome silk prints are available to women who are interested in adopting the peace-in-fashions movement. The dress pictured is of a blue and white silk sheer with the word pax so skilfully used as a motif it becomes a part of the patterning. The wide white-bordered cape-bertha is pleated and shirred in accord with the latest styling trend.

FROSTED JEWELRY LEADS THE VOGUE

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

Summer's newest jewelry is "white and frosty." Rings, bracelets and necklaces that look as icy as a cool drink are being worn at fashionable summer resorts. Crystalline and opaque whites are frequently combined. Crystalline alone adds a glamorous note to costumes in the new smoky pastels, opaque white is good with copper-brown, and with the south-sea batik prints or flowered challis.

Choker necklaces are staging a come-back. Large frosty rings are frequently worn to match. To set off the rings, nails are adopting shades of smoky red polish. Massive couturier rings with multi-colored stones are also smart, and require bright nail lacquer such as robin red or coral to give the hands the proper balance.

For moments when the urge to be feminine has you in its grip, try yielding to the rage for flower jewelry. Fabric flowers, raffia flowers, carved flower motifs, are used —even the real thing straight from the florist. Any flower goes, from daisies to forget-me-nots. Some of the necklaces tie demurely at the back of the neck with a ribbon.

New Mode in Smart Sports Dresses for Daytime Wear

Smart dresses for daytime wear during the summer include grand new sports and spectator sports outfits. Molyneux has scored with a new design made for his private clients, who include several Americans known for their elegance. A suit of beige woolen has a most interesting belt which is made of natural tree bark and is fastened with a sheaf of dried grass. Another successful number is a dress of navy and white linen tweed with the skirt of wide, flat pleats. It is worn under a navy wool redingote.

Resolutions by Alabama Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs

Jury Service

Believing that the right to a fair and impartial trial by a jury of one's peers is essential to justice, and that women cannot be assured by justice in the courts of Alabama as long as women are excluded from juries, we ask the legislature of Alabama to remove this discrimination against Women.

Education

We urge adequate support for education from the elementary schools through the higher institutions of learning.

We deplore legislative and administrative regulations which hamper the educational offering in Alabama, thus depriving the children and youth of our State of their inherent right to an education as good as any in the land.

We approve of the recent decision of the Alabama Educational Association and the Parent Teachers' Association to demand that adequate funds for the support of education be placed in a trust fund which cannot be diverted to other uses.

Women in Public Office

Since our system of government is one which depends upon the effective operation of representative government, we feel that it is important that all citizens participate actively in political life. We urge; therefore, that the members of our organization take upon themselves the duty of active participation in the political life of their local communities, of the state and of tre nation, first by voting in all elections, second by participating activly in campaigns.

We urge, also, that careful consideration be given to the importance of bringing capable women into office in the state and nation, that we seek out such women in our own organization and in the communities in which we live and urge upon them the acceptance of this responsibility and give them assurance of our support.

Equal Pay For Equal Work

We reaffirm our befilef that efficency and not sex should be the test of merit and reward in the business world and continue our demand that women and men receive equal pay for equal work.

Poll Tax

We believe that democratic government can be maintained only as the participation of all the citizens of the State in that government is made as untrammeled as possible. These present laws on payment of poll taxes hinders such participation in government and we therefore urge that it be modified to permit the establishment of the right to vote by the payment of the poll tax for the year in which the citizens desires to vote.

Resolved that the secretary be instructed to send a copy of this resolution to the governor and to the members of the state legislature.

Disarmament (Introduced and After Lengthy Discussion Voted Down)

We protest against the lavish expenditures for the army and navy. which divert to channels of destruction the money so much needed for the abolition of poverty and ignorance. If this nation is, as we believe it is, a peace loving nation, we are unable to excuse the action of the present Congress in actually increasing the amount of money spent for war preparations. We deplore the votes cast by the members of the Alabama delegation in Congress in support of these appropriations and urge them to consider seriously their responsibility in the matter.

Resolved that copies of this resolution be sent to the senators and the members of the Congressional delegation from Alabama.

Sterilization

We believe that a nation should plan for its citizenry as carefully as it plans any other phase of its life. To this end we advocate sterilization for those people who are considered by competent medical authority to be unfit to become parents. We, therefore, advocate the passage by the state legislature of a sterilization law similar to the one which was introduced into the last session of the legislature.

Since parenthood should in all cases be voluntary and no unwanted children should be brought into the world, we desire to record our support of the law which has been introduced into Congress permitting registered physicians to receive through the mails information regarding birth control. We believe that birth control information should not be classified as obscene literature, but should be considered scientific information.

Resolved that copies of this resolution be sent to the senators and members of the Alabama delegation in Congress.

Suggested form of resolution: RE: Section 213 of National Economy Act.

We, the Alabama State Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs in convention assembled do hereby resolve that,—

"Believing that aptitude, training and efficiency for the job are the only real measuring rods to use to determine the employability of individuals, we favor the repeal of Section 213 of the National Economy Act which is discriminatory in its appliation. We recognize that woman is an effective unit in American life and we deplore any policy which prevents her full contribution to society."

Furthermore, we resolve that copies of this resolution shall be presented to the leaders of the Republican and Democratic parties, asking for their help in securing the inclusion of some such plank in their respective political party platforms.

Resolved: That the legislative chairman of each club be charged with the responsibility of keeping the club members informed regarding the action of the members of the legislature or of the national congress on these matters.

Resolutions Committee,
DR. HALLIE FARMER,
Chairman.

Alabama State Fair in Birmingham September 28 to October 3

Birmingham, Ala.—Keeping in step with the rest of the country in this year of great fairs and celebrations, Alabama will do its part by putting on one of the biggest and finest state fairs in its history at Birmingham, Ala., for 6 days and 6 nights, from Monday, September 28th, to Saturday, October 3rd.

Secretary-Manager P. T. Strieder has just announced that two of the outstanding new features of this year's Alabama State Fair will be a livestock show under the direction of Dr. M. F. Jackson and a huge flower show under the direction of Mr. Roy Marshall, superintendent of Birmingham parks and recreation.

The cattle show will be housed in two buildings 60 feet by 140 feet each. Mr. F. W. Burns of the extension of animal husbandry will be superintendent in charge of the dairy cattle and Mr. R .S. Sugg of the extension of animal husbandry will be superintendent in charge of the beef cattle.

In order to stimulate interest in Alabama's fine livestock, entries will be confined to dairy and beef cattle from the state of Alabama, thereby eliminating competition with professional exhibitors from outside the state. More than three hundred head of cattle are assured thus far for the livestock show.

Two wonderful prizes are to be awarded in connection with the Boy's Calf Club entries . One to the boy whose calf is selected as the champion dairy calf and one to the boy whose calf is selected as the champion beef calf. The prizes will consist of a free, all expense trip to the International Live Stock Show to be held at Chicago from November 28th to December 5th for the boy having the champion beef calf and a choice of an all expense trip to the National Dairy Show at Dallas, Texas, from Otober 10 to 18th, or a trip to the Live Stock Show at Chicago for the boy having the champion dairy calf. Future farmers as well as 4-H club members may compete for awards.

A new building 50 feet by 180 feet which has just been completed will house the huge flower show and plans are underway for beautification of the grounds adjacent to the new flower show building.

Many garden clubs, civic clubs and professional florists have already reserved space, among them being Fraser Floral Company, Alabama Floral Company, Richter Water Gardens, Norton Floral Company, Ensley Garden Club, Bush Hill Garden Club, Women's Civic Club, Tawasi Literary Club, West End Methodist Church Club and the Boy Scout Troup.

Another feature of the flower show will be the first annual Dahlia Show to be held under the auspices of the Dahlia Association of Alabama.

The Dahlia Association of Alabama is affiliated with the American Dahlia Society and was formed for the purpose of stimulating interest in and promoting the culture and development of the Dahlia, especially in the South . All Dahlia growers of Alabama are invited to participate in the Dahlia show and any grower desiring to may join the association.

Additional room has been provided to take care of agricultural exhibits which will be larger than last year. All counties represented with exhibits last year, together with several new counties have already reserved space for this year's fair.

The Women's Department will again be under the direction of Mrs. W .W. Harman, who is also director in charge of the Fine Arts Department. These departments together with the Educational Department will tax the capacity o fthe space available for them.

Still another feature not to be overlooked is the mammoth Florida exhibit which will occupy space on four sides of 40 ft. by 90 ft. It will be made up of parts of the Florida exhibit now at the Great Lakes Exposition at Cleveland, augmented by additional displays to be sent to the Alabama State Fair direct from various sections of the state of Florida.

This year's premium book, an 88 page book giving full information on entries in the different departments is now off the press and ready for mailing. Copies may be secured by addressing Manager P. T. Strieder, Alabama State Fair Birmingham, Alabama .

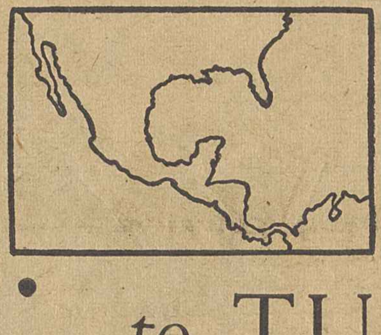
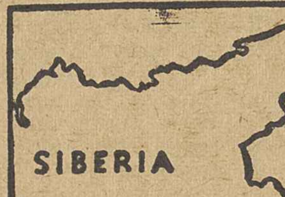
From the Romantic



GULF of MEXICO to TURUKHANSK, Siberia (as the crow flies)



FROM reading the newspapers you'd think that rural electrification is something brand-new. Yet, if you were to take the rural lines built by this Company since it pioneered rural electrification away back in 1923 and place them in a straight line, they would reach from Mobile, Ala., across Mt. McKinley, Alaska, and into the Bering Sea.

And then, if you'd extend the line to include the 3,000 miles of rural electric lines included in our present construction program, you'd find yourself ending up in the vicinity of Turukhansk on the Yenisei River in Siberia.

Or, if you don't like the direction we suggest, try extending our rural electric lines southwestward from Mobile and you'd be near Cuyaba, Brazil, when you came to the end of the line. Perhaps you'd prefer extending the lines eastward across the Atlantic Ocean and North Africa. If so, you'd find yourself near Tripoli on the Mediterranean Sea when you finished.

So you see thousands of Alabama farmers have been enjoying electric service for years, long before "rural electrification" became a political catch phrase. Rural electrification is nothing new with us. We went through the "experimentation" period years ago. When our present construction program is completed, we will have built 6,100 miles of rural lines! And by that time we'll probably be extending them further.

Your Voice CAN Travel More Quickly Than Ever

THE average time required to complete all long distance telephone calls is now only 1.5 minutes, as compared to 7.5 minutes in 1925. Place a long distance call, and almost every time the connection will be made at once, while you hold the receiver to your ear.

While the speed of the service has been steadily increased, the cost remains low. New operating methods and improved equipment have made the service as clear and convenient as on local calls.

Bettering the service while extending hours for reduced rates and actually decreasing the cost have prompted many customers to comment to the operators or write to the Company expressing appreciation of the service and surprise at the low cost.

You, too, will be pleased with the speed, clearness and low cost of long distance telephone service. Use it to keep in touch with friends, relatives and business associates in other cities.

For information, just call the "long distance" operator.

Memory of McGraw and Earlier Days Crowds Out Present

WHEN memories stick with you while you should be doing something else, there is only one solution. So you are stuck with them today:

The time when Benny Leonard, who must have weighed 160 pounds, was obtaining publicity for his vaudeville tour by letting it be known that he might soon defend his lightweight title. His very proper indignation when I suggested that my customers might be easier to convince if he would stand on the scales and indicate which leg he was willing to have cut off so that he could reduce to the 135-pound limit.

* * *

There was the year when I was a very young and wise apprentice reporter in Baltimore. Then I thought that all New York sports writers must be phonies. That was because of a firm belief that such names as Damon Runyon, Bozeman Bulger, Hype Igoe could not possibly be real.

* * *

There was the time when I first met John McGraw. A ninth-inning decision had cost the Giants a ball game while they were battling for a pennant late in the season. Naturally I expected to hear numerous inside facts concerning baseball and umpires. Instead he took me in to dinner and devoted two hours to talking about the high cost of steam yachts and the pleasure that might be obtained by owning one. Not once during the evening did he refer to the ball game or the decision that had meant its loss to the Giants.

John McGraw

* * *

The time when, after a very delightful evening with Jim Thorpe, I shook hands with him at 5 A. M. and solemnly promised that his football career would be crowned by an opportunity to play against Bradley in the professional contest that afternoon. The memory that Jim, although already somewhat old and rather fat, played a swell game. I forget the rest.

* * *

The baseball club which was somewhat annoyed at the way a star was conducting his spring training. The daily search that was made of his room while he was at the ball park and the private detective who trailed him until he went to the room at nights. The wondering as to why the star always appeared so shaky the next morning. The night I looked out the window and saw the very obscure rookie who roomed directly above the star dangling a quart bottle on the end of a rope.

* * *

That year in Baltimore when I inaugurated the city amateur boxing championship tournament which has been copied so profitably elsewhere since then. The bootlegger who withdrew his son from the finals because he became angry at the army captain who was representing the A. A. U. as master of ceremonies. The Police department team which went on a sympathetic strike along with the gentleman who sold very good stuff at 50 cents a shot.

* * *

That year when there was so much talk about the International league being a one-man enterprise and Judge Landis' official pronouncement that such tales were all the bunk. The great self-restraint I used in not revealing that a few days previously I had been in the same room while Jack Dunn, officially the Baltimore owner, had issued orders which fired an umpire, two Jersey City ball players and one from Newark. The fact that I spent two hours in persuading Dunnie, who was a wee bit excitable at times, that he should not also fire the president of the league.

* * *

That evening when Wladek Zbyszko threw Renato Gardini at me because somehow I became so suspicious as to hint that all wrestling matches are not made in heaven.

* * *

The time when the very agreeable Bradley agreed to box a four-round exhibition for charity and discovered, too late, that the setup was Kid Williams, who was just getting over being bantamweight champion of the world.

NOT IN THE BOX SCORE:

THE weaker clubs will make a determined fight for a share the wealth plan when the major leagues meet next winter. They claim that they provide half the show even when they visit Yankee stadium. So, they argue, visiting clubs should get a better break than the 20 cents on each paid admission arrangement which has been in effect since the 1890's . . . Sam McQuade, who now makes matches at the Garden, once was an altar boy . . . Uncle Sam's roving poloists have definitely decided not to enter a team in the Olympics, but the British, seeking consolation for their Westchester Cup defeat, will send the same 32-goal side to Berlin . . . Pete Gilhooly, Scotland's celebrated all around athlete, now trains the Flushing Juniors, runners-up in the Empire State Junior (soccer) league.

* * *

Don Petrin, the light-heavyweight, wants the world to know that he now is the daddy of a nine-pound boy. Also that, because he needs more dough than can be had in his father-in-law's bakery, he would like to receive some fight offers . . . It costs $3,000 a night to stage those midget auto races in the Garden bowl . . . International league writers and managers put on even better scraps than the ball clubs. Right now Pilot Vitt of Newark is being panned because he is too hard boiled, while Guy Sturdy of the Orioles gets a blast for being too easy going . . . Al Lane, star Hill school fullback and brother of the former Princeton football captain, has just failed to receive the proper nod from the entrance committee at Old Nassau. He still has a chance to make the grade in the fall.

* * *

Dr. Bier, the Pompton Lakes health farmer, claims a record at which all other fight camp proprietors can aim. During the sixteen years he has been conducting the place, no referee ever has counted ten over a main bout performer who trained there . . . One of the more vigorous fight squabbles now concerns the Braddock-Schmeling picture rights . . . If the Garden gets the show Harry Voiler probably will get the call. If it is under Hearst A. C. auspices the break will go to the justly celebrated Bill Duffy . . . Possible successors to the late Charley Knapp as president of the International league are either Secretary Willie Manley or Umpire in Chief Bill Carpenter.

Ruppert Has Heaviest Insurance on Stadium

Colonel Ruppert carries more insurance (a bigger sum and more different varieties) on Yankee stadium than does any other big-time club owner . . . When Charlotte Epstein skipped the Olympic trials she set some kind of a record. It was the first major swimming meet in these parts that the very capable coach has missed in years . . . In Detroit they whisper that Mickey Cochrane and Schoolboy Rowe are so far apart temperamentally, that, for the good of all concerned, the potentially great pitcher will be traded this winter . . . Jimmy Calleran of the Bushwicks soon will dangle a little second-sacker on his knee. . . . Although he is not quite so brash when speaking for publication, Coach Al Ulbrickson confides to friends that Washington's Olympic crew will crack the record set by the 1928 California boat.

Col. Ruppert

* * *

The biggest bettor at metropolitan tracks is a young man who once seemed to be headed toward golfing stardom. He plops down as much as 50 C's on a race . . . Aside from the fact that the best Cards' farm outfielder is a Joe Medwick type of kid named Lou Scoffic, the Dodgers gave away a lot of weight when they traded the giant Earnshaw. Eddie Morgan, who eventually will arrive at Brooklyn as part of that deal, is 5 feet 9 inches tall and weighs 160 pounds. It is because they are overstocked with one-base-hitting guys of that size that the Dodgers are in the cellar now . . . In addition to being a distinguished surgeon, Dr. G. Randolph Manning is one of the grand old men of soccer. He was the first president of the U. S. F. A.

* * *

At dinner recently when a group of very well-informed baseball men were discussing the merits of the two major leagues this proposition was set forth: "The Cubs won the pennant last year while the Yankees finished second in their own loop. Suppose you owned the Yankees and, during the winter, you were told that you could have the pick of the Cubs to strengthen your club. Leave pitchers and Di Maggio out of it. This is a deal where you would have to swap a regular for a regular." The unanimous answer to that was that the difference between their ages might make a Billy Herman-Tony Lazzeri deal verry attractive. Otherwise the American leaguers could not improve themselves.

"Indeed, sir," answered the applicant in a reassuring tone, "it will take very little to keep me busy."

U. S. ARMY GETTING "WAR" TEST

Newest Developments in Fighting Equipment Are Tested in Giant Maneuvers Held in Middle West.

By WILLIAM C. UTLEY

WAR has come to the Middle West—a hypothetical war that raises no fear of ravage and pillage in the civilian population but rather permits them to see what manner of defense their army has prepared for them. But to the soldiery in Illinois, Wisconsin, Michigan, Indiana, Ohio, Kentucky and West Virginia it is war in grim earnest for it is the basis for the August maneuvers of the SECOND ARMY.

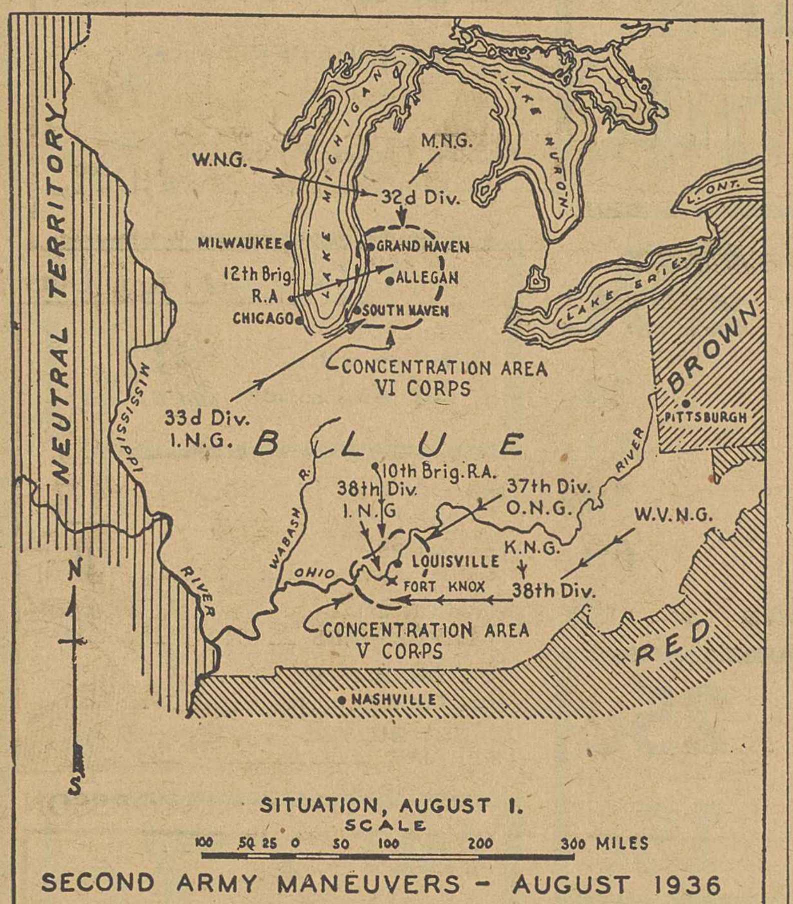
The maneuvers represent — in a short period of time — a complete cycle of mobilization, concentration, training, operation and demobilization, Major General Charles E. Kilbourne, commanding general, explained in outlining the purpose and plan of the field exercises.

While the problem as a whole simulates a conflict between hypothetical Red, Blue and Brown states, with Green as a neutral, its principal purpose is to provide training, and not to be a formal test of training. Whatever units the umpires from time to time may declare have won or lost a decision, all of the troops should benefit greatly from the character of training these maneuvers make possible.

Will Use Modern Methods

In total number of troops involved and in territory covered, these exercises are the most extensive ever held in the Middle West in peace time, General Kilbourne pointed out. The training problem involves the use of the most modern weapons and facilities available and also is the first in this area to give special emphasis to the employment of aviation and mechanized units. Large numbers of Illinois and Wisconsin troops must be transported across Lake Michigan. Units charged with responsibility for supply and communications operate over longer distances than in the field training of former years. Night operations are being conducted and attention given throughout the exercises to the tactical value of the element of surprise.

The entire maneuver is based on situations that are moving, rather than static. By provision of faster means of transportation and by reduction of weights carried, a systematic effort is being made to increase the mobility of troops, in action and behind the lines.



Map Showing the Area Covered by the Maneuvers.

The conditions set up for the maneuver assume that, after a period of strained relations, an outbreak of hostilities occurs between Blue—a state comprising Illinois, Wisconsin, Michigan, Indiana, Ohio, Kentucky, and West Virginia, and Red, an "enemy" state, including Tennessee and Virginia and extending southeastward. Brown, a state which includes Pennsylvania and territory to the east and north, is friendly toward Red and later becomes its ally against Blue. Green, a large neutral state, comprises territory west of the Mississippi river.

Will Use 40,000 Troops

In the first phase of the maneuver the V corps of the Second army (Blue) conducts an offensive in the direction of Nashville, the Red capital. In the second phase the VI corps of the Blue army begins its offensive toward the Brown capital of Pittsburgh, ending its march at Camp Custer, near Battle Creek, Michigan. The principal elements of Red and Brown troops will be represented by units of the recently organized GHQ (General Headquarters) Air force and the new mechanized cavalry. Upwards of 40,000 troops are participating.

It is the largest concentration of troops in the middle west since the World war, and represents the most extensive employment, under field conditions, of aviation and the Mechanized force ever witnessed in the United States.

Frequently called "the laboratory of the army" the "Mechanized force" is the agency through which the United States army is keeping abreast of developments in mechanization and motorization.

Consisting of the mechanized First cavalry; the First battalion, Sixty-eighth field artillery (mechanized); First battalion, Nineteenth field artillery (motorized), the Fifteenth observation squadron, air corps; together with maintenance and supply units, the "Mechanized force" consists of a small compact organization of great mobility and striking power.

This force is under the command of Col. Bruce Palmer, First cavalry. Artillery officers and commander of artillery is Lieut. Col. A. C. Sandeford, Sixty-eighth field artillery. The force as constituted for the maneuver includes 117 officers and 1,841 enlisted men. Its equipment includes armored cars, combat cars (light, fast tanks), cross-country personnel carriers armed with machine guns and automatic rifles. The tables of organization call for 88 combat vehicles for a mechanized cavalry regiment.

The First cavalry, mechanized, has two combat car squadrons, each with two ten-car troops. It also has a machine gun troop of 16 cars armed with 53, .30 cal. guns and 13, .50 cal. guns, and a 16-car reconnaissance troop.

Trend Is Toward Mobility

Brig. Gen. C. D. Herron, chief of staff, in commenting on the employment of the Mechanized force in the army maneuvers points to the fact that the trend of all tactics today involves mechanization, motorization, greater speed and greater mobility.

In order to keep abreast of developments in foreign countries, the army is experimenting with this mechanized force. Great progress has been made in developing combat vehicles that can travel at high speed both on the road and across country.

Mechanized units, however, are sensitive to ground conditions. Streams form serious obstacles. Destruction of bridges and critical road points greatly hinders such a force. And always a mechanized or motorized unit is dependent on the gasoline supply.

In spite of these limiting factors the Mechanized force, with its heavily armed vehicles, each capable of tremendous shock and fire power are of growing importance in the development of our national defense.

Constant radio communication from car to car gives the commander a complete picture of the location of his force at all times and permits complete control of the unit.

Mechanized forces can make deep incursions into enemy territory as illustrated in the rapid movement of the unit from the Fort Knox, Kentucky, area to Camp Custer.

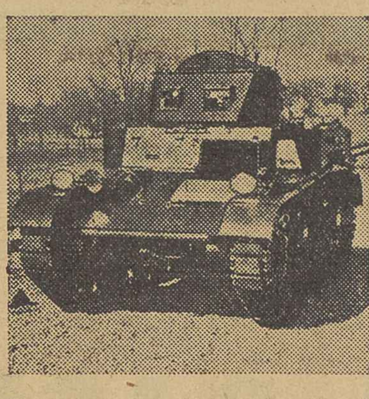
Study Aircraft Effectiveness

Much interest is being shown in the effectiveness of the participating aircraft and the anti-aircraft defenses. Until actually tested by war, it is impossible to state whether the attack by aircraft or the defense against such attack has made the most progress.

In war every development of method or material for offensive operations automatically leads to the development of means of defense against attack by such methods or with such materials, experts point out.

In the beginning of the World war aviation was utilized almost entirely for observation missions. Gradually, however, its potentiality for the offensive was recognized and towards the end of the World war the attack on installations, cities and troops on the grounds became daily occurrences.

Efforts to develop a defense against these attacks, other than with aircraft, were decidedly lame until the closing months of the war, when improvements in anti-aircraft artillery and the establishment of balloon barrages seemed to have had a considerable deterring effect, and the percentage of planes brought down was rapidly increasing.



One of the New "Motorized Army" Units.

Following the World war great emphasis was given both to the development of aircraft for offensive operations and to the defensive means. These defensive means are now divided into an active defense and a passive defense. In Europe and in Japan, training of civilians in the so-called passive defense against air attack is being undertaken. We read of cities being darkened during simulated bombardment from the air; of civilians being required to use gas masks; of fire departments and other civil organizations being drilled in protection of property and personnel, and instructions as to methods of preparing effective cover. These exercises are apparently made very real. The object is not only to save lives, but to organize and drill the people so that panic may not add to the actual danger of an attack.

Active Defense Elaborate

The active defense against enemy aircraft consists of pursuit airplanes to attack the bombers of an enemy, of anti-aircraft guns, machine guns and searchlights to be disposed around installation offering a proper objective for air attack, and an aircraft warning service consisting of a net of properly equipped observation stations with a system of communication insuring that the aircraft and the anti-aircraft services are alerted in time to meet threatened attack.

Much has been written of the great advance in aviation and the weapons installed on military aircraft. These improvements extend, of course, to the aircraft designed for operations especially against bombers.

Less is generally known of the development of the anti-aircraft artillery. There has been marked improvement in the type of anti-aircraft guns. The three-inch guns can maintain a fire at the rate of twenty shots a minute, with an effective altitude of over twenty thousand feet. The fifty caliber machine gun, firing six hundred rounds a minute, is effective against any aircraft operating at low or medium altitudes.

New Gun Perfected

Another automatic weapon for anti-aircraft use, the 37-millimeter gun, has been perfected but regiments have not, as yet, been supplied with them. This gun has a maximum vertical range of 15,000 feet, fires a shell that will explode on contact with the fabric of an airplane. It fires at the rate of eighty rounds a minute.

The searchlights used are eight hundred million candle power. Their range is, of course, dependent upon the state of the weather. However, the greatest improvement of material has been in the development of instruments simple of operation, which control by electricity the setting of the gun so that the projectile will meet the plane in flight and also operate the fuse setter to insure that the projectile bursts at the right instant.

Until actually tested by war, it is impossible to state whether the attack by aircraft, or the defense against such attack, has made the most progress. We can state with assurance, however, that both are vastly more efficient than at the close of the World war.

★★★By VIRGINIA VALE★★★

IRENE DUNN has just returned from Europe with a lot of interesting information regarding the famous Madame Curie, whom she will portray on the screen.

Most of us have thought of the famous scientist as a solemn sort of person, but Irene has discovered that she most decidedly had a lighter side. For example, she was the best dancer in her village, and loved music.

Incidentally, Irene has drawn another plum out of the motion picture pie. One of the three pictures which she is to do for Paramount is "The Count of Luxembourg." Gladys Swarthout seemed to be all set for it, but, although she is beautiful and has a lovely voice, she is not too good in pictures. Her technique seems to be better suited to opera than to the screen.

Marlene Dietrich finally got off to New York and then to Europe, with 19 trunks, (she took an extra room on the train for the trunks, so that they'd be handy whenever she wanted to change), various servants and attendants, and her daughter.

Interviewed on her arrival in New York, she said all the right things—that American women were the most beautiful in the world, that Garbo was her favorite actress, etc.

Marlene Dietrich

If you love thrills and automobile racing, be sure to see "Speed," with James Stewart and Wendy Barrie. Young Mr. Stewart is climbing fast, perhaps because he's so natural, perhaps because all of us who go to pictures seem to be getting tired of too-handsome men.

As for Wendy Barrie, she is charming. Incidentally, she's been seen around again with the young millionaire whom rumor had her all set to marry when she landed on these shores.

Warren Hull is both resourceful and sensible. His young sons wanted a swimming pool, but Hull is one movie actor who refuses to have a pool (and what with the cost of the pool and the cost of keeping it filled, who can blame him?)

So he did what fathers all over the land have done; had a tank built, seven by nine, that can be filled easily with the garden hose, and now everybody's happy.

Joan Crawford's favorite records are no longer those made by Bing Crosby. She's switched to operatic recordings, and likes to sing along with the soloist.

And as for Bing—"Pennies from Heaven" is his next picture, and he's doing good work in it. His family is all settled in their new home, his horses are settled at his ranch, he's established as a big attraction on the radio—and how's that for a lad who'd never amount to anything, according to the prophets of not so many years ago?

Auto trailers are becoming more and more popular in the movie colony. Twentieth Century-Fox went in for them heavily a while ago — the Jones family used six to get to the location site of "See America First," and during the making of the location scenes of "Ramona" Loretta Young, Kent Taylor and Director Henry lived in them.

Loretta Young

Somebody had the "Ramona" cast worried by arranging for some peacocks to be used in the picture—not that anyone would come right out and admit being superstitious, of course, but they all recalled the fact that peacocks are supposed to bring bad luck.

So—somebody else just "forgot" to bring the peacocks along.

ODDS AND ENDS . . . Don't blame me if you miss "The Ex-Mrs. Bradford"—it's great . . . Cora Sue Collins has autographs from all the famous folk she's worked with . . . Evelyn Venable recently bought her infant daughter her first bonnet—but the baby won't wear it . . . George O'Brien is working hard on "Daniel Boone" . . . George Raft is going to try his hand at pictures in England . . . Claudette Colbert and Clark Gable did their hitch-hiking scene from "It Happened One Night" at the Actors' benefit show the other night and the audience all but rolled in the aisles . . . Maureen O'Sullivan may marry John Farrow when "Tarzan" is completed . . . The next Quintuplets picture will be "Reunion," with Jean Hersholt again playing a doctor.

Sanitation Pays in Raising Hogs

Quarters, Feeding, Handling—Important Points as Economy Measure.

By PROF JOHN P. WILLIAMS New York State College of Agriculture. —WNU Service.

The hog has been called "an animal that deserves its name," but when it comes to economy in converting feed into edible meat, the hog excels all other farm animals

As one of the best housekeepers, a hog will keep his quarters clean if given a chance. He should not be criticized too severely for digging holes in the ground or for wallowing in the mud, because this is the only way the hog has to cool himself.

Swine are not equipped with so many sweat glands as are other farm animals, and for this reason they like to dampen their bodies to become cool.

Many farmers would undoubtedly find that their hogs would be more profitable with more sanitary quarters and better feeding and handling. Every breeder should aim to produce the type of pig that feeders, breeders, and butchers demand, and he should do his best to enable his swine to convert as economically as possible the various feeds suitable for swine into food for human use.

Plenty of Water, Salt, Life-Saver for Horses

Sudden hot weather, intense and continued for days, usually brings reports of horses being lost from over-heating. This is unnecessary. Good horsemen do not lose horses, no matter how hot the weather may be.

The Horse and Mule Association of America advises taking a couple of barrels of water, on a wagon or stoneboat, to the field, and allowing the horses opportunity to drink at the end of each hour. If this is done, and the animals are allowed access to all the salt they want in stables, or in pastures when turned out at night, heat losses will not occur.

The same plan—plenty of water and all the salt they want—allowed to men who work about coke ovens, where the temperature is about 135 degrees, has stopped heat prostrations among men. It works, with men or with horses, and is so simple, so easily adopted, that there is no excuse for losing horses from overheating, no matter how hot the weather is.

Common sense in working animals, water every hour and all the salt the animals want, is all good horsemen use in handling their work animals in hot weather. It will save work stock from heat prostrations.

Foot Rot in Sheep

Foot rot in sheep is a chronic infectious disease of the tissues of the foot, and remains more or less localized to that area. The economic importance of foot rot lies in the severe losses which the owner sustains from a long period of inactivity of the infected animals from the loss of body weight, from decreased wool clip, from the diminished milk production at lambing time, and from the probable infection of the newborn and others.

Music for Milk

"Music hath charms to soothe the savage breast"—and to make cows give more milk. A farmer in a village on the German-Czechoslovakian frontier plays the concertina every morning to his cows. He first noticed that one refractory animal became docile when it heard the strains of the concertina, and applying this lesson to the other cows found that they submitted more readily to milking and gave increased yields.

loss in local revenue is due to the reduction in assessed valuation of property. In addition, the elementary and high schools are receiving about $1,400,000 less from fees, gifts and donations from city councils and county boards of revenue than in 1929-30.

How much additional revenue must the State provide in order to pay state appropriations to education in full? It will require approximately $3,800,000 additional revenue to pay the appropriations for elementary, secondary, and higher education and a total of approximately $4,000,000 for elementary, secondary, higher, and miscellaneous educational agencies. When these appropriations are paid in full, the common schools will have $1,700,000 less money available for their operation, and the colleges will have $1,400,000 less money available annually than in 1929-30. Eduation is reasonable in its requests. It is actually asking for $3,100,000 less money than was available in 1929-30. On the present basis with the State failing to pay its appropriations in full, public education is being forced to operate on approximately $7,000,000 less than was available in 1929-30. This is not economy, it is destruction.

Are the schools of Alabama extravagant? To one acquainted with school costs generally in the United States, this question is ridiculous. Alabama is being pointed out thoughout the United States as one of the states doing the least for her children. Data furnished by the United States Office of Education and scattered over the entire country shows that Alabama teachers are among the poorest paid in the nation, that our school term is one of the shortest, that our children attend school in practically the least expensive and poorest equipped buildings in the country, that we are one of the most illiterate states, etc. To prolong this recital is but to cause a continuous blush of shame. The whole picture is summed up in this one figure: The average current expense per pupil in average daily attendance in the United States is approximately $70 per year, and in Alabama only $23 per year. Thus we spend on the education of our children only one-third as much as is spent on the average child in the United States.

Can Alabama afford to educate its children? Frequently we hear the complaint that we are a poor state and that we just can't afford to pay any more money for education. That sounds plausible until one stops to consider as I have already pointed out that we are spending about three times as much on gasoline as on our common schools, and $2,000,000 more for tobacco than for our elementary and high schools. Furthermore, the most recent estimates based on data furnished by the National Education Association show that Alabama is spending a lower proportion of its total income for public education than the average state. Alabama is spending only $2.76 per cent of its income for public education while the average for the United States is 3.54 per cent. One often hears the unsupported statement that Alabama is a "tax ridden" state, yet data furnished by the National Education Association and the Tax Policy League of New York City indicate that the taxpayers of Alabama pay a smaller proportion of their total income for state and local taxes for all purposes than any state in the Union, excepting Georgia, and that property taxes are lower in Alabama when equated to other states on a real valuation basis than any state in the Union with the exception of Virginia.

We have heard much about conservation of resources in recent years. The best conservation measure we could adopt would be to raise enough revenue to support an efficient school sfstem and conserve our human resources. An educated citizenry will develop and conserve our soil, our minerals, and our industries. A policy of this sort will develop the State economically, socially, and morally.

In conclusion, these are the facts before us: Revenues for public education have decreased $7,000,000 since 1929-30 and attendance and enrollment have increased, our children are facing the shortest school terms in the nation, education has economized to the point of destruction, Alabama is making less effort to support education than the average state, we can afford to provide for our children because we have money to spend for other things, our taxes are among the lowest in the nation and education is asking only $4,000,000 additional reenue in order to operate our schools on a minimum basis. Why, that is less than one-fourth of the money we are spending on tobacco. Could any one in his right mind truthfully claim that we cannot afford to do this much or more for our children? The record is before you and the issue clear. Any citizen who will make an unbiased study of the facts will be forced to conclude that the program for education is minimum and too economical. Fathers and mothers, I beg of you that you study your schools and learn the facts for yourselves. Education is not something that we can drop out of our program today and incorporate again when times get better. If denied today it can never be regained and the effect will be disastrous for ages to come. When schools close short of full terms, we permanently handicap hundreds of thousands of children for the future.

We cannot afford the high cost of ignorance in a democracy for it means the very destruction of democracy. Thomas Jefferson realized this when he wrote to a friend in 1816: "If a nation expects to be ignorant and free in a state of civilization, it expects what never was and never will be." Again he said, "Educate and inform the mass of people. Enable them to see that it is to their interest to preserve peace and order, and they will preserve them . . . . "They are the only sure reliance for the preservation of our liberty."

Further benefits derived from this vast system will be brought direct to their customers.

All fixtures are of modern design and made from California Magnolia with fir and maple panels, beautifully finished in Cherry Mahogany. All painting and carpentry work as well as installation of fixtures will be done by local labor

Mr. W. A. Shepherd, store engineer for the Ben Franklin Stores organization has been in Montevallo several days completing plans for the modernization of Mr. Hick's store, which will probably be completed by the first week in October. Mr. Shepherd said today there would be a full carload of fixtures shipped over the Southern Railway.

New Beauty Shop For Montevallo

The Times has been authorized to announce this week that on September the first one of the most modern and complete beauty shops in Alabama will be open for business in Montevallo. This business, to be known as the Modern Beauty Shop, will be located on Main Street in the building next door to the Strand Theatre. It has been announced that only the most sanitary and the most modern equipment will be installed in this new shop.

Mrs. W. C. Robinson, widely known as one of Clanton's progressive business women, is the proprietor and promoter of this new business. Montevallo should be proud to welcome Mrs. Robinson and her business enterprise.

While here a short while Tuesday, Mrs. Robinson stated that three of Alabama's expert women operators will be connected with the beauty shop here, all of whom have had considerable experience in this work.

The building is now being prepared for the new equipment, which includes modern sterilizers, and every new device that makes for efficiency and comfort. Further announcement will be made next week.

CIVIC CLUB

The regular meeting of the Montevallo Civic Club was held Wednesday noon at the Baptist Church. Dr. H. W. Vaughan, president of the club, presided.

Dr. J. Alex Moore, chairman of the Hospitality Committee, presented a resolution of appreciation for the services rendered the club and the community by Mr. Lucien Giddens during his three years residence in Montevallo as executive secretary of Alabama College. The resolution received the hearty endorsement of the club, and brought a beautiful expression of thanks from Mr Giddens.

Dr. A. F. Harman made a short and most impressive talk upon the presentation to club members of the recently released view book of Alabama College. Quoting from the book he said, "Montevallo, gracious, hospitable, comely in its setting of ancient trees, has always furnished an harmonious background for the College and kept pace with its development".

Mr. W. A. Cone, director of the Works Progress Administration of a group of counties, Shelby among them, was presented as the guest speaker for the occasion. Briefly Mr. Cone outlined the plan of operation of W. P. A., and invited questions about projects which the community of Montevallo might be interested in fostering. Out of the discussion that followed, it was indicated that Montevallo possibly will set up a program in the near future for the operation of one or two community development plans that are possible under the present works program. Committee of the club have these matters under advisement.

At the conclusion of Wednesday's meeting, president Vaughan announced the formation of the following committees of the club.

Shaw, H. T. Davis, Ike Nathews; town development, Dr. J. I. Reid, S. M. Mahan, A. F. Harman, M. P. Jeter, L. E. Shaw.

Dairy Farmers To Meet Aug. 25

The Baker Dairy Farm near Dargin has done a good job of building permanent pasture, as well as land building, by planting vetch, Austrian peas and crimson clover.

To study pasture building, land building, terracing, alfalfa hay production and see the fine dairy herd, I am asking you to come to this meeting at 2 o'clock Tuesday afternoon, August 25, at the Baker Dairy Farm.

I want to urge both farmers and business men to join us in observing the practices of this farm as it will be a real inspiration to all. —A. A. Lauderdale, county agent.

Cotton Leaf Pest Has Appeared

The cotton leaf worm has made its appearance throughout Shelby County, and I want to take this opportunity to advise all cotton farmers to be on guard, as these worms can practically destroy the late cotton.

The leaf worm can be controlled by using calcium arsenate at the rate of five to seven pounds per acre as a dust. When these worms appear in large numbers, the poison should be applied immediately. Dust guns can be used, or the poison applied by fastening bags on the end of a pole. When a bag is used poison can be saved by adding about nine pounds of lime to each pound of arsenate.

The most important thing is to be on guard and not let the worms get the cotton before poison is applied.—A. A. Lauderdale, county agent.

Acker Nominated For Mayor

COUNCIL CANDIDATES ALSO NAMED AT MEETING ON MONDAY NIGHT

A mass meeting of citizens of Montevallo was held at the Baptist Church Monday night for the purpose of nominating candidates for Mayor and Councilmen. Fifty-five qualified voters of the Town were present. Prof. J. L. Appleton was elected chairman, and F. H. Frost, secretary.

After considerable discussion, it was determined that blank ballots would be distributed to the voters present, and that each one would write the name of his or her nomination for Mayor; that these votes would be canvassed, and if any one person received a majority, that one would be declared the choice of the group for nominee for Mayor; that if no one received a majority, then the two highest would be voted on again, and the one receiving the majority would be the nominee.

According to this agreement, voting proceeded, and when the ballots were counted, Mr. Bob Reid, one of the committee named to count the votes, returned to the assembly and announced that Dr. Charles T. Acker had received a majority of the votes.

Dr. Acker was called on for a speech, which was made, as follows: "Ladies and Gentlemen: I am going to prove to you that I can make a short speech. I thank you very much for your expression of confidence."

For candidates for Councilmen, nominations were made from the floor, as follows:

Stanley Mahan, Dr. Hallie Farmer, J. A. Brown, C. G. Sharpe, F. P. Givhan, L. D. Gilbert, M. P. Jeter, Dr. A. W. Vaughan, Milton Jeter, F. W. Rogan, Dr. J. I. Reid. Dr. Vaughan requested that his name be withdrawn, which request was assented to by the nominator. We were informed Wednesday that Mr. Frost had withdrawn, and it is rumored that some others will do likewise.

It is interesting to note the fact that the women of the Town are concerned about having one of their group serve as a member of the Council. And it will be universally accepted as a most appropriate action that one of the ability and qualifications of Dr. Hallie Farmer has been nominated for this important position.

The law providing for regulating the livestock industry in the state was passed by the last session of the state legislature.

Plans are also being made for the organization of an Alabama Livestock Producers Association to promote and improve the livestock industry in the state, reports Dr. R. S. Sugg, extension livestock specialist.

All persons interested in the livestock industry in the state are invited to attend this meeting, says Mr. Goode.

Mr. James Black, Robert James Glasscock and Mrs. Cutler Smith are visiting friends and relatives in Decatur and Town Creek.

Plans Made For Radio Course

TO BE OFFERED BY COLLEGE BEGINNING IN MONTH OF SEPTEMBER

Plans have been announced for a radio course in "The Child and Society", to be offered by Alabama College, beginning in September. Those wishing to take part in discussion groups should communicate with the Alabama College Radio Group and secure weekly copies of the tables with questions and behavior situations for discussion purposes.

A radio group will be accepted by the Alabama Congress of Parents and Teachers as a study group. It is the wish of the organization to develop at least one radio group in every county in the State.

On each Tuesday afternoon for a period of twelve weeks the following topics will be considered in order as a part of the main headings: Why Study the Child, Who Educates the Child, The Child in the Changing School, The Child in the Changing Home, What the School Expects of the Home, What the Home Expects of the School, Helping the Exceptional Child to Adjust, Servants influence on the Child, How the Child Gets Religion, Effects of Parental Attitude, How to Prevent Spoiling the Child, and Helping the Child Face Success and Failure.

This program of work is under the direction of Mrs. Pearl B. Crawford, Field Worker in Parent Education, Alabama College.

P. D. Pendleton reports an interesting trip with his family to the Birmingham district last Sunday. He was very much impressed with the mud houses that are being ereted by the resettlement administration in the vicinity of Gardendale. They are constructed of topsoil dirt packed into forms. One of these houses, he says is eighteen degrees cooler than an ordinary house. The roofs are flat, floors of concrete, with linoleum covering, and all French doors.

News Review of Current Events the World Over

United States Won't Interfere in Spanish Civil War—Crop Control May Be Dropped by AAA—Jeffersonian Democrats Organize.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union.

EFFORTS of European nations, notably France, to persuade the United States to join in a neutrality pact concerning the civil war in Spain are not likely to succeed. However it is the intention of our government not to interfere in the situation in any way whatsoever. Instructions to this effect were sent to all American representatives in Spain by William Phillips, acting secretary of state. While asserting that the American neutrality law prohibiting assistance to warring nations does not apply to the Spanish civil war, Mr. Phillips said that the United States intended to conform with its "well established policy of noninterference with internal affairs in other countries, either in time of peace or civil strife."

W. Phillips

Most of the nations invited to participate in the non-intervention agreement were willing, but Germany temporarily blocked the plan by announcing that its answer would be delayed until Madrid gave a satisfactory reply to German protests regarding the execution of four German nationals in Barcelona. France set August 17 as the deadline for completion of the agreement, and it was expected that, if general neutrality failed, the French government would lend aid to the Leftist government at Madrid.

Dispatches from Seville said General Franco, rebel commander-in-chief, had received a large number of German and Italian planes manned by aviators from those countries, and was about to launch an attack on Madrid from the air. The fighting for possession of San Sebastian and in the mountain passes north of Madrid continued unabated and losses were heavy on both sides. General Queipo, rebel commander at Seville, announced he was about to adopt new colors of the rebellion, red and yellow, which are the colors of the Spanish monarchy.

OFFICIALS of the agricultural adjustment administration discussed in Washington the advisability of drastically reducing or removing altogether the planting restrictions on corn and wheat next year. No decision was made and farmers will be consulted before any changes are ordered. It was, however, definitely stated that wheat acreage will be expanded.

Secretary of Agriculture Wallace, passing through Chicago on his way back from Iowa, said he believed government-controlled crop insurance would prevent wild price fluctuations in farm produce. The plan, he said, has not progressed beyond the embryo stage, but probably would entail storage of crops in government granaries. Each farmer, depending on the percentage of his normal crop he wished to insure, would make his "insurance" payments in the form of bushels to be stored in a common pool.

The plan, preventing "lean years and fat years," would tend to stabilize market prices because it would assure a continual adequate supply of whatever commodity was to be insured. Gradually, he said, it might be worked out to include all major farm produce.

FIGURES compiled by Dun & Bradstreet for July show a decline in commercial failures to the lowest figures since 1920, and a continuation of the rate of decline was shown for the first week of August.

On the basis of an index kept by the agency since the end of 1932, July insolvencies were at the annual rate of 38.2 for each 10,000 firms in business. It compared with 44.6 in June and 52.8 in July, 1935. In January, 1933, as business was heading for the banking holiday, it was above 170.

July failures numbered 639, a figure exceeded on the downside only twice for the month since 1894 despite the growth of population and business in the meanwhile. It compared with 902 in the same month last year and 2,596 in July, 1932, around the peak of the depression liquidation movement.

For the year to August 6 failures totaled 6,157 against 7,355 in the corresponding 1935 months, a drop of 16.3 per cent.

FOLLOWING a conference of President Roosevelt, Chairman Harrison of the senate finance committee, Chairman Doughton of the house ways and means committee and Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau, the administration's fiscal program for the coming year was thus outlined:

1. Assurance that no request will be made to the next congress for the levying of additional taxes or increase of present tax rates.

2. Launching of an immediate study by treasury and congressional tax consultants of present revenue laws as a basis for recommendations to the next congress for elimination of inequitable taxes, especially those unfair "to consumers or to trade."

3. Treasury assurance that "with continued recovery" the revenue yield is approaching the point where it will cover government costs and provide a surplus for reduction of the public debt.

Mr. Roosevelt then started on a three-day trip to the vicinity of Johnstown, Pa., where he talked over flood control problems with Governor Earle and others, and on to Cleveland for a visit to the Great Lakes exposition. His itinerary provided then for a visit to Chautauqua, N. Y., to deliver a speech on foreign affairs.

TWO veterans of the senate, William E. Borah of Idaho, Republican, and Joseph T. Robinson of Arkansas, Democrat and majority leader, won their fights for renomination without much difficulty. Borah defeated Byron Defenbach, who was backed by the Townsendites. His Democratic opponent at the polls in November will be Gov. C. Ben Ross. In the Democratic primary to select a congressman to succeed the late Joseph W. Byrns of Tennessee the Townsend influence gave victory to Richard M. Atkinson of Nashville by the narrow margin of 13 votes.

In the Presidential contest the American Federation of Labor, as an organization, will maintain its traditional non-partisan policy, according to the firm declaration of President William Green. The federation, said he, is not in the Non-Partisan Labor league, which is backing President Roosevelt. "We will not formally indorse any candidate this fall," Mr. Green continued. "Our non-partisan committee will merely prepare parallel reports on the labor records of the two chief candidates and of the platforms. We will send out all data to our membership. They will have to make up their own minds."

FORTY-THREE Democrats, most of them prominent nationally or locally and representing twenty states, gathered in Detroit to tell one another and the world how much and why they disliked the New Deal. After two days of conferring, they organized themselves as the National Jeffersonian Democrats and named Former Senator James A. Reed of Missouri as their national chairman. They decided to establish headquarters at once in St. Louis and to set up an organization in every state. Then they gave out a 1,500 word declaration or platform in which they declared they "will not support for re-election the candidates of the Philadelphia convention for President and Vice President, and we call upon all loyal and sincere Democrats to consider the question of their duty to their country in the approaching election with the same earnestness that has guided our deliberations—joining with us if they feel that our conclusions are sound and our anxiety for the future of our party and our country is justified."

J. A. Reed

The name of Governor Landon was not mentioned in the declaration, but a number of its signers are openly supporting the Republican candidate. Among these are Joseph B. Ely, Col. Henry Breckinridge, John Henry Kirby of Texas and Robert S. Bright of Maryland.

PREMIER BLUM made good one of his campaign promises by putting the French leftist government in control of the Bank of France. The board of regents, in existence for a century, was abolished and replaced by a council of seven headed by Leon Jouhaux, president of the conference of labor. The others are representatives of the ministry of finance, savings banks, consumers' co-operatives, handicrafts, chambers of commerce and chambers of agriculture.

The new board is expected to continue the anti-devaluationist policy of the retiring board of the institution.

HENRY MORGENTHAU, secretary of the treasury, and the national commission on fine arts have given their approval to the design for a memorial half dollar which will bear the likeness of Phineas T. Barnum. The coin will commemorate the centennial anniversary of the establishment of Bridgeport, Conn., as a city, and Barnum is honored not for his achievements as a showman but for his great philanthropies and rich gifts to Bridgeport.

WHEN the American Bar association convenes in Boston soon it will receive two widely differing reports from a special committee named to study the effects of New Deal legislation on the rights and liberties of citizens. They were made public in Washington. The majority report, signed by John D. Clark, Cheyenne, Wyo.; Fred H. Davis, Tallahassee, Fla.; George L. Buist, Charleston, S. C., and Charles P. Taft II., Cincinnati, Ohio, "deplored" the action of President Roosevelt in reducing congress to a "rubber stamp" body to carry through his program of legislation.

"Novel legislative and governmental trends of the New Deal are just as uncertain today as they were two years ago," the report said. "Laws specifically proposed as emergency measures with limited life have been declared by important members of the administration to be the beginning of permanent changes in national policy.

"There has been a continuing conflict between such officials as to whether a new social and economic order is in the making or the old institutions are being perfected so that they may be preserved."

These findings were challenged by Kenneth Wynne, New Haven, Conn.; Fred L. Williams, St. Louis, Mo., and James G. McGowen of Jackson, Miss. In their minority report they said: "If the purpose of the resolution creating the special committee was to get the opinion of the American Bar association regarding legislative trends designed to meet changing economic conditions, the report is superficial. It does not deal with the problem but concerns itself with a short range attack on surface trivialities."

The sharp divergence between the two reports presages a conflict and heated discussion at the association meeting.

SECRETARY OF COMMERCE ROPER'S department has just put out a "world economic review" for 1935 which contains many interesting statements. It says, for instance, that future business prospects are conditioned in part upon narrowing the gap between government expenditures and receipts. It asserted that "the government deficit springs from the root of unemployment, which is still the major problem confronting the country," and continued:

A. P. Sloan

"Most of the recent increase in the public debt has resulted from emergency expenditures which will be reduced as the need diminishes. At this date the evidences of need are still manifest."

Saying the public debt "has continued to mount rapidly, notwithstanding the substantial increase in the national revenues," the report added:

"Future business prospects are in a degree conditioned upon the possibility of bringing expenditures more in line with receipts and thus eliminating, partially at least, the uncertainties prevailing in connection with future taxation and other budgetary problems."

As to "the part played in the recovery to date by the heavy government expenditures," the report said:

"This question is not easily answered, but it is certain that such outlays have had an influence, in many directions — for example, on retail sales, on farm income, on the growth of bank deposits and on the prevailing level of interest rates."

The latter statements may well be compared with the report of Alfred P. Sloan, president of General Motors, to the stockholders. Business recovery throughout the world — in which the United States has participated — is being generated by a combination of various factors, Mr. Sloan explains. In this country the automobile industry has been helped, he says, by principal influences. Only one of these, he points out, has its roots in the New Deal financial schemes and he finds that particular influence a bad one because it creates a temporary fool's paradise in which sales and earnings are ballooned by extraordinary government expenditures.

REBELLION among the Townsendites, smoldering ever since their Cleveland convention, has broken out into civil war. Dr. Francis Townsend has just summarily ousted from the organization three of the eleven directors. Apparently the reason is that they are supporting President Roosevelt and object to Townsend's effort to swing his followers to the support of Lemke.

The three men thrown out are Dr. Clinton Wunder, a former Baptist preacher, now living in New York; John B. Kiefer, Chicago regional director, and Maj. William Parker of New York, eastern regional director.

LEADING officials of Class I railroads, meeting in Washington, voted to petition the interstate commerce commission for an advance in freight rates to replace the temporary surcharges which expire at the end of this year, and to meet the rising expenses of the roads.

The petition also will ask the commission to give the railroads relief on the long and short haul clauses in the various commodity classifications.

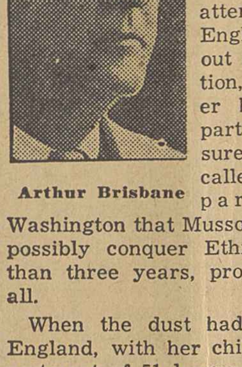
England Learns Also

Europe learns that political experiments cost money. England decided to prevent Mussolini taking Ethiopia, camping along the imperial British highway, and controlling Lake Tana, source of Nile water. The attempt failed. England backed out of that situation, hastily, after her war department had assured our so-called war department in Washington that Mussolini could not possibly conquer Ethiopia in less than three years, probably not at all.



Arthur Brisbane

When the dust had settled and England, with her chicken-feed assortment of 51 league nations, had apologized to Mussolini and tossed Haile Selassie into the waste-basket, England found her foreign commerce much damaged. She had missed Mussolini, and shot herself in the pocketbook.

For a little while she will copy Job: "I will lay mine hand upon my mouth. Once I have spoken . . . yea twice, but I will proceed no further."

Paris, which is France, decided to sing and dance a new carmagnole with Russian dressing; clenched fists raised in air a la Russe; red flag waving; the doleful strains of the Communist hymn, l'Internationale, and its Communist injunction, "Arise, ye prisoners of starvation," excellently sung from the Arc de Triomphe to the Place de la Bastille.

You can hardly imagine what fire, fury and enthusiasm thousands of young and old French gentlemen put into that hymn, although many of them showed few outward signs of starvation.

There were, and are, manifestations everywhere. Now in the chamber of deputies, Monsieur Gaston Gerard, practical French statesman, asks, "What has become of our foreign tourists and their spending money?"

M. Gerard tells the deputies something must be done. In 1927, 2,125,000 foreigners from all over the world visited France, spending much money. Visitors now number only 700,000; as a rule with little money to spend—oysters containing no pearl; many that come to help sing l'Internationale bring no money.

Foreign visitors, says M. Gerard, used to give highly paid employment to half a million French men and women; spent 500,000,000 francs for French railroad and steamship tickets; scattered throughout France from 12 to 15 thousand millions of francs.

Fifteen billions, even in francs, are "real money" here. M. Gerard tells the chamber French prices are too high. There is something in that, with the four-cent franc costing six to seven cents in the United States—a comic-opera situation, considering the relative wealth of the two nations.

M. Gerard thinks there should be some cabinet official to look after foreigners, with better propaganda and fewer vexatious taxes on foreigners; there is nothing in that.

Foreigners do not voluntarily travel and spend money where they feel they are not wanted. The cosmopolitan, educated Frenchman is as polite and hospitable as ever, but ask him what sort of reception the crowd gives to the foreigner, British especially. It offends the British ear to hear A bas les Anglis!—"Down with the British!"

An innocent American, in an innocent average American automobile, sallied forth on July 14 to help France celebrate the destruction of the Bastille, and perhaps give a few feeble cheers for Lafayette, or Woodrow Wilson, or somebody.

Great crowd in the Champs Elysees, especially around the innocent American car, with new paint, shiny chromium and several cylinders. A polite policeman says monsieur should know better than to appear in a car of "grand luxury" on such a day. Such luxury cars you may see by the thousands and millions on American roads.

Nothing happens to the car of grand luxury; it crosses the Avenue of the Champs Elysees, about 300 feet, in less than twenty minutes. The French, newly self-identified as "prisoners of starvation," are interested in the auto American, which is careful not to bump anybody.

The bourgeois, the "rich," an extinct species, although it does not yet know it, are nervous. In a vague way they feel that they are held responsible for all those "prisoners of starvation," with their strong voices, deep chests, powerful fists and pink complexions.

Tries G. O. P. Relief Plan

Washington.—President Roosevelt again has changed courses on relief. This time he has launched an experiment that becomes most significant and interesting because he is trying out in a small way the very heart of the relief proposal contained in the Republican platform.

Without any ballyhoo or any detailed statement, the President has allocated $22,700,000 of Public Works Administration funds for use in direct grants to states and has laid down a formula for use of this money that takes it into the same category as the Republican plan. The President took this action personally. He has not only prescribed the conditions under which the grants will be made but has laid down rules for PWA which will, in effect, bring to his attention any completed arrangements involving these funds.

The program provides that the federal government will bear 45 per cent of the cost, a municipality or county contributing the other 55 per cent out of its own funds and before the allocation is made definitely, the municipality or county receiving the funds must agree to employ 100 per cent relief labor.

In this manner, the "need for relief" becomes the measuring stick. If the local community is unable to supply only unskilled labor from the relief rolls and the project of construction planned for the community requires the use of skilled labor, it does not get the money. The projects considered to fall within the category of this new experiment include a great many worthwhile construction jobs such as school houses, sewage systems and water systems. The things proposed, therefore, may be said to be of permanent value and to that extent represent a veering by the President to the theory which Secretary Ickes of the Department of Interior always has held, namely, that if federal funds are expended they should be used in the construction and maintenance of permanent improvements.

Handled Locally

Although the general idea of this new experiment in relief, new to the New Deal, was practically forced upon the President by the necessity of the present relief mess, it represents a return to a method long regarded by many students of the problem as the only way in which relief funds can be properly handled. It places back in the hands of local communities the task of looking after their own destitute and charity cases. The federal government contributes a share of the funds, of course, but it does not boss the job as has been the practice under Harry Hopkins and his Works Progress Administration further than the requirements that relief labor be employed.

As stated above, the plan now on trial constitutes the very heart of the Republican proposal for handling federal relief. The Republican platform calls for "federal grants in aid to the states and territories while the need exists upon compliance with these conditions: a fair proportion of the total relief burden to be provided from the revenues of states and local governments; all engaged in relief administration to be selected on the basis of merit and fitness; adequate provisions to be made for the encouragement of those persons who are trying to become self-supporting."

I hear much discussion around Washington that the President's experiment meets the Republican program in every way except as to the second provision which relates to the selection of the administrative personnel "upon the basis of merit and fitness." There are many who believe Mr. Roosevelt has reached the conclusion that there is considerable merit in the contention that unless steps are taken to get relief of the unemployed back into the local communities, it will become an unworkable monster, a Frankenstein.

On the other hand, some of the bitter critics of the Roosevelt administration are contending that Mr. Roosevelt seeks to try out the Republican proposal in this manner in order to demonstrate that it is unworkable. They point also to the omission of the second provision just mentioned, and declare that the President will use political patronage rather than merit as the means of creating supervision. In other words, they are charging that Mr. Roosevelt is adding to his political machine in advance of election.

While the new method has not been made fully operative so that anyone can see it in full detail, the restriction which Mr. Roosevelt has laid down that only relief labor shall be used is looked upon as providing a means of dodging complete operation of the plan. It is to be noted that the Republican plank does not limit the workers wholly to relief. In making such a restriction as the President has done, it is held in some quarters that there will not be too many communities able to take advantage of the fresh federal funds. The reason for this is that particularly in the smaller communities there is not a great amount of skilled labor. This comparatively small proportion of skilled labor, comparatively small when measured against the amount of common labor, or unskilled labor, available, makes it impossible in a good many instances for the smaller communities to obtain money.

The situation is simply this: in the construction of sewage and water systems and most other construction jobs, there is more skilled labor required than will be available in the communities where these public works are to be undertaken. Further, with the pick up in industry, however small it may yet be, the skilled artisan has more chances to get jobs than has the common laborer. In addition, I think it can be fairly said that a skilled worker is of the type to be among the last to go on relief rolls. In any event, he will not go on the relief rolls until there is no other alternative. He is able to earn a much higher rate of pay than is available to him as a relief dole and naturally is not content to remain on the relief rolls longer than is absolutely necessary.

In this direction then, trouble may lie. Possibly some communities will be guilty of seeking to induce skilled workers to go on relief rolls for a sufficient length of time to enable them to carry out an agreement to employ only relief labor. This is a regrettable possibility but it is a very real one.

In all fairness to the President, I think it must be said that he is proceeding on a method to reach communities and unemployed that hitherto have been rather like stepchildren. The big relief projects under the former PWA system, and the Harry Hopkin's method of handling relief in some way or other have managed to be concentrated in the great cities. While some persons may be unkind enough to say that the President is expanding his vote-getting machine to the small communities, it nevertheless remains as a fact that the system now undertaken will let some relief dribble down to those who have not had it before. In any event since it is being tried out by the New Deal, it is an experiment very well worth watching.

Quirks of Diplomacy

The nations of the world find themselves in one of those peculiar and almost humorous situations that can develop only from the queer quirks of diplomacy. It has not progressed far enough yet for anyone to say that the outcome of this new diplomatic situation will be but it is not devoid, nevertheless, of possibilities both from the serious as well as the humorous side.

It may have escaped general notice that, under Mussolini's orders, King Victor Emanuel is now not only king of Italy but he is also emperor of Ethiopia. He was given this new title immediately after the conquering hordes of Italians had held their triumphant march in Rome and, as far as Mussolini was concerned, Ethiopia had gone out of existence, a dead nation.

Despite the fact that Mussolini would like to have Emperor Haile Selassie known only as a plain Mr. Tafari, most of the nations of the world still are compelled, through treaty agreement, foreign policy or plain desire, to consider that Mr. Tafari still has the title of emperor of Ethiopia which he and his ancestors so long bore.

There is, however, this circumstance: since no nation has extended formal recognition to Italy as embracing Ethiopia, no diplomat can be formally received in that capacity. For example, the new Italian ambassador to the United States will come to Washington as the plenipotentiary of the king of Italy and emperor of Ethiopia but our ambassador to Italy, Mr. Welles, will go to Rome when he returns to his post this fall as the ambassador to the court of King Victor Emanuel — nothing being said about Ethiopia.

All of this results from American foreign policy and the foreign policies of other nations who oppose the taking of territory of another nation or race by force. It is a policy firmly footed, as witness the course of all of the nations excepting only Salvador in their attitude toward Manchuria which is now under Japanese control. Salvador recognized Japanese sovereignty over Manchuria largely because it was thereby enabled to consummate a great coffee sale.

Meter Your Time

Just outside my window I can hear a slight clicking every time the members of my household turn on the taps in their kitchens. That clicking reminds me constantly that water is expensive down here in this seaside cottage where I am spending a month.

By and by, when I close the cottage a man with a key will come along, unlock a meter and take its reading.

Then just before I am leaving he will hand me a slip of paper which will inform me what I owe him.

These boys on the Maine coast are careful, as they should be, that no summer dweller gets away without making matters square with that meter.

One becomes acutely aware of the necessity for economy as the little counting device in the meter clocks off the pints, quarts, gallons and barrels that the families around here use.

And as the little machines click out their information I become impressed with the fact that time has a value of which I have been thinking too lightly.

Why would it not be a good plan to meter one's time in the same way?

* * *

If every minute, every hour clicked its message in my ears, so that I would know just how much time I am allowing to go to waste, it might be a good thing for my bank account—such as it is—and prompt me to put a check on the needless escape of the one thing with which we are all endowed while we live, namely, time.

When one learns to budget that time to devote a part of it to work and a part of it to play, he is, or ought to be on the way to an intelligent control of life—which, as far as you and I are concerned, is the time alloted to us from our birth on to our disappearance from the planet.

It would help almost everybody to note now and then how the 'ears are passing, what we are doing with them, and what we are getting out of them as they come and go.

* * *

As the poet observes of the minutes, "we cannot strive to grasp them all," but we can grasp and hold many more than we do if we remember that every click of that meter means a second used or lost forever.

What our time allowance is we shall have no means of knowing.

But we can if we are careful get more out of existence as it passes than we usually do.

So, when you hear that meter spinning in the cellar, or the clock ticking on the wall, you will realize that your life is being slowly measured out to you.

Keep as careful track of it as you are able to.

Get as much out of every working hour as it is possible, and when it is all over you will know that you have made the best possible use of a life which you might, by heedlessness, have wantonly squandered.

Gunlock Ranch

SYNOPSIS

Sleepy Cat, desert town of the Southwest, is celebrating the Fourth of July. Jane Van Tambel, beautiful daughter of Gus Van Tambel, hated owner of Gunlock ranch, has arrived from the East for the first time. She watches the Frontier Day celebration in company with Dr. Carpy, crusty, tender-hearted friend of the community. Henry Sawdy of the Circle Dot ranch, tricked in a fake horse race the day before by Dave McCrossen, foreman at Gunlock, plans revenge. He enters Bill Denison, a handsome young Texas wrangler, in the rodeo which McCrossen is favored to win, and lays heavy bets on him. Unknown to the crowd, Denison is a champion horseman. McCrossen and the young stranger tie in the various events. Denison drops a cigarette carelessly. Racing down the track full tilt, he picks up the cigarette. The verdict goes to Denison when McCrossen refuses to attempt the stunt. Entreated by the crowd, Denison agrees to perform another trick. Jane is asked for her bracelet, and throws it on the track. Just as Denison rides to pick it up a yell from Barney Rebstock, a McCrossen henchman, scares the pony, nearly costing the rider his life. Gun play is prevented by the intervention of Dr. Carpy. Back on Gunlock ranch after two years in Chicago, because of her father's illness, Jane gets lost riding in the hills and meets Denison, now a neighbor, who guides her home. Not knowing her identity, he speaks bitterly of Van Tambel.

"You must have been trying not to find me," said Jane coldly. Without much reason she resented the fact that she had got lost and not been promptly found.

"Where were you?" asked the foreman, sitting down.

"In the hills. You've always been telling me to ride where I pleased and that there was no danger because you'd pick me up. I guess your formula didn't work."

"I missed this time. There's never been any trouble locatin' you before. But it won't happen again. So you just wandered away and wandered home again?"

"I did not wander home. I was brought home."

"Who brought you?"

"Bill Denison."

"If a cannon cracker had been exploded under McCrossen, it could not have been more sensational than her answer. He caught his breath with a gulp. "That fellow! Well, some things do beat the devil!"

The name doesn't seem to sit very well with you," observed Jane crustily.

"That bird's name doesn't sit very well with anyone at Gunlock."

Jane seemed willing to pursue the subject. "Why not?" she asked languidly as she sipped her coffee.

"Why not? There's more reasons than one. Denison is a rustler, if you know what that means." He paused.

"What else?" she asked in the same fatigued manner.

It nettled her foreman. "He's the worst enemy your father ever had in this whole country. He's probably stole more Gunlock cattle than all the rustlers in the hills."

Jane rode into Sleepy Cat next morning with Bull Page, and when she had dispatched her business at the bank, she walked up street to Carpy's hotel.

She asked for Dr. Carpy, whom she remembered from her visit two years before.

The doctor was somewhat surprised at the sight of this trim, erect girl, eighteen or nineteen years of age, and seemingly a stranger, facing him. Obviously she was a newcomer to Sleepy Cat; the doctor did not at once place her. But his glance swept everything about her like a flash—her cowboy hat, her red, open-neck blouse with its dark flowing tie; her sloping feminine shoulders; delicate, pleasing bosom and slender, rounded hips; her short brown riding skirt and her soft, tight-fitting tan boots. The rig seemed right for her brown hair and blue eyes. "Dr. Carpy?" her voice was clear and her manner possessed.

The doctor doffed his hat and set his bag down on the desk with an air of satisfaction. "I'm Dr. Carpy. But I'm glad to see you don't need me or any other doctor."

"Why, Doctor!" exclaimed Jane demurely. There was a sophistication in the delicate droop of her eyelids, as she protested, that did not escape the doctor. It deceived him only as to her age. "That's hardly complimentary, Dr. Carpy," she ran on. "Have you forgotten Frontier day two years ago when we sat here on the porch together and in the rickety grandstand to see the riding?" Her eyes were laughing. Dr. Carpy was flustered.

"What is your name?"

"Not a very popular one in this country. I'm Jane Van Tambel."

He knit his brows. "Why, that's maybe two years ago, and it was a little girl that I talked to here on the porch and took to the races. I'll be hanged! Two years! And you've sprung into full bloom. Full bloom!" repeated Carpy in undisguised admiration. "Where've you been ever since?"

"In Chicago. You look exactly the same, Doctor."

"Can't say I feel exactly the same, Jane," he said. His eyes still rested on her. "How long were you out last time?"

"Only two months or so. But I'm out now to stay, perhaps."

"I heard something lately about some women folks over to Gunlock, but I didn't hear of you being over there. If I had, I'd have been over there myself. So you're Gus' daughter," he mused.

"Never knew he had a child till you came out the first time. You threw your bracelet out on the track, didn't you?"

"That was partly your fault, Doctor."

"Was it? Well, you got it back."

"I did, but I never learned the name of the man that picked it up. All I could find out, when I asked, was that he was a rustler. You don't remember him, do you?"

"Of course I do. Who the hell said he was a rustler?"

"Why, that's what they told me at the ranch after we got home."

"Well, you've got some able-bodied liars at Gunlock—one in particular."

"Who's that?"

"No need to specify."

"Well, what's the name of the wonderful rider who picked up the bracelet? And the cigarette?"

"It was Bill Denison."

Jane started imperceptibly.

"He's living here now on his brother's hill ranch—brother's dead. Well, Jane, what in the world brought you out here?"

"Why, because Father's so ill." Dr. Carpy nodded. "You took care of him, Doctor, and recommended his going to Medicine Bend—"

"It was pretty high for him here."

"—so he telegraphed for me to come out to look after the ranch—"

"Small girl for big job, as the Indians would say."

Jane laughed. "That's what Father said when he saw me. You know two years ago was the first time in his life he'd ever seen me."

"How old are you, Jane?"

"Almost nineteen."

"Well, well," mused Dr. Carpy still regarding his caller benevolently. "So you're Van Tambel's daughter. I guess you take after your mother."

"Aunt Lou says I do," she returned with composure. "So Father said, too, when I went to see him at the hospital in Medicine Bend last month. And he told me, Doctor, to come to see you about his bill. I couldn't find one from you among the bills at the ranch. Did you ever send one?"

"Hell, Jane, I never sent a bill to anybody in my life."

"Doctor!" exclaimed his caller, startled both at the expletive and the statement. "I never heard of a doctor who didn't send out bills!"

Carpy laughed uproariously. "Why, that's nothing."

"But," she went on, "you took care of Father quite a while. He thinks you're the best doctor he ever had."

The sardonic note in the doctor's slight laugh as he suppressed an exclamation did not escape the girl. "But everyone out here says that or something just like it, so you must be used to it," she added. "Please tell me now, Doctor, what the bill is; I want to pay you."

The doctor waved Jane off. When he sidestepped, she kept after him. He dodged, and she persisted. At last she drew from her purse two one-hundred-dollar bills and laid them on the table in front of him. Carpy looked at them in astonishment. "Your father hasn't gone out of his mind, has he?"

"No," Jane retorted. "Why? That's not enough, is it?" she added shamefacedly. "I didn't know."

"It's at least twice too much. Did Gus send this?"

Jane had to fib a bit. She had added a hundred dollars herself to what her father had told her would be about right, if Carpy refused to name the bill. "He told me he wanted you well paid," she answered evasively.

Carpy pushed one bill back to Jane. "That's plenty."

"Doctor," she exclaimed, "I wish you'd take this other bill."

He shook his head. "Put it back in your purse. How are things out at the ranch?"

"You know how it is when the cat's away," laughed Jane.

"You must mean the wildcat," suggested Carpy, grinning half amiably.

"Everyone doing things his own way," she continued, ignoring the thrust. "Or not doing them at all."

"Mostly that, I guess."

"Mostly that," agreed Jane. "I can see I have plenty of work ahead."

"And you going on nineteen. And, I'll bet, never did a day's work in your life."

She straightened up. "I've worked every day of my life since I left high school at fifteen."

"What for?"

"Helping support Mother."

Carpy flashed with anger. "Do you mean to tell me that old curmudgeon father of yours didn't support you and your mother?"

Jane's eyes fell. She crimsoned. Then, collecting herself, she said, "I did not mean to tell you, Doctor. It slipped out. We've nearly always had to look out for ourselves—but I hate to talk about it, Doctor. Father says he's sorry. When I telegraphed him about Mother's death, he was all broken up and sent me so much money for the expenses that I didn't know what to do with it—though it was too late to do poor Mother any good. I know Father's eccentric, Doctor," Jane continued gravely. "But that doesn't explain, to me, why everybody out here hates him. And that's what I've wanted to ask somebody like you, Doctor, somebody who would tell me the truth. Why is Father so disliked? Is it because he is so rich?"

Dr. Carpy was taken aback. Here was an innocent and charming girl budding into a lovely womanhood, the daughter of an unscrupulous criminal and thoroughly detested cattle king, asking him to tell her why her father was so hated along the Spanish Sinks.

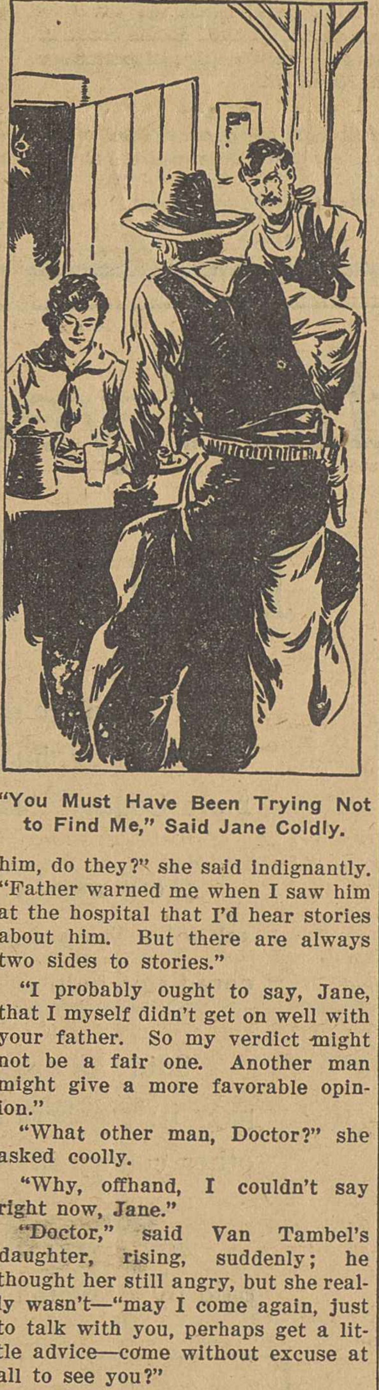
"Well, Jane," he said at length slowly, "many a rich man is hated without good reason."

But if he thought he could get off with such a general observation he was mistaken. Jane pursued him. "Was that the case with Father?" she asked bluntly.

"Other rich men are hated," continued Carpy, unmoved, "not because they're rich, but because of the way they got rich!"

The force of his words was not lost on his listener.

"And if a man does get rich here or anywhere else, they don't lose any time hatching up lies about him, do they?" she said indignantly. "Father warned me when I saw him at the hospital that I'd hear stories about him. But there are always two sides to stories."



"You Must Have Been Trying Not to Find Me," Said Jane Coldly.

"I probably ought to say, Jane, that I myself didn't get on well with your father. So my verdict might not be a fair one. Another man might give a more favorable opinion."

"What other man, Doctor?" she asked coolly.

"Why, offhand, I couldn't say right now, Jane."

"Doctor," said Van Tambel's daughter, rising, suddenly; he thought her still angry, but she really wasn't—"may I come again, just to talk with you, perhaps get a little advice—come without excuse at all to see you?"

"Why, of course you may, Jane. Why not? Come any time, all times—my latchstring's always out for you," declared Carpy, swayed by an admiration he could not resist.

"And you won't harbor any feelings against me just because you don't like my father?"

"How could I?" Doctor Carpy almost gasped with surprise at her poise. "Jane," he said, taking her hand, "just feel I'm your friend—I mean it. Sick or well, I'll be with you. I don't care a damn who your father is or was—is that plain, girl?"

"I'm awfully grateful, Doctor," she said collectedly. "If I get into a tight place, or into troubles, I'll know where I'll have a friend to turn to."

"Don't be afraid!" exclaimed Carpy emphatically. "You'll find you'll make plenty of friends out here just as soon as you get acquainted—don't be afraid!" he repeated.

Jane was at the door. She turned. "And Doctor," she said, with seeming innocence, "try to think of the name of the man who will give that more favorable opinion."

While Bull waited for his mistress during her talk with Carpy, he dropped into Jake Spotts' barber shop for a shave.

Spotts, who was bald as a billiard ball, expressed surprise when Bull gave his order. "Whiskers off?" he exclaimed.

"Take 'em off," repeated Bull doggedly.

"Must be goin' to get married?"

"Well, not exactly," explained Bul. "We got wimmen folks out to Gunlock now, 'n' the boys are sprucing up."

"What wimmen folks?"

"Ain't you heard? Got a girl there, daughter of old Gus."

"Is that damned old critter down at the Medicine Bend hospital yet?" demanded Spotts—but his expletives were much more ferocious.

A heavy bass voice was heard from the second chair, where Oscar was shaving a man. "Slow, Jake," protested the man in the chair, "go slow—don't get to cussin' out old Van Tambel."

"All right, Panama; all right," returned Spotts, resignedly, "I plum forgot you were there."

"That man," gravely continued the man addressed as "Panama" and referring to Van Tambel, "will keep more Sleepy Cat folks out of heaven than the devil himself."

"How's that?" asked Spotts.

"Why? Because everybody cusses him so terrible whenever his name comes up."

"I guess that's right," agreed Spotts. "Anyway, there's more damned blaspheemin' goin' on in this town—"

"Careful, Jake; careful," admonished Panama.

"All right, Panama," grumbled the notoriously profane barber. Then, under his breath, so Panama could not hear, "It's got so a man can't say a damned word any more. What's the girl like, Bull?" he asked.

"Well," responded the Gunlock hearty, "she's comin' around eighteen or twenty; lively as a cricket and straight as a ramrod."

"Is she anythin' like old Van Tambel?"

"Not a bit. She's as nice and tidy a miss as you'd want to set eyes on, Jake."

"Then there's one grand big mistake somewheres," declared Spotts, definitely. "That damned old critter couldn't be the father of a girl like that."

"Tut, tut, Jake," interposed Panama, rising solemnly from the chair and reaching for his collar and tie. "You promised to give up swearing."

"Well, hell, I can't quit all at once, can I?" demanded Spotts testily. "Ain't I doin' better every day?"

"Got to watch you, though, I guess," observed Panama shrewdly.

Bull caught sight of the man out of the corner of his eye. He was almost gigantic in proportions. Tall, stout, erect, with leonine features, shaggy brows and a heavy mop of coarse, straight, black hair, worn long and cut flatly across the back of his neck."

"Who is that man?" asked Bull as Panama left the shop.

"Why, you ought to know that man, Bull. He's an old-time Sleepy Cat gambler and confidence man—up to every game they ever played from here to Frisco."

"What's his name?"

"They used to call him Big Bill Hayes."

"I heard that name."

"Guess you did—guess everybody's heard it."

"But he made a trip to Panama when the French outfit was runnin' things there. He cleaned up on the Frenchmen, and they run him out of town. He says he got the dysentery down there. Anyway, he got away before they strung him up for a cardsharp. Now everybody calls him Panama."

"What's he doin' here now?"

"Why, the damned critter got religion somehow, and he's the kindest, best preacher that ever talked in Sleepy Cat. He's doin' a world of good."

CHAPTER IV

JANE made it a practice to visit her father at the Medicine Bend hospital at least every two weeks. She spent the day at the hospital with her father, ate an early supper with him, and took Number One back to Sleepy Cat. Her father asked a good many questions about McCrossen.

"A good man," Van Tambel said wheezily of him again and again. "His only trouble is gambling—he will gamble."

"I'm sorry, father," returned Jane with asperity—it was not the first time he had made the same remark—"but I don't quite see how I can watch him, do you?"

"Well, keep track of the shipments this month. The steers will be going out right along now—good deal of money coming in. See that he don't get too much away from you, under one pretext or another. When he wants money to gamble, he won't stop at nothing. And it won't do a bit of hurt to be kind of nice to him yourself."

Hints such as these failed to move Jane. Indeed, they aroused an antagonism.

When the train pulled into Sleepy Cat late that night it was cold; a north wind was spitting rain. McCrossen was on hand with the two-seated buckboard. He met Jane at the Pullman step and hurried her through the sprinkle across the platform to the rig.

Milk Temperature Bacteria Control

Method of Cooling Needs to Comply With Sanitary Requirements.

By F. C BUTTON, Professor of Dairy Manufactures, New Jersey State College.—WNU Service.

The only way to control the development of bacteria is by reducing the temperature of the milk. There should be immediate and efficient cooling of milk at all seasons of the year. Cooling is vital, since it is the only way to control the development of bacteria. The method of cooling is less important, provided it meets sanitary requirements.

"While milk may be cooled satisfactorily in cooler weather by the use of water, ice water or mechanical refrigeration is needed in summer because water temperature rises with weather temperature.

"Milk sours quickly at 70 degrees Fahrenheit or above. The souring bacteria grow well between 60 and 70 degrees and there is some retarding of growth between 50 and 60 degrees. There is definite retardation of growth at 50 degrees or below and milk held at this temperature will keep fresh for 86 hours. Since dealers cannot use milk which is high in lactic acid, or almost sour, the producer must prevent his milk from being rejected by the market by keeping it below 50 degrees Fahrenheit.

"Recent tests made at the New Jersey agricultural experiment station showed that when milk with a bacteria count of 10,000 per cubic centimeter is held at 32 degrees Fahrenheit, it takes a month for it to become sour, but if it is kept at 60 degrees Fahrenheit, it will sour in 53 hours. This is just a case in point to show how temperature control affects milk cooling.

"Besides prompt and efficient cooling, sanitary cooling methods, sterilized equipment and clean, healthy cows are important in keeping the milk supply free of bacteria."

Overfeeding Brood Sow Causes Pigs to Scour

Overfeeding the brood sow causes sucking pigs to scour, and this retards their growth, says E. F. Ferrin, swine husbandman, Minnesota university farm. He warns farmers to watch their young pigs closely for symptoms of this disorder.

"On the first day after the sow farrows," he says, "she should receive nothing but warm water. Beginning on the second day with a small amount of wheat bran or oats the amount of this feed should be gradually increased until, in two weeks, the sow is on full feed. Corn is too heating to be fed during this period.

"If the pigs begin scouring, reduce the sow's feed one-half and add a small handful of epsom salts to the slop. Give each pig, also, a teaspoonful of mineral oil. Provide dry pens and bedding, since these help to prevent scours, especially in cold, rainy weather."

To Get Rid of Lice

To get rid of lice that infest the dairy herd, the following remedies, says the North Carolina State college, have proved effective: (1) a 4 per cent solution of creolin applied with a spray pump or brush; (2) cotton seed oil and kerosene, equal parts; (3) ground sabadilla seed and flowers of sulphur, equal parts, applied in powder form. There are also several standard dip solutions on the market, but when these are used, directions on the container should be closely followed. Oils should not be used in very warm or very cold weather. When powder is used the hair should first be clipped from the affected parts and the powder applied only on the clipped places. A second treatment should be given within 15 days.

Battling Weeds

If anything is to be accomplished in coping with the weed problem, it must be done by attacking the fundamental causes of the situation. The use of clean seed to prevent the introduction of new weeds and stop the spread of those already present must be practiced, says the Rural New-Yorker. The land must be kept in a good state of fertility to make conditions favorable for crop growth. Lastly, every possible method of weed killing should be practiced. Weed control is a year-around job starting in the fall by cleaning up waste places, cleaning and selecting seed during the winter, clipping, spraying and cultivation during the growing season.

Bumblebees Needed

One interesting and humorous episode concerning bumblebees and clover has been handed down by Charles Darwin, the great scientist. When asked why the clover fields in Oregon were failing, Darwin said that Oregon needed more cats. His listeners didn't understand, so Darwin explained that field mice were destroying the bumblebees' nests, the bumblebees were disappearing and their work of pollinating the clover had been stopped.—Chicago Tribune.

MR. GIDDENS LEAVING

There is universal regret among the citizens of Montevallo that Mr. Giddens is withdrawing himself from among us. And the realization is very properly felt that his going means a great loss to this community.

During his association with the faculty of Alabama College, where his departure likewise is deeply regretted, Mr. Giddens has taken an active interest in community affairs. He has given of his fine abilities unhestitatingly and forcefully to every enterprise and movement for the betterment of Montevallo. He has been able by his excellent qualifications to serve the community with more than the average ability.

Montevallo has been blessed by having Lucien Giddens with us. We wish he could stay here, but we would not have him forego what is an opportunity for a greater and larger future for himself. Young men of his make are destined for greater and greater things. It would be selfish to wish to keep them when their opportunity comes.

Everybody in Montevallo will say farewell to Mr. Giddens with the most sincere wish for his future success and an everlasting memory of the good citizenship he has exemplified during his residence here.

The following expression of appreciation of the usefulness of Mr. Giddens in the community of Montevallo, was presented to the Civic Club Wednesday by Dr. J. Alex Moore, and enthusiastically adopted by the club:

"We have with us to-day for the last time, one upon whose like we shall not soon look. Young, brilliant, scholarly, cultured, Lucien Giddens, has made for himself in this community, in this club, in our hearts, a place that can not be filled by another.

"Mr. Giddens, you bear to your new field of labor our warm affections, our sincere good will, our earnest hope, amounting to certainty, that you will greatly achieve and the assurance that back here we shall always rejoice in every good thing that may come to you."

A WOMAN ON THE COUNCIL

While the editor of The Times is not qualified to vote in Montevallo, we feel that we may express an interest in public affairs here, since we expect to exercise the rights of franchise and citizenship just as quickly as the required time of residence here has transpired.

We perceive with interest the rather extensive opinion that one of Montevallo's women citizens should hold membership in the Town's governing body. And we give this opinion our hearty approval.

Furthermore, we are moved to say that the first step in this direction, the nomination of Dr. Hallie Farmer, as the woman candidate, is a most happy approach to the ideal.

While we do not wish to take the attitude of sponsoring any candidate, and will not do so, we take the opportunity to make these expressions because of the fact that women in public office is regarded yet as a novelty in some places.

But women of the qualifications and abilities of Dr. Farmer have done and will continue to do credit to themselves and to their communities as public servants and wise administrators.

TRADES COUNCIL ELECTS NEW PRESIDENT AUG. 15

At the meeting Saturday night, August 1, Mr. Reese Woolley resigned his position as president of the Shelby County Trades Council. Vice president D. M. Carr assumed the chair and announced that an election would be held two weeks later to name a successor to Mr. Woolley.

President Woolley gave as his reason for resigning the fact that pressure of his personal business obligations made it impossible for him to give the required time and attention to the duties attached to the office of president of the council.

At the meeting Saturday night, August 15, first vice president D. M. Carr, of Aldrich, was elected by the council to succeed Mr. Woolley as president. Mr. Carr is prominently identified with the local clerks union.

Cecil Wells was elected first vice president to succeed Mr. Carr, who was elevated to the presidency.

State Capitol News

Montgomery. — Disagreement in the ranks of the "wets" may delay the special session of Legislature until mid-October, according to reliable capitol gossip.

A number of the known advocates of Repeal have called on the Governor during the past few days and each has offered a different solution of the problem. Some want state control, others local option, while a greater number insist upon a pseudo-saloon system well regulated and highly taxed.

Sen. I. J. Browder, of Jackson, believes it is becoming more of an economic problem than social. "There are too many thumbs poked at the pie," he said.

Then, too, the towns and cities, through the League of Municipalities, want to collect whatever license is levied on "grog" shops. County officials of the state likewise demand the right to collect the license.

Regardless of the system, the Governor has clearly indicated that all liquor tax will be "earmarked" for shools. He has cagilly refused to admit he will include in his "call" Repeal, but enough of the solons emerging from the Executive conferences have talked to newspapermen and others. They declare he has definitely decided to ask for repeal when the lawmakers are reconvened

Sen. Miller Bonner, arch dry of the Senate declared that the cause of prohibition is "doomed if the Governor includes repeal in his call."

"A majority vote will bring victory to the 'wets' and we might just as well face that eventually," he added.

Repeated talk of a sales tax ras been scotched by Gov. Graves: "I have never advoated a sales tax and I would not do so I would veto such a measure if it reached my desk."

Sen. Hardy Riddle of Talladega points out that there is considerable difference between a sales levy and a gross receipts tax. "A gross receipts tax of one-half to one per cent would, necessarily, be absorbed by the merchants, few of whom pay much tax to the State.

"However, there are many types of business that pay practically no tax to the State, and nothing for education," Riddle added.

Most observers at the Capitol continued to insist that the date of the Special Session is September 22. If that be true the Governor must issue his call within a week in order to comply with the law requiring 30 days notice for special elections, to fill four vacancies in the legislature.

Exactly $18,428,379 was spent by the WPA in Alabama from June 1, 1935 to July 31, 1936, according to Ray Crowe, State WPA Director.

Crowe said $12,827,358 was expended for labor and $5,601,021 for materials in erecting public buildings, paving roads, constructing airports, educating illiterates and various other activities.

A state-wide meeting of live stock breeders and processors will be held here Thursday, August 27, according to announcement by R. J. Goode, State Commissioner of Agriculture. The meeting is called for the purpose of discussing regulations, governing the buying, selling, and slaughter of live stock in the State. Provision of the regulation of the industry was contained in a law enacted last year. Plans are also being made for the organization of an Alabama Live Stock Producers Asosciation to promote and improve the industry, announced Dr. R. S. Sugg, of Auburn, Extension Live Stock specialist.

Read this 7-year-old BOY'S ANSWER

THEY were seated at the table in a restaurant—a 7-year-old boy, his dad and sister. They were residents of Elmore County, Alabama.

At a nearby table there was a discussion of Alabama schools, the school term and school finance. The children could not help overhearing the conversation.

Said the daughter, "Dad, why is it that Elmore County pays its teachers more and runs its schools longer than any other county in Alabama?"

Her 7-year-old brother quickly replied: "Because of taxes paid by Alabama Power Company."

The schools in YOUR county operate for longer terms and pay their teachers more than they could if through the establishment of governmental power enterprises, the state, counties and municipalities were deprived of taxes now paid by Alabama Power Company, and other private utility companies.

Don't Let Fellows Bother You About Lack of Size, Ted

Note to suspicious customers—Even though he was crazy with the heat, the baldest of the Bradleys still would be too smart to kick in with that ancient "repeated by request" gag. Yet there are letters which keep piling up each summer and—. But enough of such excuses. This piece, which first saw the light many months ago, is used here for the numerous puzzled letter-writing Teds throughout the land.

DEAR TED—If I were you I would not worry about what the boys say at school. Neither would I strain myself too much this summer. Perhaps the coach is right in saying that you are too small for football, but what of it? You are only sixteen years old and you may have plenty of time for adding extra pounds and inches so that you can make your letter.

Look at Jim Braddock. Up to the time he was twenty-nine years old he was kind of small for the honors he really was seeking and the grown-up boys used to say a lot more about him than the boys at your school possibly could imagine. He did not fret about it. Instead, years after most men in his line would have been through growing or advancing in any fashion, he added an inch to his height and twenty pounds to his weight. Then he became heavyweight champion of the world.

Jim Braddock

As for you figuring that 115 pounds is not enough for a baseball player because you have read that managers prefer strapping six-footers, let me tell you a story. It goes back through the years to the decade that was known as the glamorous nineties.

Baseball was young then, a teeming, boisterous sport. The ball was not endowed with the elastic qualities of a later era, and when fences were built far from the home plate, a giant would seem needed to produce a batting average of .432.

A Little 115-Pounder, Ted, Made 243 Hits in a Season

Want to know the man who achieved it as well as 243 hits, a record toward which not even the giant Hank Greenberg may aspire?

No, I am not trying to kid you. That pale little fellow with the thin cheeks and the angular elbows folded across a narrow chest is not the bat boy. This is on the level, Ted no matter what the boys at school may have told you. What? How could such a half pint rise to the heights when strapping pitchers and burly, far-ranging infielders rallied to defend against him?

Let us, still imagining that we are back in the nineties, ask him. See how he gazes steadily at us while a knobby chin ceases moving and a wad of chewing gum gets a moment's rest. Listen.

"That's easy," Wee Willie Keeler is saying. "I just hit 'em where they ain't."

Translated into more elegant terms, Ted, this atom of a man, scarcely bigger then than you are now, has explained the superiority of mind over matter.

Along with John McGraw, another great little guy, Wee Willie changed the trend of the game, caused rules to be revised. Their ability to tap the ball out of reach of the fielders brought science into a sport that had subsisted on force. They proved the worth of the bunt, the sacrifice, the hit-and-run play.

When they joined the immortal old Orioles they were such scrawny little guys that other players laughed and said they should not be permitted to do anything more strenuous than carry bats. They fought with frantic muscles, fiery tongues and quick brains. They never ceased trying, learning. Before long the fans were fighting to get into the parks to see them. For more than thirty years after that the greater little guy, McGraw, was to continue as one of the biggest men in the history of the game.

Of course, that was long ago Ted, but the boys at school tell you that similar things no longer can happen. Instead, when you return in the fall ask them about little Bill Johnston or Cyril Walker.

When muscle instead of heart was measured they were very little guys, but they won against giants in the biggest of big-time competition.

NOT IN THE BOX SCORE:

GREEDY National league club owners and officials are getting some determined opposition from Horace Stoneham. Rattle-brained parties, who are willing to wreck the game so long as they can salvage some quick and easy dough, have put on strong pressure to make him vote for their night baseball grab. The young magnate's only answer is that it will be a very dark day before he sells out the fans who have carried the Giants through sixty years of sunshine . . . Max Machon was a jockey's valet around European race courses long before he achieved success as Max Schmeling's trainer . . . Captain Emile Dubiel and Star Fullback Don Jackson were among the spring scholastic casualties at Harvard . . . Joe Doherty, the Brooklyn featherweight, was an incubator baby.

Star Halfback Chick Kaufman hopes to be the first man in Princeton's seventy years of football to play through four seasons without a defeat. He was out of college in '34 when Yale accomplished the lone Tiger loss since 1932. . . . Could there be any truth to the gossip that Navy and Columbia would like a Friday night (instead of Saturday afternoon) date for their football game at the Polo Grounds this fall? . . . Bobby Riggs, the best Davis cup prospect since Ellsworth Vines, has a weakness for soft voices as well as for soft tennis attacks. Although only eighteen, he displays as much finesse in feminine society as he does on the tennis courts . . . Pete Reilly, who has managed more featherweight champions than any other man in history, probably has a new one in tow. The youngster is Pete Scalzo who has scored three one-round kayos in the pro ring.

Mrs. John McGraw, who is recuperating from a long illness, is visiting Mrs. Christy Mathewson at Saranac . . . Young Christy Mathewson, incidentally, has fairly well recovered from that terrible airplane crash and hopes soon to resume as a professional flyer . . . Harry Weldon was the first sports editor to use race charts in a newspaper. That was in Cincinnati about fifty years ago . . . Irish Eddie Dunne, Benny Leonard's lightweight, reminds you somewhat of Gene Tunney . . . Stew Saks, who owns one of the things out Hempstead way, says you need at least 18,000 golf balls a season if you operate a driving range.

Diz Dean "Speriments" With Brand New Pitch

Dizzy Dean

Dizzy Dean says he is "sperimentin'" with a new pitch, but refuses to tell what it is. Most fans would agree that the Card ace has plenty of stuff on the ball already, without trying to develop a new delivery . . . Lesser members of the Joe Medwick family have okayed the news that the National league's best hitter will be married this fall . . . New York baseball writers are wondering if Jimmy Wilson knows that the Phillies' trainer practically throws them out of the clubhouse each time they seek to visit the Philly manager.

After taking so long to join the Pro Lawn Tennis association, Berkeley Bell now is sad because he surrendered. A week after he came through with his dues he was notified that he had been suspended and fined $10 for playing in unsanctioned matches . . . Harry Tinniswood, once famed as center forward for the old Longfellow's soccer team, now is one of Port Chester's most eminent citizens.

Statisticians report that 90 per cent of the fighters now competing on the weekly cards are Italians. . . . Stuffed shirts of sports break out into cold sweats every time Pat Robinson approaches them. He is one of that decreasing number of great reporters who cannot be shush shushed by master minds seeking to get away with some new lunacy or larceny . . . Trap shooting is one sport where youth does not always have to be served. Charlie (Sparrow) Young, who won the Ohio State championship this year, is nearly eighty years old.

Players say that the best umpire now in the minors is Van Graflin of the International. He once was in the American league and probably will be recalled to the big time next year . . . The community councils of the city of New York lack funds for playground equipment. If you want to give the kids a break and if you can spare any sports paraphernalia, old or new, get in touch with this department.

The largest cash-on-the-line crowd ever to witness a minor league ball game saw Kansas City entertain the Toledo Mudhens in 1928. More than 28,000 customers enabled a home-town boy named Casey Stengel to take $12,000 back to his Toledo bosses on that date.

* * *

Al Lane, brother of the ex-Tiger captain and tabbed as one of the best football prospects in years, made his first Princeton gain the other day. He got past the Profs who had thrown him for a loss on his first try at the entrance exams . . . In addition to managing the very promising young fighter, Irish Johnny Clinton, Joe King is bouncer for a New York restaurant.

JOE E. BROWN has been having a grand time for himself lately. With his latest picture, "Earthworm Tractor," welcomed by the public as one of the funniest he's ever made, he started off on a vacation.

Being a rabid baseball fan, he took in a few games when he reached the East enroute to Europe. In New York he went to a double-header between the Yankees and the St. Louis Browns, and presented to that sensational new Yankee outfielder, Joe DiMaggio, the award for being the most valuable player in the Coast league in 1935.

William Powell

William Powell has sold his ornate home with the gold door knobs and is living in simpler quarters. Those rumors of a romance between him and Jean Harlow still persist — but apparently everybody who's unattached wants to marry him nowadays, and that includes girls who've never even seen him, except on the screen. Incidentally, Powell is regarded by actors everywhere as one of the most skillful and talented members of the profession—a tribute which is justly deserved.

Apparently nobody's happy any more until they've seen Hollywood. Young John Jacob Astor and his wife are the latest recruits of note; they are on their way to the film metropolis in a private car.

Bob Burns (don't tell me you haven't heard him and his bazooka on the Bing Crosby broadcasts!) is having honors heaped upon him. He worked in "Rhythm on the Range" with Bing, so the picture's premiere was staged in Little Rock, Ark., because Bob hails from the Ozarks.

Once upon a time The Revelers were the most popular quartette on the air. From time to time one of the sweet singers would drop out and make a name for himself all alone—Jimmy Melton was one who did it, Frank Luther was another—but somebody else would step in and the result would still be swell.

You don't hear so much about them as you used to, but they're still on the air, at 6:35 afternoons—and they're still one of the best.

Cowboys have for years been known as devoted fans when Western pictures are shown, a fact which puzzled one motion picture executive so much that he questioned some of them about it. He wanted to know whether they went because the pictures were so much like their own life.

"Oh, no, they ain't like our life at all," one of them explained. "We go because maybe we think that's the way other cowboys go on."

There'll be excitement on the air waves in September, when Major Bowes and his amateurs go into action at the same time as the "Showboat" broadcasts. Nobody's sure which program the great public will prefer—some say the listeners-in are getting tired of amateurs, and others claim that "Showboat" has been sailing too long.

"San Francisco" is a grand picture, and is making money everywhere it's shown, especially in San Francisco. Yet the Chamber of Commerce of that city is still trying to get Metro to take out the earthquake scenes! Very wisely, Metro is refusing — lots of people go to see the picture especially to see them. The picture has added to the popular Clark Gable's following and has demonstrated again that he has a great deal of versatility as an actor.

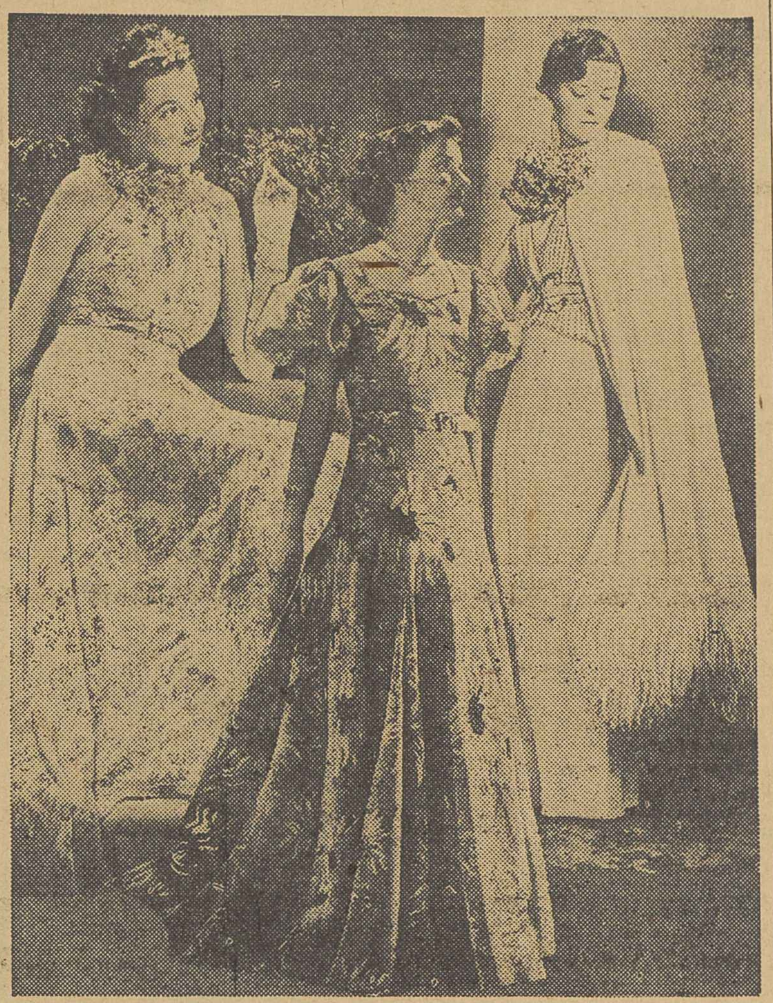
Halter Neck, Princess Lines, Capes

By CHERIE NICHOLAS



A NEW party dress this time of year brings two - fold joy. There's the fun of rounding out the summer season of social activities in lovely array and then when midseason dances and dinners are over, it's off to college where the fun begins all over again for your dress will take on new glamor in new environment. Wherefore, it would reason out that a party dress bought now is not an extravagance but an economy since it provides not only for the present, but for the future as well.

The gowns pictured have smart features that are scheduled to carry through into late fall, since their styling is decidedly advance. The skirt of the lovely flowered chiffon dress on the seated figure is that full and billowy it floats beguilingly with every move of its fair wearer. The halter neckline is especially significant together with the Margot ruff about the throat. The halter neckline is appearing right along on incoming fashions.

Designers are all enthusiasm over the new princess lines that are destined to play an outstanding role this coming season both for dresses and coats. The charming gown centered in the picture adopts princess lines that develop into a full hemline. The perfectly gorgeous mousseline de soie that fashions this delectable gown is in an appealing shade of blue with huge golden flowers artfully widespaced as are most of the more formal prints this season. This handsome quality-high silk mousseline confirms the message from fabric headquarters that silks of extreme luxury and elegance will triumph in the coming modes.

The flair for all white in the evening is reflected in the ensemble to the right. An alabaster white silk sheer was the choice for this supremely lovely costume created by Reville. The waistband is fastened with a silver Grecian clasp. The prestige of capes in the evening mode is noted, and knowing style creators declare they will continue to play their triumphant role as the new season comes on. The word that fashion is reviving the use of ostrich is confirmed in the opulent banding of white South African ostrich feathers that embellish this cape. Not only, according to indications, will ostrich appear on hats but a lavish use will be made of it for costume accessories and other adornment.

In fact the trend for fall and winter apparel for the social season is toward superbly rich effects in every direction, especially in the new silks and metal weaves of classic tone. Jewelled and beaded embroidery will glitter on crepes and other gorgeous silks. The newest gesture is handpainting done in silver and gold and bronze, borrow ideas for motifs from Chinese, Persian, Egyptian and other Far East art sources.

A theme of absorbing interest is the new gowns fashioned of black satin for dinner and evening wear. They are in decided contrast to the fluffy ruffles type of shimmery and sheer frocks. The idea is to make them up classically simple. Of course, the satin must be of sterling pure silk weave to successfully sound the luxury note. A favorite styling is similar to that of the flowery silk mousseline gown just described as being cut along princess lines that assume a wide flare at the hemline with the neckline emphasizing the very new square cut. With these satin gowns most glamorous bracelets, rings and clips are worn, withholding ornamentation of any other sort. If you would be "first in fashion" a black satin dress of this type will assure you this coveted distinction.

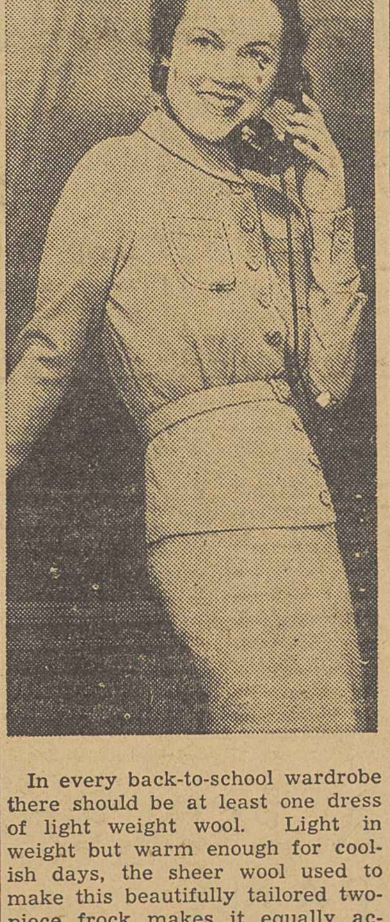
FOR SCHOOL WEAR

By CHERIE NICHOLAS



In every back-to-school wardrobe there should be at least one dress of light weight wool. Light in weight but warm enough for coolish days, the sheer wool used to make this beautifully tailored two-piece frock makes it equally acceptable for business, campus or spectator sports wear. A two-color print chiffon scarf tucks inside the high round collar. The front closing is achieved with composition buttons matching the shade of the frock.

FEATHERS IN YOUR HAT THIS AUTUMN

Now comes a word about fall hats. Higher crowns and off the face lines in brimmed styles are being shown. One advance model developed in black leghorn for late summer, and in velvet for fall, has a turned-up brim, cleverly slit at the back and trimmed with a dark gray ostrich feather.

Feathers are coming into the conversation, too — and how they will increase our vocabularies! Our plumage, it seems, is to be one of our most important autumn features. We'll be using the term "Coq feathers" again, and "coquille." The former are the tail feathers of a rooster, and the latter is a short body feather of a goose. There are "Palette" and "Satinette" and a lot more to learn with the new season, along with the fact that we'll be formalized by ostrich plumes.

Buttons Now Offer Style Touch for an Old Costume

Seekers of the latest in accessories for the modern well dressed woman are missing an important bet if they don't make a special point of keeping close watch on the button market.

Every trip to the stores should include a stop at that most fascinating of all counters where buttons of all colors, shapes and sizes are tucked away in hundreds of little drawers.

Since color is so important in accessories, buttons of the new vivid scarlets and blues, emerald greens, and lemon yellows, or of the multiple other intriguing colors, might be just the proper touch for the revivification of last year's clothes.

"Tides" in the Brain Are Headache Cause, Neurologist Finds

Brain Is Affected by Amount of Body Fluid

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.—"Tides" in the brain make a headache—the "morning after" kind or otherwise, Dr. Temple Fay, professor of neurology at Temple University Medical School, Philadelphia, told members of the American Neurological association meeting here.

Headaches, it appears, may be classed relatively as wet ones (high tide) and dry ones (low tide). The headache of the "morning after" is a wet one, though not all wet ones are due to alcoholic indulgence. General over-indulgence in food and fluids brings on this kind.

Blood Vessels Stretch.

What makes a headache, reduced to simplest terms, is the amount of fluid in and around the brain. Too much or too little of this fluid results in stretching the large blood vessels that supply the brain. The stretching is what hurts. Dr. Fay determined this by stretching the nerves of these blood vessels in the brains of patients undergoing brain operations.

The wet headache—too much fluid in the brain—is most common in the overweight, hydrated person who consumes large quantities of food and fluid and does not eliminate enough fluid. This person should, in general, reduce the amount of liquid consumed to not more than one quart a day.

More Fluid Intake.

The headache noted in the common type of underweight, overactive, nervous individual arises when fluid from the body is too rapidly lost from the skin or kidneys and cannot be properly retained in the brain cavity. This type of person, with the advice of his physician, should increase his fluid consumption to three or more quarts per day along with extra feedings.

These directions, Dr. Fay pointed out, apply to the true variety of headache, and should not be followed until medical examination has ruled out other conditions which may refer pain to the head.

The beneficial use of certain drugs for headaches was ascribed to their effect in regulating the fluid and blood volume relationship in the brain.

The large blood vessels which give a headache when stretched are the only structures in the brain that carry pain fibers. Besides stretching because of too much or too little fluid, irritation of these vessels at other places on their path to and from the brain gives rise to pain felt in the head as a headache.

Acoustics Called Foundation for Future Esperanto

LOS ANGELES.—Those who would create a universal language should take account of the new science of acoustics. Such is the suggestion of Dr. Vern O. Knudsen, acoustic expert of the University of California here.

Apparently little or no attention has been paid to the question whether the words of Esperanto or other artificial languages are readily understandable in spoken form. In view of the vast amount of time wasted in retarded telephone calls and acoustic confusion in poor auditoria, the creator of a language should avoid the use of syllables frequently misunderstood.

Incidentally, English is probably not the best language in this respect. For example, the terminal consonant group "ng," so common in English, is perhaps the worst offender in the alphabet.

Believe Spanish Best

In the Los Angeles auditorium tests, words ending in -ng were misunderstood more than half the time. In general, words ending in consonants are more likely to be missed than those ending in vowels. This fact often causes trouble for persons attempting to dictate strange material over the telephone.

Dr. Knudsen's pioneer tests have been conducted so far only in English. It is already suspected that Spanish will prove superior, with its large number of words ending in vowels—Valencia, Santa Barbara, poco tiempo, etc. The Chinese language may prove to be still better. To be sure, western people are often highly amused to hear a Chinese express meaning by sounding a vowel in two successive pitch tones. This may, however, prove to be the most scientific way of making one's self understood under difficulties.

Turner's Criticism

Turner, the famous English painter, once ridiculed his own paintings as a salad was offered him at a dinner party, in this wise: "Nice cool green that lettuce, isn't it? And the beetroot pretty red — yet not quite strong enough, and the mixture, delicate tint of yellow that. Add some mustard and then you have one of my paintings."

Jean Harlow as "Suzy" A Glamorous Story Of An American Girl In Paris

"Suzy," the outstanding new screen attraction Thursday and Friday at the Strand Theatre, tells an electrifying story of an American chorus girl stranded in London at the outbreak of the World War and caught in the web of war-time espionage.

Jean Harlow is starred in the new production and has two of the screens most popular leading men in Franchot Tone and Cary Grant. Different from any role in which Miss Harlow has ever appeared, it is one that she personally requested to do, and advance reports have it that the role is by far Miss Harlow's finest screen characterization.

A highlight of the picture is Miss Harlow's singing of "Did I Remember?" a new song written especially for her by the noted song-writing team of Harold Adamson and Walter Donaldson, and one destined to sweep the country as the year's most popular hit.

"Suzy" marks the third reunion of Miss Harlow and Franchot Tone as screen sweethearts within two years. Their previous appearances together were in "The Girl from Missouri" and "Reckless." Cary Garnt, completing the romantic triangle, appears with the star for the first time.

The production was filmed under the direction of George Fitzmaurice who has to his credit, among numerous film triumphs, the two Garbo successes "Mati Hari' and "As You Desire Me." The picture was adapted from Herbert Gorman's best-seller novel by Horace Jackson with additional dialogue by Lenore Coffee.

The story is about Suzy, the showgirl, who finds herself friendless in London in 1914. Terry Moore helps her out of a difficulty and they marry after a whirlwind courtship. Terry is foreman in a factory operated by a wily woman spy, who, suspicious of Terry, orders him killed.

When Terry is shot, Suzy, believing him to be dead, becomes fearful of being accused and flees to Paris. The war breaks out. Suzy is wooed and won by Andre Charville who later becomes France's most popular heroic war flyer Andre becomes more attentive to other women than he does to his own wife and is caught in the web of espionage headed by the same woman who had shot Terry.

Later, Terry, Suzy and Andre meet. Andre is killed in the spy nest and the mission he was to have completed on the following morning is carried out by Terry thus permitting Andre to die a hero of France.

The story races excitedly from London to Paris and the advanced airplane bases on the Western Front. Included in the cast are Benita Hume, as the bewitching spy; Lewis Stone, as Andre's father; Inez Courtney, as Suzy's friend; Greta Meyer, as the factory proprietres, and David Clyde as Terry's companion.

Temporary buildings for use of offices and storage quarters of the contractors are almost completed at this writing.

Mr. Wallace, resident engineer, representing the United States Treasury Department, and Mr. Jones, construction engineer for the contracting firm of Algernon Blair, are already on the job supervising the preliminary steps necessary for beginning actual construction.

SCHOOL FACTS

In 1933-34 Alabama got two millions of relief money to keep the schools open.

No other state depended upon the federal government to that extent.

Most states adopted new taxes for schools instead.

During 1933 and 1934 as many as 28 states adopted new taxes for education.

The sales tax alone as a source of school money was adopted in 18 states in two years.

Alabama schools are suffering more now because we depended upon relief money while other states were adopting new taxes.

Alabama had 23 per cent less revenue for schools in 1934 than in 1929.

In 31 states this drop was less because of new taxes adopted.

Six states—California, Illinois, Missouri, Louisiana, Oregon, and Tennessee—were able by new taxes to have more school money in 1934 than in 1929.

Alabama's income tax passed in 1933 was for debt service, not for school operation.

ASSOCIATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION

Frank Baker; extension work, Mrs. R. R. Hunt; associational pastor, Rev. Byron Hixon.

The August District Meeting will be held at Wilton Baptist Church on Sunday afternoon at 2:30 with District Superintendent, B. B. Curry in charge. We urge all pastors, S. S. Superintendents and all interested church members to be present. The churhes in our district known thus far are Aldrich, Antioch, Boothton, Dogwood Grove, Enon, Macedonia, Montevallo, Rhynes, Underwood and Wilton.

The purpose of this associational work is to standardize, enlarge and improve all the present Sunday Schools and to organize Sunday Schools in all churches where there are none. The responsibility and success of this work rests upon the shoulders of all Christian people who are interested in carrying out the great commission of our Lord.

May we urge that the Christian people of District No. 4, together with the Christian people of the entire Shelby Association, put forth every effort in work and prayer to reach more people for Bible study and by this, win them for Christ.

The only "tested and true" recipe for greatness and success is unquestionable obedience to God.—Signed: Kirk Lucas, Associational Superintendent.

CLANTON DEFEATED MONTEVALLO 7 TO 11

The Clanton Swamp Scratchers under the managerial strategy of the veteran skipper, J. E. Easterling, invaded Montevallo territory last Thursday afternoon, and returned home feeling quite chesty with a natural 7 to 11 victory safely tucked away.

Pitchers Hartley and Smither- for Montevallo, were unable to check the visitors, who started swinging at the outset, and refused to be quelled. Even after "Fireball' had got under full swing with his lightning speed, Powerhouse Culver, of the visitors, connected with one of the extra fast ones and it went for the circuit.

George Wilson pitched for Clanton, and Gabby Tiffin was catcher. It was a good game, and the Montevallo fans hope Clanton will come back for another game.

BANKING SYSTEM SHOWS PROGRESS

State Bank Resources Grow More Than Three Billion Dollars in a Year

NATIONAL BANKS GAIN

American Bankers Association Gives Details of Banking Institutions — Notes Stronger Conditions

NEW YORK. — Continued improvement in the condition of state chartered banking institutions, with an increase of more than three billion dollars in a year in total resources, is shown in a report just issued by the State Bank Division of the American Bankers Association.

The report was prepared by the division's Committee on State Bank Research from data furnished by state banking departments and parallels data issued by the Comptroller of the Currency for national banks which show similar improvements.

"The combined resources of 10,473 state supervised banks were $35,724,723,000 as of December 31, 1935," the state bank report says. "Total deposits amounted to $30,526,920,000. Total loans and discounts stood at $12,430,404,000 and total investments were $14,170,421,000."

A year previous, tables in the report show, there were 10,644 state supervised banks, with combined resources of $32,680,203,000, total deposits $27,297,959,000, loans and discounts $13,060,033,000 and investments $12,582,325,000.

Classes of Institutions

Of the reporting state banking institutions on December 31, 1935, 82% were commercial banks, the report states, 9% trust companies, almost 9% stock and mutual savings banks and less than 1% were private banks. The report adds:

"The parallel upward movements of deposits and total invested funds of total state supervised banks during the years 1934 and 1935, after declines in these items in 1932 and 1933, are indications of definite steps toward recovery in state banking.

"Based on figures assembled for total state supervised banks on resources and liabilities as of December 31, 1931 to 1935, it is noted: (1) that deposits in 1935 rose approximately 12 per cent over the previous year, as compared with an increase of about 9 per cent in 1934 over the year 1933, and declines of 7 per cent and 12 per cent in 1933 and 1932, respectively, from the preceding years of 1932 and 1931; and (2) that total invested funds increased by approximately 2 per cent in 1935 and also in 1934, while they had decreased by 9 per cent in 1933 and by 11 per cent in 1932."

Analysis Shows Stronger Position

In a survey and analysis of earnings and expenses of state banks doing a commercial business, it is brought out that in a majority of states they have increased their earning ability during 1935. On the basis of data covering 7,928 banks in 42 states, the report says:

"The most significant fact to be pointed out is that new profits of state banks—after deducting charge-offs on loans, investments, etc., and adding recoveries—were shown in 37 of the 42 states which reported in 1935, in comparison with net profits in only 11 of the 35 states reporting in 1934. Measured in terms of dollars per each $100 of invested funds, net profits in 1935 ranged between $2.40 and $.10 per $100, with 19 states showing profits of $1.00, or over, per $100; while in 1934 net profits did not exceed $1.20 per $100 and only three states showed profits of $1.00, or over."

Bankers Help Farmers

The conviction that 4-H Club work lays the foundation for sound citizenship and intelligent farming influenced a New York City bank executive to contribute $500 to the Agricultural Committee of the State Bankers Association, to further 4-H Club activities in the state. "I am convinced that the work is so worthy, and is being so well handled that it should interest those who believe in building sound citizenship, as well as intelligent farming for the future," he said.

Unusual prominence was given this past year to agricultural work by the Tennessee Bankers Association. The Agricultural Committee report reveals hearty cooperation between bankers and extension workers. "Key bankers and county agents have been in closer contact than ever before," it says.

Georgia bankers have given both moral and financial backing to a Marketing Project sponsored by the Extension Service of the College of Agriculture, and activities the past year showed significant results. The phases of the Marketing program emphasized in the year's work are: The retail curb market; roadside marketing; miscellaneous marketing (suited to the locality); bartering (exchange of commodities or services with neighbors); standardized canned products for sale prepared in homes or canning centers.

FUN FOR EVERYONE AT ALABAMA STATE FAIR

Birmingham, Ala.—Fifteen big grandstand acts have been booked for the forthcoming Alabama State Fair.

The feature attraction to be seen each night in front of the grand stand will be the Barnes and Cruthers musical extravaganza "The Show of the Century" a lavish production with 100 singers, dancers and comedians.

"The Show of the Century" is a convincing example of what can be accomplished for the outdoor stage. The producers of this fine production have outdone themselves in a determined effort to bring the open air stage show up to the highest standards set by the theatre.

The best known costumers of Hollywood and New York were called upon for their most modern creations. The striking efforts achieved in "A Russian Fantasy" and "A Rhapsody in Red", were the answers from the dictators of stage styles.

Eye-startling as they are, the costumes for these scenes of the revue are but one of the things that recommend "The Show of the Century" to this year's visitors to the Alabama State Fair which will be held at Birmingham for six days and six nights from September 28, to October 3. The cast includes favorites of stage and radio. Outstanding perhaps is Florence Tennyson, prima donna. Miss Tennyson has played leading parts in the San Carlos and English Opera Companies; acclaimed by thousands for her fine work as Jenny-Lind at the Minnesota State Fair's grandstand show and has been guest artist on numerous broadcasts.

Philip Phine, recently seen with Mary McCormic, will do much of the singing. The versatile and well known trio, Tyler, Thorn and Post will offer their laughing dance vehicle, "Three o'clock in the Morning" and a new version of the "Minuet."

Auto races will be features at the fair in front of the grandstand on the afternoons of Tuesday, September 29th, and Saturday, October 3rd.

Other sensational acts include Willie West and McGinty in "A Billion Building Blunders." They are late features of Ziegfield Follies and "The Big Broadcast o1 1935."

Royal American Shows, world's largest midway, will furnish the attractions for a mile long, glittering midway with 24 shows and 17 riding devices.

Shelby Co. Baptists End Meeting

EIGHTY - FOURTH SESSION HELD AT FOUR MILE CHURCH

Wilsonville, Aug. 20—The 84th session of the Shelby County Baptist Association closed Wednesday after a two-day session at the Four-Mile Baptist Church, three miles west of Wilsonville.

The Rev. A. L. Horton, of Vincent, and J. B. King, of Columbiana, were elected moderator and clerk, respectively.

The first day of the meeting Dr. L. L. Gwaltney, editor of the Alabama Baptist; Dr. Frank M. Barnes, corresponding secretary, Montgomery, and Dr. J. O. Colley, superintendent of the Baptist orphanage, Troy, were present, and presented the claims of their respective works.

Second day, reports on temperance, by the Rev. A. B. Canant; Home Missions by Judge L. B. Riddle; cooperative program and state missions by the Rev. W. H. Haddock; foreign missions by the Rev. Fred B. Pearson; Christian education by R. R. Hunt; relief and annuity by R. E. Hood; brotherhood by Clyde Adams; Ministerial Benefit Society by Rev. J. O. Oaks, were read, discussed and adopted.

Four-Mile Baptist Church was organized in 1824. An interesting momento connected with the founding of this church is a section of pine log, attached to the wall of the church, on the rostrum, which is well-preserved, and which was used as part of the bush arbor when the church was organized.

It was at the church where Dr. T. V. Neal, president of Howard College, attended, was ordained to the ministry, and served as pastor.

Extra State Gas Tax Latest Rumor

EXPECTED TO COME UP AT NEXT SESSION OF THE LEGISLATURE

A widely circulated and much discussed report in circulation at the capitol Monday was to the effect that if and when the Legislature meets in extra session, a veteran legislator will introduce a bill proposing an extra State tax levy of one cent a gallon on gasoline, proceeds of which are to be used wholly and exclusively for matching Federal funds to build paved roads. This levy, it is said, would be temporary only, for a definite period of years, extending through the remainder of the present administration or, possibly a year or two beyond.

It is estimated, it is understood, that this additional one-cent levy would bring in approximately $1,700,000 a year. There is now available to Alabama, when matched, it was learned, $5,000,000 of Federal funds provided for under the Hayden-Cartwright Act of Congress, and more than $3,000,000 more will be available from the same source on and after Jan. 1, 1937 The plan of the legislator who is reported to be contemplating a proposal to boost the gasoline tax one cent more for the sole purpose of matching Federal aid, is to make available a total sum of $10,000,000 or thereabouts for paving, to be apportioned in the State on the basis of approximately $250,000 to each county.

Eight Cities Will Get Air Fields

Washington, Aug. 15.—Aubrey Williams, deputy Works Progress Administrator, reported today projects were under construction in eight Alabama cities in WPA's $419,021 airport development program for the State.

In addition, a $58,703 development at Mobile has been completed, while work on Roberts Field in Birmingham has been suspended temporarily.

One $35,946 project on the municipal airport at Birminpham has been completed, and two others totaling $99,138 are in progress. Work also has been finished on a $5,654 municipal project in Dothan, and another costing $2,720 is active.

Other active projects are at Montgomery, where authorized expenditure is $98,408; Clanton, $2,638; Monroeville, $14,042; Montevallo, $8,935; Sheffield, $37,051; and Tuscaloosa, $50,000.

The deputy administrator said authorizations for expenditures in the nationwide program rose from $23,111,886 on March 31 to $40,690,290 on June 30. The airport program now includes 506 projects at 438 locations.

Miss Moore Gives House Party

Miss Mary Sue Moore entertained a group of her nieces and nephews at a house party last week at her country home, Oak Crest, five miles south of Montevallo. The following constituted the party:

Miss Nancy Jo Moore, Miss Elizabeth Gentry Moore, daughters of Dr. C. W. C. Moore, of Talladega; Miss Nancy Lee Moore, Miss Kelly Moore, daughters of Mr. S. C. Moore, Route 2, Montevallo; Cliff Moore and Cary Moore, medical students at Emory University, and sons of Dr. Cliff Moore, of Lindale, Ga.

Mr. Charles Crayton, of Lindale, Ga., was a guest of the party.

On Friday evening the members of the party were guests of Miss Moore at the Strand Theatre, Montevallo, having spent the day with Dr. and Mrs. J. Alex Moore.

Shelby Fares Well From WPA Funds

$224,523 SPENT BY FEDERAL AGENCY ON LOCAL PROJECTS

Montgomery, Ala., Aug. 25.—For the 13 months the program operated through July 31, the Works Progress Administration invested $224,523 in projects in Shelby county, Ray Crow, state WPA administrator, announced here today.

Of this amount $106,165 was for payrolls and $118,357 was for materials used in the projects. A considerable part of the materials was purchased from local dealers were possible. The totals include the amounts spent by the National Youth Administration, a unit of the Works Progress Administration.

For Alabama the total expenditures for the same period was $18,428,379. Of this amount $12,827,358 was for payrolls and $5,601,021 for materials.

While all material purchases are made by the U. S. Treasury Department on low bids, regardless of the point of origin of the bids, Mr. Crow said, apprximately 90 per cent of all orders were placed through Alabama firms.

Funds expended for payrolls to the otherwise jobless likewise found their way into the hands of grocerymen, clothing merchants and the general channels of trade, while roads, public buildings, paved streets and sidewalks, sewers, curbs and gutters, waterworks, and many other tangible projects created by the work program stand as permanent investments in public health and welfare.

The program within a year has provided for Alabama 154 new public buildings, of which 71 are school buildings, representing a total investment of $3,542,460. Of this amount $637,309 was contributed by the local sponsors.

New water reservoirs, sanitary and storm sewers and masonry drainage projects were constructed and repaired in 34 cities and towns. For this work the WPA pledged $3,272,484 and the sponsors $255,770.

Under sponsorship of the State Health Department 68 miles of new ditches and 18 miles of existing ditches have been excavated to lessen the incidence of malaria.

Among other accomplishments are, the paving of 52 miles of streets in cities and small towns, the construction of 610 miles of new roads, the grading, widening and improving of 4,812 miles of old roads, the construction of 1,795 new bridges and the paving of 400 miles of "three-way" roads.

As of August 1 there were 29,679 relief persons employed in the WPA program with an additional 1,070 non-relief persons.

IMPROVEMENTS AT MONTEVALLO CAFE

Extensive improvements are being made at Montevallo Cafe and Bakery. The dining room and kitchen will be enlarged to fully accommodate the growing patronage of this popular emporium, and additional bakery equipment is being installed. Mr. P. E. Woolley, proprietor, in conversation with The Times man Tuesday said: "When these improvements are completed we hope to have the most modern and up-to-date place in this line between Montgomery and Birmingham".

Alabama Must Face Facts In The Education Of Its Youth

Montgomery, Ala.—"Will Alabama acknowledge and meet its responsibility to educate its childhood and youth?" This question is raised in a statement issued Monday by Mrs James Fitts Hill.

"For five years this question has gone unanswered", she said. "It has been booted about in every conceivable direction in the charge and counter charge of political forces. At times it has been kicked aside and lost to view while partisian groups brandished verbal shillalahs in combat over matters of secondary importance."

"The time has come to stand four-square in defense of education," she added, "and demand that citizens of Alabama face the facts".

"If anyone will come to grips with the situation", Mrs. Hill declared, "and honestly weigh the facts relating to the present situation of public elementary and high schools and institutions of higher learning, he will be forced to admit that Alabama is able to supply the $4,000,000 additional revenue required to rescue education from its desperate financial distress."

"Alabama is not only able to provide a more liberal support for education", Mrs. Hill continued, "but there is a condition peculiar to the state which makes it imperative that a greater per cent of the state's income be used for education. According to a study published by the American School Board Journal, in 1932, it is found that to each 100 adults, 21 years of age and over, in Alabama, there are 60 children, ages 5 to 17, inclusive; whereas in the United States there are only 44 children to each 100 adults. When these ratios are reduced to percentages for the purpose of determining the load the adult population in Alabama must assume in educating its childhood in comparison with the load upon the entire adult population in the United States, it is found that Alabama has a 32 per cent greater responsibility than the average state in the nation. Is Alabama facing this responsibility? No, we are forced to admit that such is not the case. From figures on expenditures for education, supplied by the U. S. Office of Education, we find that Alabama in 1934 used 24 per cent less of its annual income for education than the average in the nation. Thus we see Alabama attempting to carry a 32 per cent greater educational burden than the average for the United States with an effort 24 per cent less. It is an impossible feat. It is futile for Alabama to attempt to prepare its childhood and youth for the strenuous competition of modern life so long as it applies for the support of public education a percentage of its income less than the average in the United States."

Uniform System of County Accounting Effective Oct. 1

The various county governments in Alabama will, on Oct. 1, commence functioning under a broad general efficiency plan which was provided for by the present Legislature under the title of "county financial control act" and "uniform system of county accounting and reporting," companion measures.

As outlined by Comptroller Chas. W. Lee, the uniform accounting system as it generally will be known, will place every county, from the largest (Jefferson) to the smallest, (Coosa) strictly on a business or "check-stub" basis. In other words, as Mr. Lee emphasized, spending must cease when funds are exhausted That will be made possible through operation of the county budget control act. Business transactions of the various counties will be uniform through application of the uniform system of county accounting and reporting.

Mr. Lee yesterday appealed for the cooperation of the various courts of county commissioners and boards of revenue He pointed out that responsibility for enforcement of the laws devolved upon such county governing agencies, adding that the Legislature had taken cognizance of possible political friction between office holders with consequent refusal to cooperate, by giving "teeth" to the uniform aclounting bill. That measure includes a provision making refusal to cooperate a misdemeanor.

Samples of all new forms to be installed by the counties have been drawn and shortly will go to the printer. How the measures will operate will be explained to the various county officers by State examiners of accounts who now are being schooled in their provisions. They will be equipped with a manual for ready definition of technical provisions of the acts.

"This system of accounting and reporting," Comptroller Lee said, "is designed to provide for the efficient administration of the financial affairs of the counties. It provides for the efficient administration of the financial affairs of the counties. It provides for an analysis of cash receipts by sources from which money is received into the county treasuries and expenditures from all funds Provision is made for budgetory control of the general fund and any other fund which the governing body of the county may desire to place under such control.

"The budget is a statement prepared and adopted by the governing body of the county at the beginning of the fiscal year. It deals with estimated income or funds which it is anticipated will be received during that fiscal year and be available for governmental purposes. It makes provision for paying the current year's expenses and maintenance of all county agencies the purchase of supplies and retirement of maturing obligations In general, it provides that an accurate check on current purchases be kept and that orders for supplies be recorded at the time of actual payment. Thus the counties are certain of maintaining a balance to meet the current obligations."

Keller Addresses Legion Meeting

DARK PICTURE IS PAINTED FOR ALABAMA'S SCHOOL FUTURE

Huntsville, Ala.—Dr. J. A. Keller, state superintendent of education, presented some of education's problems before Alabama's war veterans at the final business session of the eighteenth annual department convention here this morning.

Pointing out that school revenues are at a low figure, Dr. Keller told Legionnaires that education and Alabama's youth will suffer increasing hardships unless more revenue is found.

"Education is in great distress in Alabama, and I see this as a sign of indifference toward our youth," Dr. Keller said. "During the last five years, Alabama has had the shortest school terms of any state in the union. To illustrate how we are losing ground, within one year 12 members of the faculty at a certain Alabama college left their work because of this condition. Thirty-two leading high school principals also left the Alabama school system.

If we do not take some steps to correct this, it will mean that leaders in Alabama will be sent here from other states. In addition, Alabama schools in a few years will fall into the hands of young inexperienced girls who do not know how to teach."

Following the address by Dr. Keller, the convention adopted a resolution urging Gov. Graves and the Legislature to use every means to obtain adequate educational opportunities for the state.

Low Per Cent Is Given For Schools

COMPARISON OF ALABAMA WITH OTHER STATES OF THE SOUTHEAST

Montgomery, Ala.—In reply to the question whether Alabama's per capita wealth and per capita expenditures for education prove that the state is doing more than other states for education or less, Mrs. James Fitts Hill, in a statement issued Monday, said, "Alabama probably did the least of any state in the nation in 1935-1936."

"Income is the most valid index of true wealth, so if we wish to compare the effort Alabama is making to support education with that of other states in the nation," Mrs. Hill said, "the most valid basis for such comparison is the per cent of income spent for education. The most recent figures available on the costs of schools give the current expenditures for elementary and high schools in 1933-1934. According to these figures, it was found that Alabama spent 2.5 per cent of her total income for the current expense of the public schools in 1933-1934. This figure compares with 2.6 per cent for the eleven Southeastern States, and 3 per cent for the nation. Thus we find that Alabama ranks seventh in the Southeastern Region when the cost of its public school system is calculated upon a basis of true wealth. The states ranking below Alabama were Arkansas, Georgia, Kentucky and Louisiana."

"If anyone can find comfort in the fact that four states separated Alabama from the distinction of being the lowest state in the support of its common schools," Mrs. Hill asserted, "he will be put to shame when a comparison is made between Alabama and the states of North Carolina and Mississippi. The per capita income of Alabama in 1934 was $200 compared to $206 for North Carolina and $181 for Mississippi However, when the efforts of these states were calculated upon a basis of wealth and compared, it was found that North Carolina expended 2.8 per cent of its total income for public schools, Mississippi, 2.9 per cent, and Alabama only 2.5 per cent."

Mrs. Hill continued, "Those who seek to defend Alabama with the claim that the state is making an effort to support education in proportion to her wealth will probably find further cause for grief when figures are available on the cost of public schools for 1935-1936 for all the states. The figures for Alabama show that the per cent of income spent for current expenses in Alabama in 1936 was only 2.5. Moreover, when the money given to higher education is included in the figures for calculating the per-cent of total income devoted to education, those opposing more revenue for schools will find even less comfort. Surely, no state in the Southeastern Region has been so parsimonious in the support of its institutions of higher learning as Alabama. When the total state appropriations for these institutions are added to the cost of the public schools, it will, no doubt, be found that Alabama in 1935-1935 devoted the lowest per cent of income for the support of education of any state in the Southeast and the Southeast always ranks below the five other regions in the nation."

FOUNDATIONS MADE FOR THE NEW POST OFFICE

Farm Meeting Is Postponed

The annual meeting of the Alabama Farm Bureau Federation which was scheduled to be held in Auburn on the 28 and 29 of August has been postponed, it was announced today by J. L. Edwards, President of the organization.

Mr. Edwards stated that the meeting would be held in the fall, the exact dates to be announced later. He said that, due to the fact that several prominent speakers invited to take part in the meeting were unable to come to Alabama at this time, and to further fact that farmers in many counties were busy harvesting their crops, it was thought wise to postpone the meeting until after the crops were harvested.

Russian Conspirators Against Stalin Plead Guilty—Italy and France Sparring Over Spain—Roosevelt Primed for Drouth Area Tour.

Gregory Zinoviev

SIXTEEN men, arraigned in Moscow on charges of plotting the assassination of Dictator Josef Stalin and the seizure of power in the Soviet republic, calmly pleaded guilty. Two of them, Gregory Zinoviev and Leo Kamenev, were members with Stalin 13 years ago of a triumvirate that governed Russia and are well known to the outside world. The confessions did not end the trial, for the defendants contradicted and accused one another until the case was in a jumble. Some of them, like Zinoviev, proudly accepted responsibility for the plot, which was said to have been engineered by the exiled Leon Trotzky. It was believed all sixteen would face the firing squad.

Twelve more men and one woman, the government announced, were held for examination and probable trial. Some of these were involved by the confessions of the sixteen conspirators.

In the case or trial the defendants revealed the fact that not only were they plotting the assassination of Stalin and four others, but planned also to betray Trotzky and place Zinoviev and Kamenev in supreme power.

Trotzky, at Hoenefoss, Norway, scoffed at the Moscow proceedings as "humbug," "For political vengeance," he said, "the trial puts the Dreyfus scandal and the reichstag fire in the shadow. The confessions were forced by the 'Ogpu' (secret police), which gives the accused a choice between confession according to the Ogpu's desires and taking lesser penalties or death."

PREMIER MUSSOLINI, insisting that neutrality in the Spanish war must mean absolute nonintervention, suddenly put Italy's air force of 1,500 war planes in readiness for flight to the aid of the Spanish rebels if France would not abandon her support of the Madrid regime.

News of this stirred the People's Front government of France to indignation. Officials in Paris said if Italy sent arms and munitions to the rebels in Spain or otherwise openly aided them, France would have to abandon her neutral position and help the socialists.

For a day this situation alarmed the statesmen of Europe, but soon it was stated in both Rome and Paris that negotiations for the neutrality accord were going forward nicely with prospects for a satisfactory agreement that would include both Italy and Germany. Whether Germany would come in, however, was still in doubt. Berlin was further provoked against the Madrid government by the stopping and search of the German steamer Kamerun by Spanish warships off Cadiz. German warships were ordered to protect German shipping "by all means" and the German charge d'affairs at Madrid was instructed to "protest immediately and in the sharpest form against the action of the Spanish warships, which constituted a violation of all international law."

Virgilio Cabanellas

DISPATCHES from the French border said Spanish rebel warships finally had begun the long threatened bombardment of San Sebastian and Irun, and that the loyalists were carrying out the threatened execution of the 1,900 Fascist hostages they were holding there. The battleship Espana fired a lot of heavy shells toward Fort Guadalupe but for a time at least was apparently not trying to hit that stronghold because many of their sympathizers were held prisoners in the fort. The Guadalupe garrison was hesitant in returning the fire for fear that shells would fall on French territory. Already the French government was angered by the dropping of bombs on French border towns, though it was disputed whether they came from loyalist or rebel planes.

The Fascists captured the important town of Badajoz, near the Portuguese border, at the point of the bayonet, and were reported to have executed 1,500 government adherents taken there. The rebels also reported a victory near Zaragoza after a bloody battle. General Franco met General Mola and "President" Virgilio Cabanellas at the northern rebel headquarters in Burgos and planned for further advances of their southern and northern columns on Madrid.

CATALONIA, which for four years has been an autonomous region within the Spanish state, and which has been supporting the Madrid government against the Fascist rebels, sees in the present conditions the opportunity to establish its full independence. The generalitat or government council decreed confiscation of all private property; and then, "to eliminate dual control and place all responsibility in one place," all magistrates, judges and others appointed by the Madrid government were relieved of their duties. The council also announced it would act henceforth in complete independence in maintaining order.

The Catalonian decree promulgated plans for a single tax and speedy suppression of multiple taxation. The basis for the new tax plan, although undecided, was presumed to be income, not land, as the large agricultural properties are to be collectivized.

POPE PIUS XI, addressing pilgrims from Malta, took another whack at communism. Alluding evidently to the civil war in Spain, he said: "The world is upside down, and sick from a grievous malady which threatens to become graver and more dangerous still. It is not necessary to say to you Maltese what this illness is, because you have a definite part in the tribulation.

"There is only the hand of God to aid humanity and put an end to the horrible massacres which are going on and all the offenses against human fraternity, against religion, priests and God."

PREPARATIONS for President Roosevelt's trip through the drouth region of the Middle West were practically completed and the Chief Executive was supplied with all the facts and figures needed to give him a comprehensive understanding of the situation before starting. This information was furnished mainly by WPA Administrator Harry Hopkins, who was selected to accompany Mr. Roosevelt on the tour. Mr. Hopkins told the President that in the drouth area 90,000 persons already are on the WPA payrolls and that the number eventually will be 120,000 to 150,000, the relief work being continued through the winter. At this time the cost per man is about $50 a month.

Additional appropriations by the next congress will be necessary, Hopkins said, to care for the load placed upon his organization by the drouth crisis. The amount of new money necessary has not been determined.

Estimates of the amount of money deemed necessary to meet the situation in the "dust bowl" were given the President by Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau and Acting Budget Director Daniel Bell.

President Benes

NEITHER Fascisim nor Communism will be tolerated in Czechoslovakia, which is "a firm, indestructible lighthouse of democracy," said President Eduard Benes in a speech at Reichenberg. But he told the German minority which he was addressing particularly, that he hoped that in the fall "the Locarno powers will be able to work out a plan for general European co-operation and that good neighborly relations will be established between Germany and Czechoslovakia."

Leaders of the German minority in Czechoslovakia charge that unemployment in their part of the country is greater than anywhere else in Czechoslovakia—73 unemployed per 1,000 population, compared with the state average of 38 per 1,000.

They charge that this is partly the result of the government's failure to place orders in German Bohemian factories and failure to give state jobs to members of the German minority.

SOIL conservation compliance is to be checked by a system of aerial photography, if the experiments now being carried on by the AAA are satisfactory. The plan is still only on trial but several millions of acres have already been photographed, it was learned today. So far it is proving cheaper and more efficient than the usual way of checking farmers' soil conservation compliance. The air pictures also are being extensively used by the soil conservation service to map erosion and soil depletion and to determine remedies.

STARTING its 1937 building program, the Navy department opened bids on twelve new destroyers and six submarines. The bids came from private shipyards and estimates were submitted by navy yards, according to law.

It was found that the cost of construction has advanced approximately $1,000,000 per vessel in the last year.

THERE is enough wheat in the United States for the usual domestic requirements of the season of 1936-37, according to the midsummer report of the bureau of agricultural economics, but the supply of red spring wheat and durum is short and consequently importation of those varieties will be continued. The amount, however, will not be large, Secretary Wallace stated.

"It is probable the spring wheat mills in the 1936-'37 season will use a larger percentage of hard red winter and Pacific northwest wheat than last year," said the report. "A larger than usual quantity of soft red winter wheat is also likely to be used in bread flour. As a result, imports of milling wheat may be less than in 1935."

Wheat prices in the United States may be expected to average about as high relative to world price levels as during the 1935-'36 season, when the price of No. 2 hard winter at Kansas City was 15 cents over Liverpool, the bureau said. During the last three years short crops together with other influences resulted in wheat prices in the United States being maintained unusually high relative to the world market price.

"Farm prices probably have been 20 cents to 30 cents higher than might have been expected with more nearly normal yields in the United States," the report continued. "A return of average or greater than average yields in the United States would result in an export surplus and prices would adjust toward an export basis.

"The acreage seeded for the 1936 crop, 74,000,000 acres, was the second largest in history, and seedings as large for the 1937 crop would produce fully enough wheat for total domestic utilization even if yields should turn out to be one-fourth below average."

President Roosevelt

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT was at his best as a radio orator when he addressed the summer camp at Chautauqua, N. Y., on foreign relations. He expressed his deep concern about tendencies in other parts of the world and spoke bitterly about the violation of both the letter and the spirit of international agreements "without regard to the simple principles of honor."

"Our closest neighbors are good neighbors," the President said. "If there are remoter nations that wish us not good but ill, they know that we are strong; they know that we can and will defend ourself and defend our neighborhood."

Mr. Roosevelt said he had seen war on land and sea.

"I have seen blood running from the wounded," he said. "I have seen men coughing out their gassed lungs. I have seen the dead in the mud. I have seen cities destroyed. I have seen 200 limping, exhausted men come out of line—the survivors of a regiment of 1,000 who went forward forty-eight hours before. I have seen children starving. I have seen the agonies of mothers and wives. I hate war!"

Germans felt that Mr. Roosevelt's speech was aimed at them and resented his criticism. A Mexico City newspaper saw in it evidence that the Monroe doctrine was to be revived. The press of Buenos Aires warmly applauded the address, one journal saying:

"Without the intention of making a parallel between discourses recently heard from Rome or from Berlin and which proclaimed violence and expansion as the two sole aims of the modern states, we recommend reading this dignified and sincere Roosevelt speech, ennobled by the spontaneity of human content and with which Roosevelt raised his figure above the stature of all dictators."

SEVEN minutes of lively fighting put Joe Louis of Detroit once more on the road to the heavyweight championship. He made his come-back by knocking out Jack Sharkey, one time title holder, in the third round at New York. The Lithuanian sailor from Boston was plucky enough but proved no match for the much younger negro. Louis now wants an immediate return match with Max Schmeling, but the German insists his next fight must be with Jim Braddock, the champion.

FOLLOWING the recommendation of Father Charles E. Coughlin, the National Union for Social Justice, in convention in Cleveland, indorsed the candidacy of Representatives Lemke and O'Brien, heads of the Union party ticket. But, also on the advice of the priest, the Lemke platform was not indorsed. The 25,000 members of the N. U. S. J. present enthusiastically and unanimously elected Father Coughlin president of the organization. Lemke and O'Brien both appeared before the convention, delivered speeches and were given a rousing reception.

AN EQUITY suit attacking the constitutionality of the commodity exchange act, chiefly on the ground that it seeks to regulate intrastate rather than interstate commerce in violation to the Constitution, was filed in the federal district court in Chicago.

In his petition Mr. Moore asked that the commodity exchange act be declared unconstitutional, void, and unenforceable.

The dedication of the magnificent war monument, designed by a Canadian artist, recently unveiled by the king of England in memory of the Canadian soldiers that fell at Vimy Ridge, is important to all our friends north of the boundary in Canada. It will interest, also, all Americans that were sent abroad in that famous fight, with which we had nothing to do except lose our men and our money. American soldiers, who liked the Canadian and Australian troops better than any others they met, according to statements made by many, testify to the courage with which the colonial Englishmen fought at Vimy Ridge and elsewhere.

Statistics of the war show that, on the side of the allies, the percentage of death was higher among the Canadians than among any other troops involved, excepting the French themselves, who fought at their own frontiers to defend their own homes.

Sixty thousand Canadians lie buried, each one an "unknown soldier," around that great monument. The king of England, after a long and really admirable speech of appreciation, lowered the flags that hid the monument which, as he said, will forever honor the courage of the Canadians that fought and that lie dead and buried.

The war that killed so many millions, blowing them to pieces, leaving them to die shattered and agonizing on the battlefield; suffocating, making them insane with the poison gas just coming into fashion, seemed between 1914 and 1918 as horrible as any war could be.

But the civil war, the worst, most savage, pitiless and ferocious of all wars, now going on in Spain, makes the big war comparatively mild.

Lord Rothermere's London Daily Mail eclipses in the horror of one published statement all stories of horror in the war and goes beyond anything that could possibly be believed.

When the French newspaper, the Friend of the People, described fighters for Madrid's radical government digging up and throwing from their graves the bodies of Catholic nuns, that horror seems beyond belief.

But Lord Rothermere's newspaper prints the statement that other nuns ALIVE were seized—three of them—their clothing saturated with gasoline, and burned to death. The Daily Mail also quotes the statement that in the city of Barcelona, when the radical forces had conquered the rebellious insurgent inhabitants, "any Catholic priest in the city was butchered without mercy."

Russia is, according to reliable reports, in constant communication with the Madrid government by radio.

Newspapers in England, and the more conservative newspapers in France, declare that Russia, in addition to advising Madrid concerning the immediate civil war and helping the Spanish government by the purchase of Spanish bonds, is also sending by radio detailed information as to the organization in Spain of a "Soviet government" similar to that existing in Russia.

France, thanks to the existing alliance with Russia — resented by many of the old-fashioned Frenchmen, who ask, "Is Stalin the real ruler of France?"—is under pressure from Russia to help the Madrid government against the insurgents.

If Spain should become really sovietized, under the guidance of Russia, the Spanish peninsula would be practically a branch and a dependency of Soviet Russia at the southwest corner of Europe.

Russia, whose planes have been taking information on manufacturing poison gas and building factories to the nations that are friendly to her in central Europe, might build up a chain of Communist states too powerful even for the dictator governments of Italy and Germany, and the remaining "democratic" government of Great Britain. It is not a happy time for Europeans, or for any interested in Europe's future peace and welfare.

Hitler is reported on the point of siding with the Spanish insurgents against the radical Madrid regime, because of savage attacks made on Nazi officers in Spain. It is reported that a woman in charge of the Hitler office was threatened with death if she would not reveal the whereabouts of her principal; dragged into the streets, her dress was soaked with gasoline. An interruption prevented applying the match.

No New Tax Levies

Washington.—President Roosevelt has come out again with a statement that the burden of taxes is regrettable and that there must be no new levies nor tax increase by the next congress. He chose to get his views to the public by staging a conference at the White House the other day when he summoned Chairman Harrison of the senate finance committee and Chairman Doughton of the house ways and means committee for a breakfast meeting to discuss the subject. He followed this almost too quickly by releasing a statement, a letter from Secretary Morgenthau that substantiated the spoken word of his two congressional leaders.

But somehow the word from the White House prompted many observers here to pick flaws in the pronouncement; they began at once to find several places in the new picture that appeared to have been smeared over by the paint brush, and, in addition, there was a sudden yelp from the Republican national committee which did not help Mr. Roosevelt's plans to show the country that the tax burden had reached its peak.

The Republicans were quite harsh because they called attention to the fact that Mr. Roosevelt on three previous occasions had assured the country there would be no new taxes, and that in each instance new tax legislation somehow or other had been enacted by congress.

Aside from the presidential declaration that there would be no new taxes nor increases in the present levies and that there would be a study of the general tax structure, the President made the point through Secretary Morgenthau's letter that there were a good many hundred millions in "recoverable assets." He also urged upon the country that business has improved so rapidly that additional federal income may be expected from the present tax rates. This latter, of course, is true providing business holds its own or moves to higher levels but it is with respect to the recoverable assets that many questions now are being asked. For the sake of clarity, it may be explained that the recoverable assets to which Mr. Roosevelt referred consisted of the loans of federal money by the various emergency agencies for relief and recovery purposes. There are the millions loaned by the Reconstruction Finance corporation; the equally large amounts loaned by the Works Progress administration and the Public Works administration to states, counties and cities for relief or for job-making construction. In addition, there are loans by the Home Owners' Loan corporation, the Federal Farm Credit administration, loans for crop production, for marketing and countless other types. These are all carried on the books as recoverable assets and their total may amount to as much as $8,000,000,000.

The policy of the New Deal administration is to consider these at their face value. It is the claim of the White House consistently that these loans will be repaid and that they can be used to retire an equal amount of the national debt, which, indeed, is true if the loans ever are repaid.

So, whenever the New Deal is called on to defend itself against charges of imposing a gigantic burden of tax or an equally gigantic burden of public debt, its spokesmen attempt to demonstrate that the public debt figure as well as the taxes must be considered in their relationship to these recoverable assets.

To explain the Roosevelt position further, one may recall that a month ago when the public debt reached the staggering total of $33,779,000,000 the Treasury secretary contended in a public statement that against this sum there should be offset the cash assets in the general fund of the Treasury, then totaling $2,681,000,000 and the $2,000,000,000 of gold that is sterilized in what is known as the exchange sterilization fund.

"In addition," Mr. Morgenthau added in his statement, "we have certain assets representing obligations due us upon which the Treasury will realize cash and which will ultimately be available for debt retirement. These recoverable assets —millions to home owners, to farmers, to railways, to banks and insurance companies, to states, and cities—now total more than $4,000,000,000. These three items—cash on hand, stabilization fund and recoverable loans—provide an offset of $8,750,000,000 to the $33,779,000,000 public debt."

It thus is made to appear directly in issue how completely the Roosevelt administration calculates using these recoverable assets in retiring the public debt. Having gone so thoroughly on record, it is difficult to see how there could have been such a mistake made as developed from the White House conference on taxes. I refer to the inclusion in Secretary Morgenthau's letter of a reference to the recoverable assets as one of the reasons why no new taxes will not have to be levied. Some critics have stated boldly that the White House statements on the recoverable assets cannot be justified. Their assertion is that if the Treasury properly included recoverable assets as a thing to be used in offsetting the public debt, then by the same token those recoverable assets, or repayments of them, cannot be used to reduce the tax burden. In other words, the money represented by those assets cannot be spent in two different ways. Either it must be used to retire public debt or it must be used for current spending by the administration. It seems to be simply a refusal to believe the old adage that you cannot have your cake and eat it too.

If I should attempt to analyze the situation in the light of a personal equation I think I might properly say that if I loaned $500 to a friend and at the same time if I borrowed $500 from a bank, I might properly say the $500 loaned to the friend could be used to pay off the bank loan. So far, so good. But if the friend repaid $250 to me and I spent that $250 and had no other resources, I can't quite figure out how I would pay the bank the $500 I had borrowed from that institution.

Although perhaps my worries as an individual about government policies may not be very important because I am just one individual, I entertain considerable fear about those recoverable assets in another respect. For some reason—and I think I can state it—I doubt that a very large portion of those recoverable assets ever will be collected. I have a hunch that in the next fifteen or twenty years the bulk of those debts which the Roosevelt administration counts as repayable will be cancelled or defaulted. In either event, I think I see how politics is going to play an important part and I am convinced further that Mr. Morgenthau and Mr. Roosevelt as well, if he shares Mr. Morgenthau's belief, is overlooking that very vital influence when he holds these loans as likely to be repaid.

Default Likely

I recall that the late Albert C. Ritchie, four times a Democratic governor of Maryland, predicted that the money loaned for the various purposes outlined above, would never be paid back. Indeed, Governor Ritchie, who was a very practical man and who thoroughly disliked deluding himself, used the word "repudiation" in connection with these debts. He said they would be handled just like the $11,000,000,000 of war loans made to European nations.

It is a noble thought, of course, that the loans will be repaid, yet it is quite apparent that a cancellation drive is already under way. I think most of those who do me the honor to read my column will recall that more than a year ago I directed their attention to the reduction in interest rates which congress had ordered on many of the loans. That is simply the first step. Cancellation proposals, undisguised, are bound to follow.

Unless I am mistaken, the astute Jesse Jones, chairman of the Reconstruction Finance corporation and a man who never kids himself, already has kissed good-by to many of the millions that have been loaned by his agency. Of course, the Reconstruction Finance corporation carries those loans on its books and counts them still as valid. But I am of the opinion that Mr. Jones probably regards those items as dead debts.

But to go further with the idea of cancellation, it takes no stretch of the imagination to say that the Home Owners' Loan corporation, for example, will soon have a good many thousand foreclosed properties on its hands. It takes no more imagination to say that politicians who have ridden into office with promises to help those people whose homes have been foreclosed will carry out their promises by further voting interest reduction or curtailment of principal.

A more striking illustration, it seems to me, can be found in the case of the loans to states, cities and towns. Who among the politicians is going to have the courage to resist the tumult and the voting of their constituents to avoid increase in their local taxes when they call for cancellation of the loans? I think I know politicians well enough to say that few of them will resist. They are going to be very careless of other people's money, even though that money has to be obtained by the federal government through collection of taxes from individuals.

While the bonus for the ex-service men is a dead issue, every one knows how representatives and senators capitulated to the demands of the veterans' lobby. Picture for yourself, if you will, how much stronger the demand will be when a whole community sets up a howl to have the funds it has borrowed from the federal government finally declared to have been just a gift and not a loan.

Gunlock Ranch

By FRANK H. SPEARMAN

COPYRIGHT FRANK H. SPEARMAN W.N.U. SERVICE

SYNOPSIS

Sleepy Cat, desert town of the Southwest, is celebrating the Fourth of July. Jane Van Tambel, beautiful daughter of Gus Van Tambel, hated owner of Gunlock ranch, has arrived from the East for the first time. She watches the Frontier Day celebration in company with Dr. Carpy, crusty, tender-hearted friend of the community. Henry Sawdy of the Circle Dot ranch, tricked in a fake horse race the day before by Dave McCrossen, foreman at Gunlock, plans revenge. He enters Bill Denison, a handsome young Texas wrangler, in the rodeo which McCrossen is favored to win, and lays heavy bets on him. Unknown to the crowd, Denison is a champion horseman. McCrossen and the young stranger tie in the various events. Denison drops a cigarette carelessly. Racing down the track full tilt, he picks up the cigarette. The verdict goes to Denison when McCrossen refuses to attempt the stunt. Entreated by the crowd, Denison agrees to perform another trick. Jane is asked for her bracelet, and throws it on the track. Just as Denison rides to pick it up a yell from Barney Rebstock, a McCrossen henchman, scares the pony, nearly costing the rider his life. Gun play is prevented by the intervention of Dr. Carpy. Back on Gunlock ranch after two years in Chicago, because of her father's illness, Jane gets lost riding in the hills and meets Denison, now a neighbor, who guides her home. Not knowing her identity, he speaks bitterly of Van Tambel. She tells McCrossen who brought her home and he denounces Denison as a cattle thief. Later she asks Dr. Carpy why her father is unpopular and he tells her it is because of Van Tambel's ruthless and unscrupulous character. Visiting her father in the hospital, Jane is warned to be wary of McCrossen's honesty, but her father urges her to be nice to him.

"I piled the house supplies in the back," explained McCrossen, "so you'd better ride with me.

"Brought you an extra-heavy coat over," he added. "Thought you might need it. Will you put it on now?"

His voice, never harsh, sounded solicitous. Jane thought she would put the coat on. Her foreman, sitting beside her, helped her get into it. His manner was tender. His hands, as he straightened the coat collar, lingered a moment on her shoulders, Jane shook her shoulders slightly to draw them away.

"Your father's a great man, Jane," he said. "No use talkin'."

"I'm glad to hear some one say a good word for him," returned Jane dryly.

"Oh, he's got his enemies, I know. But from the first minute I ever saw you, girl, when you got off the train that mornin' in Sleepy Cat"—McCrossen inclined in friendly fashion toward his tight-sitting little companion to emphasize his words—"from the very first minute I saw you, I said to myself. 'There's a girl with all the grit and sand of her father.'"

"Hadn't you better drive a little faster?" suggested Miss Tight Sitter, casually.

"I'm afraid to push the old buckboard over this part of the road. So I said to myself," he continued, "'There's a girl with her father's grit and her mother's beauty.' Jane"—he lowered his voice, becomingly—"are you warm?"

"Quite."

"And comfortable?"

"Perfectly. But I should like to get on faster."

McCrossen brought the horses to a stop. "What's the matter?" asked his companion rather tartly.

"This is Gunlock Ford. The creek was runnin' kind of high when I drove through after supper, and it's been rainin' all evenin'. We don't want to get caught in the water. I'll get out and see how things look. Take the lines a minute.

"It's safe, I reckon," he reported, returning soon to the rig. "But you'd better put your feet in my lap till we get across. The water might come up through the floorboards."

Her response was chilly. "My feet will be all right where they are."

"O. K., Jane! But you're about the sweetest girl I ever saw in the world."

Suiting action to these words, McCrossen put his arm swiftly around the girl and pulled her toward him for a kiss.

He failed to get one. Instead, he got a smart slap from Jane's gloved hand.

"Please mind your business, Dave, and attend to your driving," said Jane collectedly.

The night was an unquiet one for Jane's pillow. The more she thought about her surprise admirer and his crude advances, the angrier she grew. In the morning she breakfasted and ordered her saddle pony. She meant to take a long ride all by herself and rid herself of her annoyance in the morning air of the high hills.

On and on, Jane rode. The pony was spirited and seemed, like his mistress, to enjoy the jaunt. The farther she rode, the wilder the country grew, with only small bunches of cattle here and there to remind her of her domain. At length the hills grew too rough for pleasure riding. With her spirits quieted and feeling invigorated, Jane reined about for the ranch house.

Covering considerably more distance, Jane, having grown weary, was rejoiced at last to see the dusty, serpentine foothills roads well below her. Having reached it, she reined into it and jogged along, confident of reaching home soon. Presently she encountered an Indian family traveling toward her in a wagon. She reined up.

"Am I heading right for Gunlock Ranch?" she asked of the man driving.

He nodded affirmatively. But a bright-eyed boy in the wagon box made a protest. He jabbered in low tones to his father and, turning to Jane, exclaimed, "Wrong way," and pointed north. The father shook his head, and the dispute grew. Jane, now confused by the uncertainty, thanked the party and rode on south.

A few miles farther she met a horseman heading north. As he drew near, Jane thought she recognized him as the man who had directed her back to the ranch a couple of weeks before, at the close of a long day of riding through the Gunlock hills. Jane reined up inquiringly.

"Good-morning," ventured Jane. "Can you tell me whether I am on the right road to Gunlock ranch?"

The man listened but made no effort to speak. Instead he looked at the girl silently. His gaze was embarrassing.

He ignored her question and instead asked one himself:

"Aren't you the girl who got lost around here a couple of weeks ago?"

"Y-yes," answered Jane. "And aren't you the man who directed me back?"

"Guess I was," the man replied, in an absent-minded way."

"I realize that it's stupid of me to lose my way again," she said, "but can you tell me whether I am heading right for the ranch?"

He found his tongue and spoke quietly: "Well . . . you'd reach the ranch the way you are going, though probably not today."

"Not today?" she asked in amazement.

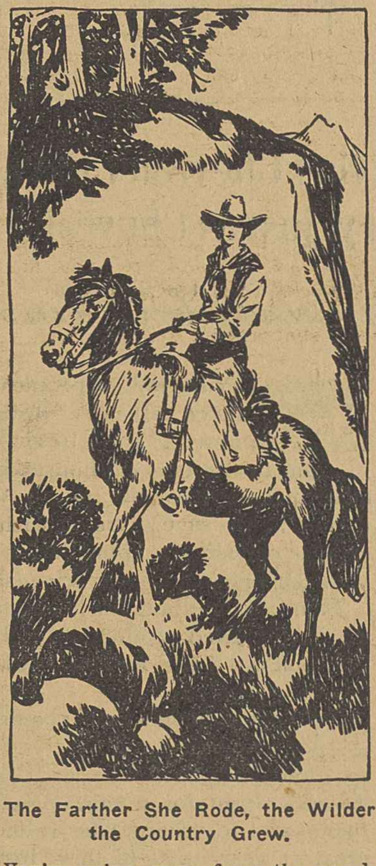
"You want to reach the ranch house, I suppose?"

"I do."

"Then you're heading the wrong way."

"Will you please set me right?"

"You'd better take the back trail.



The Farther She Rode, the Wilder the Country Grew.

You're going away from the ranch house now."

Jane exclaimed in surprise. "Why, how is that? Are you sure?"

"Dead sure." A suspicion of humor crept into the words.

Confused at being caught wrong, Jane flushed. The man, silent, just looked at her. She did not like it; he might be laughing at her. Facing him more sternly, she asked with helpless annoyance in her words, "What am I to do?"

"Back trail."

"What does that mean?" she asked tartly.

"Turn around."

"Where am I?"

"Pretty well out on the Gunlock Indian Reservation."

"I've never felt so stupid in my life," declared Jane, trying to act at ease as she reined about. "I thought I knew this country well enough by this time not to get lost. I'm certainly not a tenderfoot."

The man smiled, but to himself. "There's been men here several years who get lost riding in the hills. It's no disgrace for a two-monthser."

Jane did not relish being termed a "two-monthser." "Oh, I've been here before," she said airily.

He offered no comment. Tired, waiting for him to say something. Jane was nettled by his continued silence.

"I see you're wearing your bracelet," he remarked of a sudden. The words came, so to speak, out of a clear sky.

She looked at him just as suddenly as he had spoken; and in alarm.

He was looking straight ahead—just as if she were not within miles—and with the impassive expression of a man riding quite alone. Could he be, she asked herself in a flash of fear, a bad man? Could he mean to rob her of her bracelet and watch?

For a moment she was too upset to speak. But her silence seemed not to move her companion.

Looking placidly ahead, and after waiting for her to comment, he spoke again:

"I might be wrong. But I thought I saw that bracelet about two years ago, Fourth of July—"

"Oh," exclaimed Jane for want of something better to say.

"Anyway," continued her even-speaking guide, "I know I couldn't be mistaken about the young lady that wore it. Weren't you visiting here around that time?"

"Yes," ventured Jane, stealing a glance at the questioner. His gaze was fixed steadfastly ahead.

"Were you at the Frontier Day celebration in Sleepy Cat that Fourth of July?" he continued.

"Y-yes," repeated Jane. "W-were you?"

"If I hadn't been," he answered dryly, "I shouldn't have seen the bracelet."

They were jogging along pleasantly enough, and as the man didn't actually demand her bracelet or watch, her panic subsided.

"Stopping over at the ranch for a while, are you?"

"For a while, yes."

"Some of the boys over at your ranch were telling in town they had a young lady over at Gunlock that used to ride in a circus. I suppose it was you."

"I'm the only woman, young or old, over there."

"What circus did you work with?"

"Oh, several circuses," said Jane recklessly.

"What were some of them?"

Jane, growing flighty, named one of the big ones whose shows she had attended in Chicago.

"What year were you with that show?"

She was growing desperate. With affected embarrassment she turned full on him. "You mustn't ask me that. Women are sensitive about their age, don't you know?"

For the first time he turned his eyes directly toward hers.

"I've heard some women are that way," he went on, "but I shouldn't call you a woman."

"Oh, my! Why not?"

"Well, I'd call you a girl. The reason I asked was, because I was with that show one season myself."

This was growing terrifying. Jane made an effort to change the line of talk; but her stranger was interested. "Did you ever happen to ride in Madison Square Garden?"

"N-no! Did you?"

"I rode there one winter when we showed there."

"Did you like circus work?" she asked offhand.

"Can't say I did. I never worked in a circus except that one season. It was only because I needed money bad, and it was big money to me. Then the lawyers got it all. Here's the fork for Gunlock ranch."

He pointed. They were at the parting of their ways. A saucy impulse seized Jane. She was given to impulses and to doing whatever thing flashed into her head. She checked her horse, lifted her forearm, and unclasped the bracelet. "Since you've been so kind—"

The man had halted his horse. "Nothing at all!" he protested.

"—I'd like you," she went on, paying no attention to his disclaimer, "to have a souvenir—this bracelet." She held it out to him. He looked flabbergasted. "For what?" he stammered.

His embarrassment seemed to communicate itself to Jane—she could not have told why. "I'm grateful for your putting me on my way today, and that other night when I got lost, if you remember," she went on.

He swallowed. She was secretly delighted with his confusion. "Well, that certainly is mighty kind," he said haltingly. "But I couldn't accept such a beautiful thing for doing nothing at all."

"I've got lots of bracelets."

"But sometime I've got to find something I can really do for you."

She laid the bracelet in his outstretched hand.

"I certainly thank you a thousand times." His slow response left no doubt of what he felt. Her aim now was to escape his protestations. He put on his hat. She started to go.

"Please!" he exclaimed, raising his hand. She stopped. Her guide's brow ruffled a little in perplexity.

"What is it?" she asked, superciliously impatient.

He took his hat off again. "Would it be polite," he ventured, "to ask your name?"

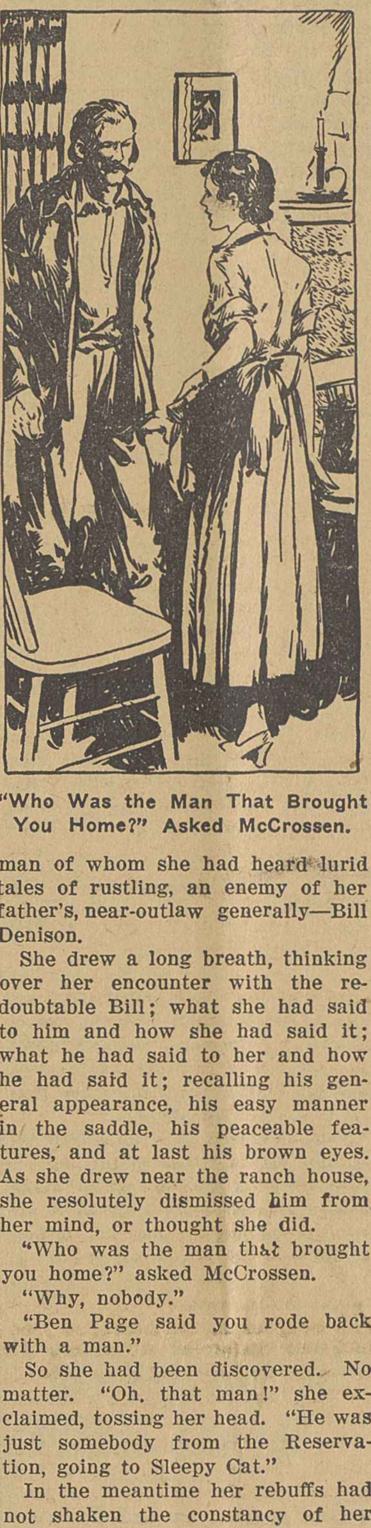
"Tell me yours again," she said.

"Bill Denison."

She allowed her horse to turn into the ranch trail. Denison sat motionless, hat in hand, but looking directly at her. "You haven't told me your name yet," he remonstrated quietly.

"Oh! It's Marie. Good-bye!"

Not till after she had parted from Denison and was riding alone with her thoughts did Jane begin to feel really frightened. This was the man of whom she had heard lurid tales of rustling, an enemy of her father's, near-outlaw generally—Bill Denison.



"Who Was the Man That Brought You Home?" Asked McCrossen.

She drew a long breath, thinking over her encounter with the redoubtable Bill; what she had said to him and how she had said it; what he had said to her and how he had said it; recalling his general appearance, his easy manner in the saddle, his peaceable features, and at last his brown eyes. As she drew near the ranch house, she resolutely dismissed him from her mind, or thought she did.

"Who was the man that brought you home?" asked McCrossen.

"Why, nobody."

"Ben Page said you rode back with a man."

So she had been discovered. No matter. "Oh, that man!" she exclaimed, tossing her head. "He was just somebody from the Reservation, going to Sleepy Cat."

In the meantime her rebuffs had not shaken the constancy of her foreman admirer, McCrossen.

Whenever McCrossen was going to ride over the ranch, Jane was not so riding. When he was riding to town, Jane was riding over the ranch. In fact, chiefly to be rid of him, Jane spent much time in the saddle. And she developed a particular liking for the hill trail to town; she usually rode that way, either coming or going. What impressed itself on her was that riding the hill road alone was not quite so exciting as the first time she had ridden it with a guide. But what had become of her guide?

She controlled her impatience until she could do so no longer. Starting one day to town with Bull Page, Jane asked discreetly about their neighbor, this man Bill Denison.

"Why, Miss Jane," answered Bull, "'cordin' to what I hear, Bill's been down to Medicine Bend on his lawsuit."

"But why need a man go down to Medicine Bend for a lawsuit, when there are courts in Sleepy Cat?"

"Well, this is before the U. S. Land Office; that's different." Suddenly Bull, peering down the trail, straightened up, "Why, there's Bill, right now, on his way to town. The critter's back."

"Where is he? Oh, I see. The man that just rode around the bend?" Jane did some fast and bold thinking. She looked in her purse. "Bull!" she exclaimed in fancied alarm, "I've forgotten to bring Quong's grocery list for the kitchen. I'm afraid you'll have to ride back after it."

She was soon within speaking distance of the horseman ahead.

"Good-morning," she said stiffly.

Denison looked around, checked his horse, touched his hat, and returned the greeting. But he was plainly confused, and Jane was correspondingly pleased. "We meet again," she said with a superior air. "And this time I'm not lost."

"I'm afraid I am, this time," he said slowly.

"How so?"

Green Grass Juice Joins Sauer Kraut as Growth Promoter

Savants Find New Use for Lawn Clippings

MADISON, WIS.—Add to sauerkraut juice, tomato juice, and other juices that are good for what ails you—grass juice.

Drs. C. A. Elvehjem and E. B. Hart of the University of Wisconsin have discovered that the growth-promoting properties of milk can be appreciably enhanced by the addition of grass juice. Juice squeezed out of lawn clippings was added to the daily milk ration of young rats, causing them to gain weight much more rapidly than "control" rats that got just plain milk.

Liver and brain tissue were also found able to promote growth when added to winter milk.

This finding, if it proves applicable to human nutrition, may point to the desirability of fortifying winter milk with materials containing the growth factor which it lacks.

Growth Factor Unknown.

Such additions will not be necessary with milk produced in summer, for cows having access to pasture give a product which is potent in promoting growth.

Just what is the nature of the growth factor with which winter milk is inadequately supplied is not definitely known. The fact that brain and liver apparently contain considerable amounts of it suggests it may be vitamin B4, but this is not certain.

The fact that the search for materials to improve the quality of winter milk resulted in failure with many substances narrows the possibilities of what the unknown growth factor may be.

Vitamins B and B2 proved of no value in trials at the University of Wisconsin. Since carotene, cod liver oil, orange juice, and irradiation all failed to improve milk as far as the growth factor is concerned, evidently it is not A, C, or D.

Chemical Upset in Body Held Reason for Heart Failure

GALVESTON, TEX.—Study of the chemistry that goes on in the individual muscle cells of the human heart has suggested and supported a fundamental explanation of heart failure.

This important advance in medical knowledge was made in research by Drs. George Hermann, George Decherd, E. H. Schwab and associates at the University of Texas School of Medicine here.

Heart failure, these investigators reported to the Southern Medical association and the American Heart association, is fundamentally a disturbance in the breaking down and rebuilding by the individual heart muscle cells of a chemical called phosphocreatine.

Muscles Lose Efficiency.

This biochemical derangement makes the heart muscle cells less efficient engines of contraction, with the result that the heart fails at its job of pumping blood.

Inadequate supply of oxygen to the individual heart muscle cells may start these serious chemical changes in the heart muscle cells. In patients with chronic heart disease, anoxemia or deficiency of oxygen content in the blood is the chief causative factor of the pathological chemical changes that weaken and finally exhaust the heart muscle. The administration of oxygen may temporarily postpone these chemical changes.

Temples Shared by 14 Gods Found in Old Mesopotamia

BERLIN. — Two temples shared by 14 gods are among discoveries of German archeologists in ruins of old Uruk, Mesopotamia.

The city, named as Erech in the Bible, is mentioned there as one of the world's first cities, and archeological digging has shown that it was in existence early, between 3000 and 4000 B. C.

Temple excavations, reported here before German archeologists, shed light on a later era of the city's history, following conquests by Alexander the Great.

The two temples date from the Third century B. C., at time of the Seleucid empire, founded by one of Alexander's generals. The temples are Babylonian in architecture, showing reaction from efforts to press Greek culture on the East.

Sunburned Calves Bring Less Money

Buyers and Consumers Back Off at Meat Marked by Summer Heat.

By C. W. Hammans, Marketing Specialist, Ohio State University.
—WNU Service.

Livestock buyers on the terminal markets say that farmers who turn veal calves outdoors in the hot sun should either provide the animals with parasols or prepare to receive less money for the animals when they are sold because consumers do not want sunburned veal.

Complaints from several markets have been made that calves which are exposed to the sun actually are sunburned so that the meat appears red when the calves are slaughtered. This unusual appearance may not injure the food value but it does prevent consumers from buying the veal.

Hot weather also affects the size of meat cuts which consumers will buy, and they prefer small chops, steaks and roasts. This tendency to ask for the smaller cuts makes it difficult to sell cuts taken from heavy veal calves. Calves weighing from 150 to 175 pounds are most likely to bring top prices in hot weather.

The difference between top calves and medium grades may be as much as two or three cents a pound. A 200-pound calf at $6 a hundred only brings $12 but a 150-pound calf at $9 a hundred brings $13.50. The fact that lighter calves sell better in midsummer should not cause farmers to send thin calves to market; the calves should be in good condition.

After midseason, calves that weigh 175 to 200 pounds will again bring good prices, but during the hottest weather farmers should keep the calves sheltered from the sun and should market them before they are too heavy to bring top prices.

Some Causes and Cure of "Rancid" Butter

"The term 'rancid' is used to describe many undesirable flavors which may occur in butter. The chemist, however, when he speaks of rancid flavor, has in mind the flavor or odor of butyric acid. Butyrin is the fat from which butter gets its name. When this fat is split into glycerin and the free fatty acid known as butyric acid, the rancid flavor develops. Although this does not commonly occur in butter, it is due to the action of an enzyme found in milk, known as lipase. The activity of this enzyme may be destroyed by heat. The sweet cream may be heated to 145 degrees F. and held at that temperature for one-half hour, and then cooled immediately to 50 degress F. It should be held at this temperature overnight before churning.

"Quite often cream may develop a strong flavor, due to bacterial contamination. This may be overcome by milking in a clean manner, by thorough cleaning and by prompt cooling.

"Occasionally a strong flavor may be noticed in the milk when the cow is experiencing some udder trouble. Such milk is liable to taste salty."

Using Beet Pulp

Beet pulp or beet meal may be used to replace hay, as a dairy cow ration. The best use, however, says an authority, is made of this feed when it is fed soaked. If short of hay replace one pound of hay with one pound of dried beet pulp. You may do this up to one-half the hay allowance. Add about four times the dry weight of the beet pulp of water and feed it as you would silage or roots. In this way the beet meal will help replace the shortage of hay.

EVERYBODY, THINK IT OVER

On last Wednesday morning work was resumed at the Tennessee Coal, Iron and Railroad Compony's red ore mines. General satisfaction was registered throughout the entire Birmingham district when it was known that over 1,345 ore miners had been called back to work after a shut-down of two and a half months caused by a strike.

An additional 500 men—or more—are expected to resume mining operations in the next few days, just as soon as the other mines can be gotten ready.

The strike was a very unfortunate and costly affair, and should never have occurred. Both parties to the dispute—the miners and the company—lost money and plenty of it, and the long-suffering and innocent public suffered also.

The strike was made as a protest against the company's new "incentive plan" or tonnage pay scale, and was amicably settled under an agreement announced by Governor Graves by which the company's new plan will be tried out for a period of four months.

It is more than probable, as this paper sees it, that strikes will be fewer in the future. The wage-earners are waking up to the stern fact that strikes do not pay. If strikes do occur they will be of shorter duration. Many of the workers, and their wives, are getting heartily tired of living from one strike to another, and being broke practially all the time—and getting nowhere

A better way than shut-downs and strikes must be found, and with the right kind of leadership on both sides that "better way" could speedily be found.

It is inevitable that, occasionally disputes will arise and grievances crop up but these should be and must be settled and adjusted without either the shut-down or the strike.

The wheels of industry, in the plants, the mills, the mines and the factories must be kept running and business must go on as usual while the necessary adjustments are being made.

Why not? Everybody, think it over!—Labor Advocate.

ONLY 100 YEARS AGO

There was not a public library in the United States.

Almost all furniture was importer from England.

An old copper mine in Connecticut was used as a prison.

There was only one hat factory and it made cocked hats.

Every gentleman wore a queue and powdered his hair.

Crockery plates were objected to because they dulled the knives.

Virginia contained a fifth of the population of the whole country.

A man who jeered at the preacher or criticized a sermon was fined.

Two stage coaches bore all the travel from New York to Boston.

A day laborer considered himself well-paid with two shillings a day.

The whipping post and pillory were still standing in New York and Boston.

Buttons were scarce and expensive, and the trousers were fastened with pegs or lace.

Leather breeches, a checked shirt, a red flannel jacket and a cocked hat formed the dress of the real artisan.

Beef, pork, salt fish, potatoes and hominy were the staple diet all the year around.

State Capitol News

Montgomery—Fred A. Salmon, assistant state highway engineer, and Tom B. Kirkland, architect of the highway department, tendered their resignations effective September 15, according to announcement by H H. Houk, chief highway engineer. About 200 members of the department's engineering personnel have left to take better jobs during the past 18 months, Mr. Houk said. "There is a greater demand for competent engineers now than at any time since 1929," he added.

Alabama's state income tax collections jumped 135 per cent during the seven months period of 1936, ending August 15, compared with the corresponding period of 1934, according to announcement by the chairman, Henry S. Long, of the state tax commission. Collections thus far this year were $722,289.07 compared with $307,346.63 for the same period two years ago, a net increase of $404,942.44. Vigilance of the state's tax agents and improved business conditions were ascribed by chairman Long as the reason for the increase.

The annual rally of farmers sponsored by the Alabama Farm Bureau Federation scheduled for Friday and Saturday, Aug. 28 and 29, has been postponed to permit farmers to finish harvesting their crops, according to announcement by J. Litt Edwards, federation president. The decision to delay the rally was made following a conference of the executive committee of the federation, Mr. Edwards explained. The gathering was originally set for late July, but was postponed at that time because of the infantile paralysis epidemic.

Governor Bibb Graves last week assured a delegation of circuit judges and solicitors that some arrangement would be made to pay out of the state treasury the $100-a-year expense allowance provided by an act of the legislature for judges and solicitors serving more than one county. It was explained that the new law granting the expense allowance failed to include an appropriation out of which to pay it. The total amount estimated to cover the expenses of the officials affected is slightly over ten thousand dollars a year.

Governor's Day will be observed at Fort McClellan on Sunday, August 30, when Governor Graves will review the 167th Infantry, 117th Field Artillery and other units of the Alabama National Guard. Announcing plans for one of the most stirring military spectacles since the World War, Adj. Gen. John C. Coleman left here Sunday to attend the annual encampment, which was delayed more than a month because of the infantile paralysis epidemic. The Governor, who by virtue of his office, is commander in chief of the state militia, will be accompanied by more than a score of his staff officers.

The crack rifle team of the National Guard, in charge of Major Curtis A. Gipson, of Montgomery, also left Sunday to participate in the national rifle matches at Camp Perry, Ohio, which started Monday and will continue through Sept. 12.

With mounting gasoline tax collections, the state highway department is beginning to take hope that $1,768,256 in federal funds available at Washington can be matched before reverting to the general federal aid fund on June 30, 1937. Fixed charges and increased maintenance cost by reason of the rapid expansion of Alabama's highway system, makes it necessary that additional funds be provided if the state would make use of the federal aid available, but must be matched before June 30 of next year. In addition to the $1,768,256 which must be matched or lost before July of next year, there is an additional sum of $2,603,967 available, but must be matched before June 30, 1938.

Jeff Beeland of Greenville, head of the Alabama Consumers Anti-Sales Tax Association, was closeted for more than an hour with Governor Graves last Friday but declined to discuss the object of his surprise call. Later Governor Graves told reporters that he had granted Beeland's request for "work sheets" of the controversial "Stephens report"—a financial survey of the state's school system made by the federal government two years ago.

Recently Beeland charged that Dr. J. A. Keller, state superintendent of education, had "withheld" the report, but it was later learned the report was in the possession of Algernon Blair, Montgomery contractor and former chairman of the board of directors of the old Alabama Relief Administration. The Governor promptly gave Beeland a letter to Blair authorizing that the "report" be turned over to Beeland.

"The report was made by the federal government at the request of Harry L. Hopkins at the time many of our teachers were being paid out of relief funds," the Governor explained. "Though I have never seen the report, I don't believe its findings would have any bearing on the present financial status of the schools. Nevertheless, Mr. Beeland is welcome to any information he desires."

Commenting on Mr. Beeland's visit, Senator Floyd Mooneyham, of Montgomery, recalled that the "Stephens report" was used "as a political football by the so-called economy bloc during the last session of the legisfature."

"However," he said, "most of us agreed that the conclusions of the report were quite vague because they were based on the government's relief wage scale to teachers of $60 a month. During the regular session we appropriated $500,000 to pay salaries to teachers who stayed on the job but were unable to qualify for the relief wage during the 1933-34 school term," he added.

SCHOOL FACTS

Alabama spends 71 cents of each dollar for teacher salaries.

The average for the nation is less than that.

Only 2 cents of the Alabama school dollar goes for administration.

Capital outlay in Alabama gets less than 7 cents of the dollar. The national average is 16.

Other costs in Alabama are operation and janitor, 3 cents; teaching supplies, 3 cents; upkeep and insurance, 5 cents; transportation, 10 cents.

Do you know Alabama property assessments are $322,000,000 less than in 1929?

This makes school money from property taxes about five millions less.

The drop in local taxes alone for public schools amounts to $3,940,584 less.

Tax drops from the state forced the colleges to get along on a loss of $2,654,241.

HOW THE BANKS AID THE GOVERNMENT

Normal and Emergency Needs Met by Advances of Banking Credit

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J.—The American commercial banking credit system is an absolute essential in the financial operations of business and government, Harold G. Moulton, President of the Brookings Institution of Washington, D. C., said here recently in an address before the Graduate School of Banking conducted under the joint auspices of Rutgers University and the American Bankers Association.

If the flexibility and expansibility provided by commercial banking credit were eliminated, Dr. Moulton declared, "it is scarcely too much to say that the economic system itself would shortly be destroyed

"Normally the amount of credit extended by commercial banks to the government is small in amount and for the purpose mainly of financing temporary requirements in anticipation of tax collections or bond sales. But in periods of war and acute depression, when the financial requirements of government expand with great rapidity, the expansion of commercial bank credit is on a tremendous scale. Such is the case at the present time.

How Public Needs Are Financed

"The purchase of government securities by individuals and by the commercial banks provides the government with the means by which its manifold activities are financed. The Treasury obtains the funds, with which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and other government credit agencies finance their operations, through the sale of securities, largely to commercial banks. These funds, in turn, have gone to the assistance of distressed banks and other financial institutions, to aid industrial and agricultural enterprises, to finance new public and private capital construction, and to provide relief to the unemployed."

Dr. Moulton declared that it is not true that the world depression was caused by a breakdown of the American banking system, "which did not, in fact, occur until the depression had been under way for more than three years." He added:

"Nor is it true that the world maladjustments existing in 1929 can be explained simply by undue extensions of commercial banking credit in the preceding years. These maladjustments involved world agricultural, industrial, commercial and financial relations."

FARM ACCOUNTING REVEALS LESSONS

Principles of Sound Business Management That Apply to All Farms

An analysis made of detailed records kept by a group of Wisconsin farms revealed several important lessons and the principles of sound business management derived from them apply equally well to other farms, says an article in the Bulletin of the Agricultural Commission of the American Bankers Association. The article says:

"Investment costs, including interest, depreciation, repairs, taxes and insurance, are approximately two-thirds of all farm costs. Furthermore, these costs are largely independent of the production program of the farm.

"This means that if a farmer cuts his production of crops or livestock, he increases his investment costs per unit of product produced, as a smaller number of units must then carry as large an expense load as before. This illustrates the importance, from the standpoint of costs, of operating a farm at or near capacity,

"Investment mistakes are more costly than many others because they cannot easily be corrected. If a farmer pays too much for his farm, his investment costs will be abnormally high as long as he owns it. If he constructs a $4,000 barn, when a $2,000 barn would have served his purpose, he will have excessive barn costs, year after year, during the entire service life of the structure.

"This emphasizes the importance of a knowledge of investment values and the specific investment requirements of individual farms.

Determining Real or False Economies

"In working for greater economy, it is essential that the farm manager be able to distinguish between a real and a false saving. This can be done only through a careful estimate of the contribution to income, over a period of time, of each item of expenditure. Only if more is saved in expense than will be lost in income, can a contemplated cut in expense be designated as a real saving.

"For example, dropping dairy herd improvement work may result in a yearly expense reduction. The question to decide is what effect the dropping of this work will have on the present and future income from the dairy herd. If the estimated loss in livestock receipts due to a lowered efficiency in feeding and breeding is greater than the original saving, then it would obviously be a false economy."

Goodbye, Mr. Gloom!

. . . We're a jolly bunch of renegades . . . our sole purpose in life is to give Old Man Gloom the gate and usher in Mr. Sunshine by way of a million laughs. Turn to the Funny Page in every issue and let us help dispel those troubles!

- No man can really live by bread alone. Yes, we admit he'll EXIST, but there will be heavy lines of care running down his face, he'll forget how to smile.
- Verily, we humans need a few hearty guffaws now and then to chase away those wrinkles of care and give our spirits a lift. That's why this newspaper runs a collection of laugh-provoking comic strips on the Funny Page. Amid the depressing news of floods and earthquakes, crime and war, economic troubles and a host of other maladjustments on the face of Mr. World, it's a pleasant relaxation to shut your eyes on the day's bad tidings.
- You can get a joyful lift in spirits from the comics. We invite our readers to take a big swallow of this bottled sunshine. Turn to the Funny Page right now and forget your troubles!
- Our comic characters are a versatile lot, as you'll notice by glancing down the accompanying panel. If you want to chuckle over real troubles, turn to C. M. Payne's strip "S'Matter Pop," and see what a whale of an order he has to keep these boys of his under control . . . Or glance at the adventures of the intellectual Adamson, as drawn by O. Jacobsson.
- Something that will truly draw tears—of laughter—are Gluyas Williams' mischievous but lovable youngsters, Junior and the Baby . . . Then there's "Finney of the Force," by Ted O'Loughlin, as comical and as true-to-life an Irisher as ever flipped a night stick . . . Life out in Cactus Center, as described in S. L. Huntley's "Mescal Ike," has its exciting moments when its rip-roaring citizens are on the loose . . . And when it comes to "The Featherheads," by Osborne, they speak for themselves. In fact, that's the best thing they do!
- Let these bearers of fun whittle your blues down to size. Toss trouble right out the window and get a new lease on life through the comic page—turn to it right now!

Spa Veterans Tell of Rothstein's Cache, Man-Eating Horse

TALES that are told when gray-haired men gather on the verandas while the stars stand their watch at Saratoga.

There are the whispers about the fortune Arnold Rothstein, the sure-thing gambler, may have hidden some place before he suddenly departed from this earth. Most of the veterans here knew him—some of them only too well and too sadly—and they doubt whether his estate could possibly have been as small as the records show.

It is not that they suspect any living person but they knew Arnold as he was, a close-mouthed fellow who early learned that you seldom can go broke when you have aces wired. So they sit and wonder where those aces—the reserve fund, the stake for another day—can be.

Some of them will whisper that there must be close to $500,000 worth of cash or easily negotiable securities awaiting in some safe deposit vault for an owner who never will return. They—those veterans who knew Arnold so well and sometimes so sadly—say that would have been just like him.

Rothstein.

Some confide that this cold, suave man who knew Broadway so well that only once could he be persuaded to venture more than 500 miles away from it—that was when he had the pleasure of viewing the 1919 World Series preparations of the Reds and the hitherto well-laundered White Sox—would never have given a bank such a break.

They whisper that he must have hidden this $500,000, in which they believe so implicitly, some place on Long Island.

But the evening grows old along with such vague wonderings and—

Man-Eater Kercheval Dug Grave With His Teeth

There is the tale of Kercheval. A popular horse in the West thirty years or so ago, he had won the Burns Handicap, then one of California's most celebrated turf events. But perhaps success went to his head or it may have been that he was a bad one at heart. To this day men will argue about that, but the facts in the case are plain.

Kercheval was a man-eater. At first he merely nibbled at his stable boys and—since those free and easy horsemen of another era probably figured that there was no accounting for tastes—nobody took that seriously. Later, though, he began snapping at every one who hove into sight.

Soon not even the biggest helping of oats or the juiciest hay that money could buy could tempt him half as much as a nice bite out of a customer's arm. Even in an era when Diamond Jim Brady and other monumental eaters were searching the world for new inspirations for jaded appetites this was a trifle too much. They wanted to be fair, though, and so they gave him another chance.

It was no use. Like many a man who lets temptation run away with him, Kercheval was determined to dig his grave with his teeth. So one afternoon after he had slashed off most of a lady's bonnet as well as too feet of hair and some scalp, they decided that there was nothing else to do.

Kercheval was indicted and tried in due form by the sovereign state. There was much that could be said in his favor because, as has been mentioned, he was a horse with winning ways.

So they deliberated—those twelve good men and true—and then returned with the verdict. Of course there were other alternatives open to them, even though they deemed him guilty beyond doubt. But the thing was new then and the West ever has been a section given over to novelties. Besides there may have been those who noted a wicked gleam in the eye of this horse who stood in the crowded court room with probably never a worry as to where his next meal was coming from.

I do not know about that though. I only know the facts in the case and they are plain. While Kercheval looked longingly at the fat foreman the verdict was read.

Kercheval had been sentenced to be electrocuted. And these are the tales that are told in the evening.

NOT IN THE BOX SCORE:

Pie Traynor was so burnt up when his Pirates dropped a recent game to the Dodgers that he walked the ten miles from Ebbets field to his Broadway hotel trying to cool off . . . George Bull, president of the Saratoga Racing association, once starred on the Columbia track team . . . It takes eight motion picture machines to make one of those fight films. In addition to the four regular cameras two are required for slow motion and two for sound, according to Harry Voiler . . . Joseph Michael Medwick is not overly fond of that Ducky Wucky tag. He prefers to be called Mickey . . . Is Uncle Mike Jacobs plotting to sell out his interest in the Hippodrome?

Do you remember way back when the "Flying Dutchman," Hans Wagner, also was called the "Human Omelet"? That latter tag was fastened upon him by some forgotten baseball writer who admired the way in which the Great Honus spread himself around shortstop.

Up New England way they are predicting that Holy Cross will repeat the Crusader football victory March of 1935. Most of last fall's power boys will return and there are some five-star special sophs bound to win jobs.

Al Weill is sorely perturbed over rumors that a strange combination of newspaper men are attempting to help him poach Tony Canzoneri's lightweight title . . . Alabama Pitts is hitting .411 for Charlotte in the Carolina league . . . The United States Bureau of Standards is to test all those finish line cameras at Saratoga . . . The Dodgers could use George Cizor, the big outfielder now working on their Allentown farm. Before coming North he hit .375 (96 hits, 58 R.B.I.) in 58 games for their Leaksville estate.

If the very studious Joe Gould had not been so busy reading about Popeye, Landon and Dorothy Dix last December, Jim Braddock might now be preparing to bank an extra 50 G's. At that time the champion's manager turned down the Garden's offer of 47½ per cent of the gate and a bonus of $25,000 if he would agree to meet Schmeling. Now, unless the Reds and the Japs get the upper hand before September, all Joe gets out of the same assignment is 42½ per cent of the gate . . . Is a Brooklyn judge preparing a rumpus because the state racing commission is permitting Col. (J. E. Widener staff) Abe Hallow to operate a book in the Saratoga clubhouse?

When visiting players check in at the Polo Grounds the first question they ask is "How's Terry's knee?" That's not because they're kindhearted fellows either . . . Lou Little, Columbia football coach, was in town one day recently for a visit with Assistant Herb Kopf. Reports that he has pretty well recovered from his operation . . . Note on yearling sales such as those at Saratoga—Hustle On, which cost $70,000 as a yearling, never won a race. The $150 Goldey F. has won eight this season and seems fit to grab several more decisions at the Spa . . . Did General Phelan, the eminent boxing commissioner, have time to read back copies of the newspapers during his trip to Bermuda? . . . Arnold Owen, the great young catcher now assigned to the Cards' Columbus farm, is a cousin to Marvin Owen, Detroit third sacker.

Cubs Predict Grimm Will Be Club's Prexy

Grimm.

Cubs say that within three years Charley Grimm will be president of the team and Gabby Hartnett manager. This would be merited reward for both men who have served the team so long and well. At that, Gabby is the oldest player in point of service on the Cubs. He has already served under about half a dozen managers . . . It will be interesting to see how Nat Holman of C. C. N. Y. and Joe Lopchick, newly appointed at St. John's, react when their teams meet in the hottest of all metropolitan rivalries next winter. For years the two coaches were pals, teammates and stars with the Original Celtics.

Did any one ever note that the two racetracks famed as being graveyards for favorites have long lakes in the infield? Could that be because Saratoga and Hialeah form players need something in which to jump? The Cards play an average of 18 exhibition games a year with the choice of a $1,500 guarantee or a percentage of the gate. That gives the management a cool $27,000 or so a season. Incidentally, the Deans and Medwicks played a night game recently when the only illumination was furnished by ordinary electric globes such as you might stick in your living room . . . Bob Pastor, who took on LeRoy Haynes at Ebbets field recently, never attends fights. Says he learns more by sitting in a quiet movie and analyzing the boxing films.

Forwards Claire Shillington and Eddie O'Keefe and Defensemen Dick Adolphe and Eddie Grommoll from last year's Rovers have hopped to England to get in on the "amateur" hockey boom there. This practically takes all the profit out of the Rangers' amateur farm hockey.

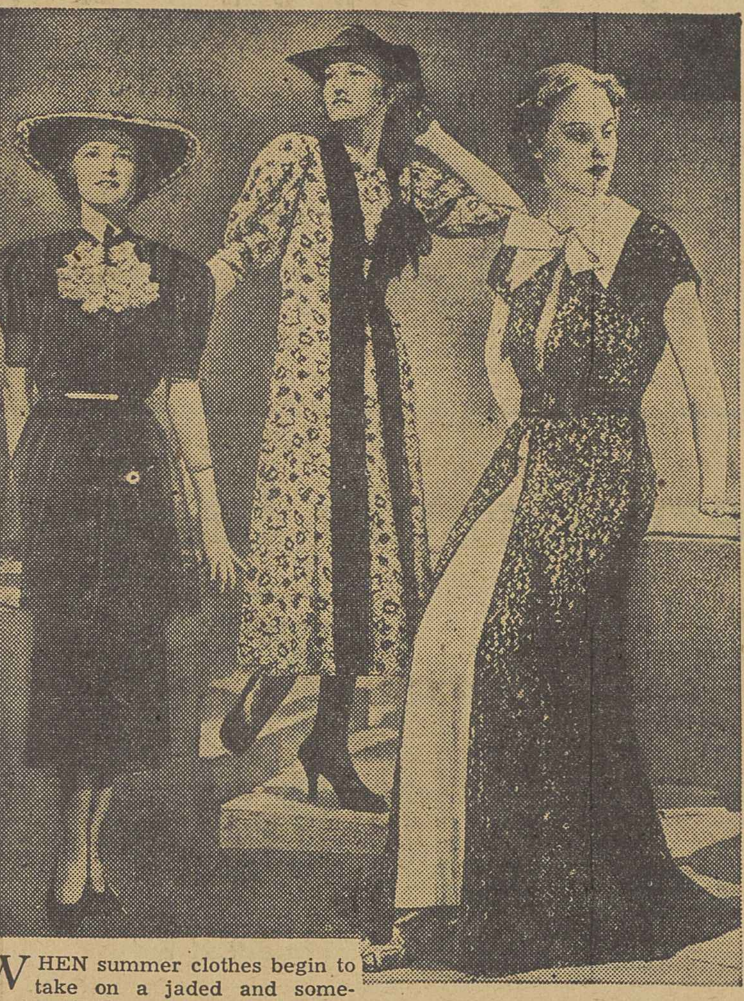
Solving Midseason Dress Problem

By CHERIE NICHOLAS



WHEN summer clothes begin to take on a jaded and somewhat worse-for-wear "has been" air, and you are loath to force the season by donning advance fall fashions before the psychological moment arrives, then what? Aye, that's the problem that has destroyed perfectly good dispositions and peace of mind of the fair sex throughout decades and decades of time.

However, we are not going to be tantalized and tormented with such momentous worries this midseason, for good news concerning this question is winging its way fashionward at this very moment. Tidings of great cheer, they are told in terms of dresses and suits tailored of the black or dark-toned silk sheers, nets and laces which have come into favor of late as they never came before. These cool and comfortable dark sheers are a perfect blend from summer to fall. In such you are sure to hold poise and serenity in the assurance that you will be smartly and appropriately costumed all through the prologue which nature and the weather man play to autumn. In fact, no wardrobe may be said to be complete these days without at least one tailored black or dark sheer in its collection.

Acquire a two-piece gown of black silk marquisette as shown to the left in the illustration and your between-season dress trials will vanish like dew on a sunny morn. In regard to selecting a sheer for dependable wear, perhaps a few words of advice will not come amiss. When you buy, insist on a weave of guaranteed quality. In order to get maximum service and real joy and satisfaction in the costume you rely upon to carry you through the between-season valiantly, the sheer of which it is made should be nothing less than pure silk and fast dye. Perish the thought of a shoddy black that is apt to take on a greenish bilious cast as cheaper blacks in cheaper weaves are wont to do. Buy pure silk and your dress will wear dependably. As to the smart styling of the model pictured, note that it is a tunic costume. Newly arriving fashions verify previous reports that the tunic will continue to be the big idea for fall. The large black buttons that fasten this tunic, also the modish short sleeve and the white jabot, register important fashion details.

Advance fashions tell of the emphasis placed on the princess silhouette for both dresses and coats as the print costume with full-length princess coat of the print in this group demonstrates. The print is black and wine on a cream ground. There is increasing interest shown for wine and red shades and they are regarded as color "firsts" for fall and winter. An innovation is the use of velvet revers on coats and jackets after the manner noted in this costume. This coat-dress qualifies admirably as an ideal midsummer costume. Its sheer print guarantees comfort while its modish velvet revers tune to the march of time that leads to fall days.

In the redingote made of fine black lace as portrayed to the right, answer to the midseason dress problem is given in no uncertain terms. A lace redingote such as this may be worn over different dresses converting the simplest frock into a costume of style distinction. For formal wear pose it over a black satin slip. What could make a more charming hostess or dinner gown than the redingote of black lace topping a white cotton pique foundation as here illustrated. The soft pique collar and perky bow lend fetching accents to this costume. You'll love a black lace redingote or jacket over your summer pastel silk crepe frocks. Try out the idea. You will find it well worth while. Separate lace jackets are smart, too, in either black or white.

TYROLEAN JACKET

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

Here is a little indispensable jacket you will want to wear with your culottes or shorts. It is made of white linen bound in bright colors like copen, red, navy or black with silver buttons. It is colorful and has the decorative buttons because it is of Tyrolean inspiration. Much of the fashionable sportswear this season reflects influence of Austrian peasant dress. The outstanding fashion note of this attractive jacket is the hand-quilted Trapunto design at the neck and on the pockets and sleeves. The vogue for hand-quilting is growing into a most outstanding style movement.

Pique for Toque

White pique flowers make a summer toque.

GLACE KID IS NEW FALL GLOVE STYLE

The smartest gloves this fall will be "smooth." There is a definite revival, to quote Vogue, "of the firm, moulded hand," possibly following the moulded silhouette, the moulded bust and moulded hips, which will be featured for fall. As the high style leather of the coming season, Paris is consequently sponsoring thin, supple glace kid. It has always been a standby and favorite, but now it is coming up rapidly in the fashion world.

Since three out of the four gloves Molyneux will show with his collection are glace kid, it goes without saying that the smartest women in Paris and this country will adopt the fashion. Fashions, as a whole, are becoming more and more feminine and the glace glove is but a natural result of that trend. Thin, smooth leather is the most flattering a woman can wear. It outlines the shape of her hand and makes her fingers appear long and slender.

Color is again a dominant note. Colored gloves are not going out of style. On the contrary, the fashion will be harnessed to practical, sensible shades of which some will become almost staples.

Prints and Big Hats

Colorful prints, broad-brimmed hats, and strap pumps with high built-up heels are favorites among outdoor diners at Manhattan's fashionable terrace cafes during the noon hour.

Choosing Corsages

A good principle to follow in selecting a corsage or shoulder bouquet is that the large flowers look best on the tall woman, small ones on a short woman.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

Dean of the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.

Lesson for August 30

BEGINNING OF WORLD MISSIONS

LESSON TEXT—Acts 11:19-26, 13:1-12.

GOLDEN TEXT—And he said unto them, Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. Mark 16:15.

PRIMARY TOPIC—On a Journey for Jesus.

JUNIOR TOPIC—The Gospel Starts Around the World.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—New Adventures With Christ.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Holy Spirit in Missions.

The normal expression of salvation in the life of a believer is a passion for the conversion of others. The early church soon began to fulfill the great commission of its Lord and Master. Its first missionary enterprise was in the great and wicked city of Antioch, only 150 miles from Jerusalem, but far from God. In this unpromising soil we find growing:

I. A Model Mission Church (vv. 19-21).

Its establishment was in accord with the plan of God, for it was:

1. The result of a faithful testimony (vv. 19, 20).

Those who were scattered abroad by persecution had but one crowning purpose—"preaching the Lord Jesus."

2. A gathering place for all God's people (vv. 19, 20). The truth was preached to both Jews and Gentiles.

3. A living witness in a wicked city (v. 21).

"The hand of the Lord was with them." Little wonder then that "a great number believed and turned unto the Lord." Note in verse 26 that it was in Antioch that the followers of Christ were first called by the beautiful name "Christians." In the midst of the most evil and degraded surroundings the sweet flower of Christian faith may grow.

II. The Model Mission Church Becomes a Model Missionary Church (13:1-12).

We have here the first step in the world-wide missionary movement which continues to our day and which has influenced the destinies of men and shaped the course of world history.

This first missionary enterprise presents the essential principles and methods which are vital to true missionary work, even in our day. To begin with, there must be a proper base of operation, namely:

1. The home church (vv. 1-3).

God calls his messengers right out of the church membership. On the Sunday that this lesson is taught missionary leaders of the next generation will be in the classes of some crossroads Sunday school. How important it will be that the teacher present the truth of God's Word plainly and faithfully.

Notice that this church was spiritually alive. It was a church that prayed, fasted, and ministered the Word of God. It was responsive to the guidance of the Holy Spirit and was ready to sacrifice by giving up its leading men for the missionary cause.

Next we have indicated the type of men called to be:

2. The missionaries (vv. 2-4).

a. The strongest men in the church (v. 2).

When you want something done, ask a busy man to do it. God's missionary program calls for the best the church can give, not misfits or failures.

b. Spirit-led men (vv. 3, 4).

God chooses and sends men into service. He separates and places them. We must be responsive to God's call for us and be quick to assist men and women who are called by God.

3. Missionary experiences (vv. 5-12).

a. Minister to all people (vv. 5-7). Paphos was a Greek city of high culture and low morals. It was ruled by Sergius Paulus, a Roman officer of noble character. With him was Barjesus also called Elymas, a wicked Jew. The missionary messenger rejoices in the opportunity to preach to Greek, Roman, and Jew, of high or low estate, interested or bitterly antagonistic to the gospel.

b. Meet satanic opposition (vv. 8-10).

The devil has his servants who live only to oppose the gospel. Notice that even as God has children so also there are children "of the devil" (v. 10). We choose our spiritual family connections.

c. Proclaim judgment on sin (v. 11).

This is not an easy thing to do but is required of one who is "filled with the Holy Spirit."

d. Lead men to Christ (v. 12).

In this case it was the result of fear, which is a powerful factor in the conversion of some men.

The Master's commission, "go ye into all the world and preach the gospel," has never been altered, modified, or abrogated. It is still the great "unfinished business" of the church.

Seeking for Happiness

It is not often, at least, because we are so anxious to be happy in this world, so eager to grasp at a condition belonging not to here, but to hereafter, that we fret and fidget for what God has denied us.

STAR DUST

Movie • Radio

★★★By VIRGINIA VALE★★★

YOU may think that it would be all too easy to break into the movies if you were related to a star. But—well, just see what Florence Eldridge has to say about it.

In private life she is Mrs. Fredric March. In public life she had been a well known actress on the stage for some years before they were married. When he decided on movies instead of the stage, she went along to Hollywood, because being a good wife is more important to her than having a career of her own.

Came the time when RKO was casting "Mary of Scotland," in which Katherine Hepburn and Fredric March are co-starred (and a swell picture it is!). Miss Eldridge wanted the role of Queen Elizabeth.

"I was selected only after every other candidate for the part had been tested and rejected for one reason or another," says she. She finally got it, of course, and turned in an excellent performance.

Gertrude Michael

Gertrude Michael was the target for a lot of remonstrating when she left Paramount; there were people who said she'd find that free-lancing was a lot worse than sticking with a big company, even though that company didn't seem to be doing a great deal for you. Some of them predicted that she'd be completely out of pictures, first thing she knew.

Whereupon she signed up with RKO and now she's headed straight for the top.

That brand new motion picture company, Grand National, has just signed up a young man who looks like big star material. His name is Brilhart Chapman, and he's a dancer—has appeared in solo numbers for the past four years with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Recently he has been dancing at a night club in New York, and now he's off to Europe on a vacation, before he starts work before the camera.

Lily Pons is all set to begin picture work again, although she has said that she doesn't care too much about it. She spent her vacation in Connecticut, its climax being the arrival of her mother from France.

John McCormack, the famous Irish tenor, sang "Killarney" and "Believe Me, If All Those Endearing young Charms" in England the other day for 20th Century-Fox's "Wings of the Morning" —and if you see the picture you'll see the famous singer in natural color—it's the first Technicolor picture produced in England.

The football broadcasts are being lined up, so that all of us who don't want to go to games, or can't make it, can sit at home this fall and hear what's happening on the gridiron. An oil company is acting as sponsor for the broadcasts of one hundred major games, over thirty-six stations on the coast. Don Wilson, whom you've heard doing another sort of announcements with Jack Benny, will do some of the announcing.

Richard Dix

If you listen to the Music Hall of the Air, on the radio, you probably feel that you know Ted Hammerstein; he is the grandson of the late Oscar Hammerstein, one of America's most illustrious theatrical figures.

Ted tells this story about himself. He broke into the theatrical business by working for a Broadway booking agent.

This theatrical agent was one of the important ones, and his waiting room was usually filled with people clamoring for work. Keeping them from storming the inner office was Hammerstein's main duty. He did his job as bouncer very effectively—and some of the people he threw out later made good—among them Richard Dix, Chester Morris and Ben Lyons!

ODDS AND ENDS . . . Her admirers are declaring that Norma Shearer's performance in "Romeo and Juliet" makes her the greatest American actress, bar none, on stage or screen . . . Marlene Dietrich says she'll never return to Germany, not because of troubles with the government, but because the German people don't like her in pictures . . . Now it's Donald Woods who has gone on strike on the Warner Brothers lot . . . Wonder what is causing that epidemic . . . Bette Davis must be glad that she walked out on "God's Country and the Woman;" the company has been having a run of accidents on location.

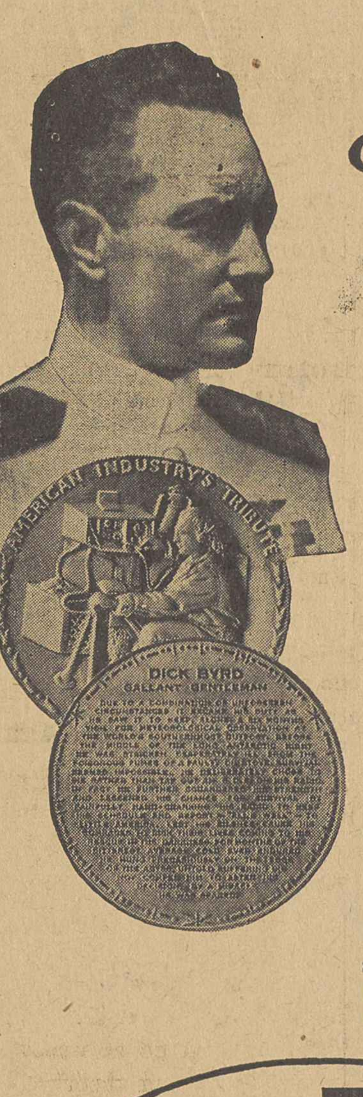
Gallant Gentleman

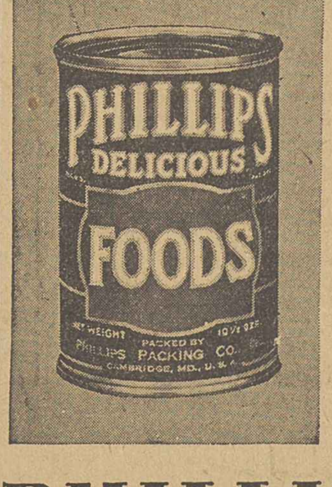


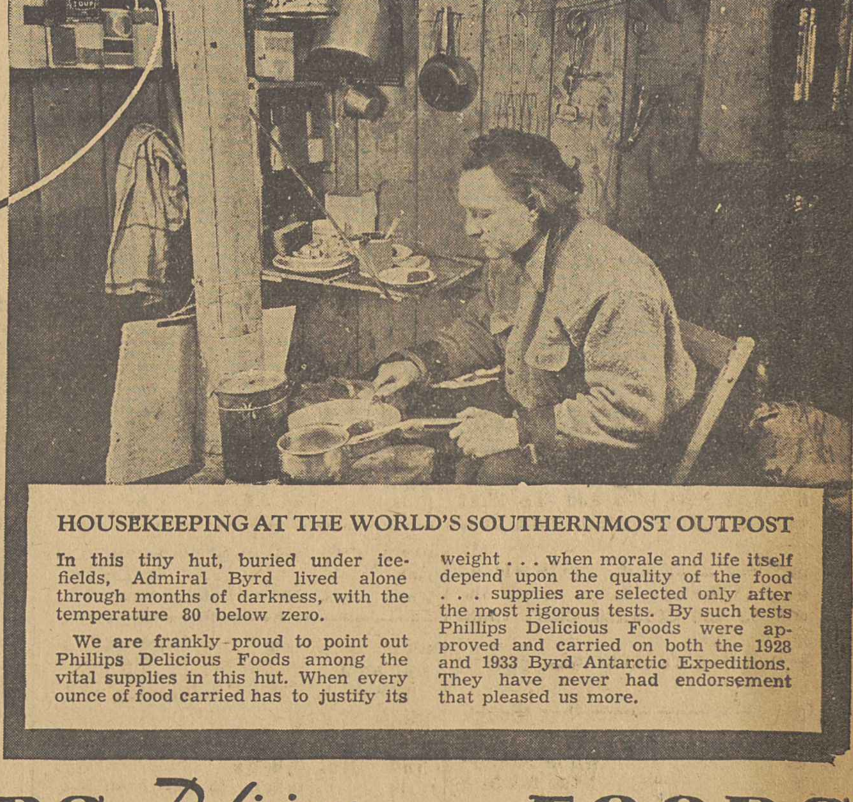
• IN UNITED TRIBUTE TO REAR-ADMIRAL RICHARD EVELYN BYRD, U. S. N. (Ret.), six hundred members of American industrial and scientific groups met at a dinner on June 5th. They presented to Admiral Byrd a gold medal inscribed "American Industry's Tribute."

On the reverse side, this medal commemorates the silent courage of an heroic leader who kept alone "a six months vigil for meteorological observation at the world's southernmost outpost. Before the middle of the long Antarctic night he was stricken desperately ill from the poisonous fumes of a faulty oil stove. Survival seemed impossible. He deliberately chose to die rather than tap out an S. O. S. on his radio. In fact, he squandered his strength and lessened his chance for survival by painfully hand-cranking his radio to keep his schedule and report—'All's Well'—to Little America, lest his silence cause his comrades to risk their lives coming to his rescue in the darkness. For months of the bitterest average cold ever endured, he hung precariously on the edge of the abyss. Untold suffering did not compel him to alter his decision. By a miracle he was spared."

In 22 branches of scientific knowledge the world is richer because Byrd and his comrades adventured into the Antarctic. But far beyond this the world is enriched by the character of these courageous men . . . led by a man who silently challenged death in one of the great deeds of all time . . . It is in enduring recognition of such rare leadership that the medal presented to him is inscribed "Dick Byrd—Gallant Gentleman."

Phillips Delicious Soups, Tomato Juice and Canned Vegetables were carried in the commissariat of both Byrd Expeditions to the Antarctic.





HOUSEKEEPING AT THE WORLD'S SOUTHERNMOST OUTPOST

In this tiny hut, buried under ice-fields, Admiral Byrd lived alone through months of darkness, with the temperature 80 below zero.

We are frankly proud to point out Phillips Delicious Foods among the vital supplies in this hut. When every ounce of food carried has to justify its weight . . . when morale and life itself depend upon the quality of the food . . . supplies are selected only after the most rigorous tests. By such tests Phillips Delicious Foods were approved and carried on both the 1928 and 1933 Byrd Antarctic Expeditions. They have never had endorsement that pleased us more.

"The Devil Doll" Offers Screen's Strangest Story

"The Devil Doll," new M-G-M thiller showing Sunday and Monday at the Strand Theatre, is a spectacular demonstration of the limitless range of the modern screen.

The picture is based on the startling, fantastic novel, "Burn, Witch, Burn," by A. Merritt, distinguished author of mystery stories, from a screen play by Richard Schayer and Garrett Fort.

Directed by Tod Browning, sometimes referred to as "the Edgar Allen Poe of the Screen," for his creation of "Dracula" and the late Lon Chaney mysteries, this Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production stars Lionel Barrymore, with a notable cast of supporting players.

Among them are Maureen O'Sullivan, last seen with Barrymore in "The Voice of Bugle Ann"; Frank Lawton, who portrayed David Copperfied in manhood; Robert Greig, gargantuan comedian who is cast for the first time as a villain; Grace Ford, the Oklahoma dancing teacher who became a screen "find"; Lucy Beaumont, Arthur Hohl, Fred Warren and other accomplished players.

The story tells of a scientist, gone mad in his efforts to discove a means of shrinking the atom. He conceives the theory that if all living creatures might be reduced to one-sixth of their natural size the world food supply would be adequate for all. His fantastic dream brings into existence a weird laboratory where animals and human beings are reduced according to his formula. But, in the process, their brains are destroyed, leaving them treacherous morons.

A banker, convicted unjustly of a crime, escapes from prison and acquires the mad scientist's uncanny secret. Returning to Paris the banker employs his knowledge to murder the schemers who had him unjustly imprisoned.

Barrymore portrays the wronged banker who slinks into Paris armed with his dreadful secret. He disguises himself as an old woman and pretends to operate a shabby doll shop.

The first of his enemies to become a victim is transformed into a tiny human "doll" who issued as a tool to paralyze another and eventually force a confession from the third.

As the result of a mishap in his plans to kill the third conspirator, te ax-banker arouses the Paris Surete. Disguising himself, he girl, her husband and their chilconceals his identity from a daughter who has grown up to despise him as a criminal. In the end he sacrifices his life that his name, now cleared, may remain so for the dren.

Florida Will Have Big Exhibit At Alabama State Fair

What promises to be one of the most interesting exhibits at the forthcoming Alabama State Fair is a Mammoth Florida State Exhibit said to rival in attractiveness and interest the big Florida exhibit brought here last year from Chicago where it was for two years the outstanding state exhibit at the Century of Progress, World's Fair and which was shipped from here to Rockefeller Center New York for exhibition at the International Building during the winter months before moving on to Cleveland Ohio, where it is now the talk of tre Great Lakes Exposition in that city.

P. T. Strieder, Secretary-Manager of the Alabama State Fair said that arrangements have been completed with E. W. Brown, vice president and manager of Florida National Exhibits for the construction and assembling of the new Florida State Exhibit to have its debut at the Alabama Fair.

Following a meeting with his staff at his offices in Florida Manor House at the Great Lakes Exposition, Cleveland, Mr. Brown with the assistance of J. E. Wallace, Superintendent of exhibits and Foster L. Barnes, landscape engineer of Florida National Exhibits, checked on the available material for building the new exhibit and immediately started contacting the various state departments, organizations and firms and individuals throughout the state of Florida with instructions to ship the necessary equipment and products for assembling of the new exhibit at the Alabama Fair.

Construction of the exhibit at Birmingham will be in the hands of J. E. Wallace who will come here to personally supervise the work.

The space needed for the new exhibit calls for 260 ft. frontage of display space. In order to provide room for the huge exhibit a block of space 40 ft. by 90 ft. on four sides will be used in the new steel exhibit building, Wofford Hall, which was completed for last year's fair.

Instead of the scenes used for the exhibit that was shown here last year the new exhibit will feature, a display of rare birds, citrus and tropical fruits and plants, fish sea shells, sea oats, orange blossom perfumes, cigars, jellies and preserve products, a special Basch and Lomb theatre type Balloptican and slides and a collection of hand-carved cypress knees done in intricate hand-carved designs of bird life, etc., by C. S. Hall, for thirty years with Elbert Hubbard's Roycrofters.

Moving from the exhibition halls to the grandstand and midway, visitors will find hair raising thrilling events and wonders from the four corners of the earth to amuse and entertain them.

Heading the grandstand attractions each night will be a massive musical revue, "The Show of the Century" with a company of over 100 singers, dancers and comedians and featuring the world famous "Disappearing Water Ballet", the most brilliant and novel aquatic production ever presented before a grandstand audience. The girls fully dressed in gorgeous gowns, vanish beneath the water, emerging in different costumes. The effect is baffling, yet entrancing.

The Calera Road Is Surfaced!

IT IS A FACT AT LAST

Applicatin of the finishing surface of asphat and crushed lime rock was applied to the road from Montevallo to Calera last week, thus completing the road improvement project that connects Montevallo by a hard surfaced highway with the Birmingham-Montgomery highway.

Now, we are happy in the realization that we can step in a car here and go to any one of the great number of places reached by Alabama's paved highways without having to go through the mud or the dust.

We feel like expressing our sentiments in the words of the old maid, who after many unsuccessful hopes of matrimony, finally followed her man to the altar, and commented upon the happy culmination to a friend in these words:

"This is the way I long have sought, and mourned because I found it not".

The following is quoted from Atticus Mullin, in The Montgomery Advertiser, relative to Dr. Harman's expressions about the new Montevallo bridge, and the paved road to Calera:

Instead of sporting the mien of a professional mourner, which would have been in place, Dr. A. F. Harman, president of Alabama College, Montevallo. came to Montgomery Tuesday and beamed as he talked of the completion of the newly paved road from Calera to Montevallo.

Dr. Harman feels that the completion of this highway, with the overhead bridge to obviate the Southern Railway grade crossing, is as important to Montevallo and to the State's woman's college there as all of the improvements made in Montgomery are to Montgomery.

We did not talk to Dr. Harman about Montevallo finances because we did not want to disturb his equilibrium. And besides, we knew of the financial difficulties of this fine school and the legislature ought to be ashamed of itself for making meager appropriations to the college and then not paying half of those appropriations.

Montevallo is now connected with Alabama by a paved road from Calera, an off-shoot of the Montgomey - Bimingham paved highway All that is needed now is for the state to do its duty by this splendid institution in the matter of paying appropriations.

TWA Feels Texas Rush

DALLAS, Texas—Transcontinental-Western Airways officials report a tremendous traffic increase on their cross-country flights due to the Texas Centennial Exposition at Dallas. Although the Exposition, a $25,000,000 World's Fair, does not open until June 6, the pre-exposition business already is having effect, TWA heads said. The line has direct "feeder" connection to Dallas, their coast-to-coast route.

Monster to Live Again

DALLAS, Texas — Mechanized replicas of life-size prehistoric monsters will wage a battle to the death in the exhibit of the Sinclair Oil Company at the Texas Centennial Exposition, which opens here June 6 and continues through November. The giant monsters will lunge, snap, growl and bellow at each other as a battery of electric motors propel their intricate mechanisms. The entire exhibit will be in the open.

Hon. Gaston Scott, president of the State Highway Commission, was a visitor in Montevallo Monday. He was here, we are told, to take a look at the new bridge recently completed.

Miss Lucile Sherwood, of Brundidge, spent a few days visiting Mr. and Mrs. Barney Burnett last week.

Mrs. Barney Burnett returned home last week from Troy, where she spent several days visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. M. Grantham. Her father and mother came home with her for a short visit. While here Mr. Grantham, who is pressman for The Troy Messenger, visited The Times office.

Mrs. W. C. Robinson, of Clanton, was in Montevallo Tuesday superintending arrangements for installation of equipment and preparing to open her beauty shop on September the first.

Messrs. Walter Fancher and Phelan Brown left on Wednesday morning for a visit to Chillicothe, Missouri.

Sports Spotlight

By Donald Vaughan

The outlook for the Montevallo High School's football team is very gratifying as to material, but trouble lies in the heavy schedule for 1936. The schedule has been completely filled with the exception of two or three dates.

Coach Leon Hick's team has only one position to be filled in the backfield, but four starters are missing from the line. Two and maybe three of these gaps can be filled by able bodied reserves of last year's team, but for the other posts there will be a scramble.

In the backfield the team will be ably led by Percy Lee, Captain and quarterback. Captain Lee will have an excellent assistant in Jack Harrison as alternate captain and fullback. Another backfield position will be filled by Walter Weems who was one of the high scoring men on the team last season. Weems, will be a valuable asset to the team with his fine place kicking. The other position will be a toss-up but don't surprised to see "Red" Confer come through.

In the line we find the greatest loss but fine reserves are there to fill in. Joe Wood, former Captain, left at center a difficult place to fill, though Clay Griffin, a reserve of last year, and Bob Anderson are strong contenders for the post. Former Alternate Captain Charles Findley and Willard Blackburn formerly held down these posts, but David Leslie and John Carr are expected to fill these gaps well. The two tackles are filled by veterans, George Cahoon and Arthur Liddle, and they shoud be greatly improved for the coming season. One end is taken care of by Travis Hartley. "Trab" was a regular last year but was hurt during the season Hartley has failed to go though a season without injury. Here's hoping he breaks that jinx this year The other flank will be the hardest position on the team to fill as it was filled by Craddock Winslett and his able reserve, Bill Spurgeon No definite candidate is in the lead but there will be many new prospects working for the position.

Many new candidates are expected to report. A goodly number of promising boys will come from Calera. All of the prospects and the reserves of last year will be out there fighting, so the regulars can't loaf.

July Sales of Ford V-8 Is Record

July sales of Ford V-8 new passenger cars, commercial cars and trucks, broke all records for the past six years for the same month in the Atlanta branch territory of the Ford Motor Company, according to E. D. Bottom, Manager.

Parts sales for July were the largest of any month since October 1929. July accessory sales exceeded any previous month this year.

The popularity of the Ford radio unit is evidenced by the fact that July was the biggest month for the Atlanta Branch since radios were introduced by the Ford Motor Company.

"While undoubtedly the bonus has had some effect on our recent sales," said Mr Bottom, "we believe that general improvement in business conditions, the increasing prosperity of the farmer and the fact that the public is coming to realize that the 1936 Ford V-8 is the biggest dollar value ever offered by the Ford Motor Company, are the real reasons for our record-beaking Ford V-8 sales, both in June and July of this year. Our dealers report no let up in the demand for new Ford V-8s in the Atlanta branch territory which extends over portions of Georgia, Alabama, Tennessee and North Carolina."

Mrs. Peterson Will Speak Sept. 10th

Mrs. Peterson has taught in the Progressive Education Demonstration School at Alabama College for five successive summers and has been a member of the faculty of the institution for thirteen years. Alabama Obtains Allotments

FEDERAL FUNDS APPROPRIATED UNDER SOCIAL SECURITY LAW

Alabama received approximately $600,000 in Federal allotments under the social security act during the six months ending Aug. 1, it was announced today from Washington.

John G. Winant, chairman of the Social Security Board, announced that $433,689 was allocated by the board to match state and local funds for direct aid to needy aged persons and dependent children in Alabama.

Maternal Funds Listed

In addition, $107,436 was granted Alabama for maternal and childrens welfare services and $52,712 was allotted the state for administration of its unemployment insurance law—a companion measure to the Federal act.

The grant for maternal-child welfare activities was disbursed through the Children's Bureau, in the Department of Labor. Smaller sums have come to Alabama through other Federal agencies administering other provisions of the act.

Release of the $433,689 matching fund for public assistance enabled the state to grant pensions to 11,800 needy men and women of 65 or over, and to give similar direct aid to 13,600 needy dependent children.

Aid Termed Inadequate

Welfare authorities, however, admit the aid given is inadequate and does not reach all needy individuals by any means, due to failure of the last Legislature to provide sufficient state funds for matching the Federal allotments. The Federal grants are strictly limited by the extent to which the states match them.

Nevertheless, the old-age relief provided to date has been sufficient to enable 33 Alabama counties to close their almshouses, Chairman Winant stated. He also said 15 other counties are planning to close their homes for needy aged soon.

Turning to the long-range features of the social security program Mr. Winant estimated 256,000 wage earners in Alabama are "protected" by the Federal-State unemployment insurance law, whose benefits become payable starting in January of 1938.

Dr. and Mrs. A. W. Vaughan, Miss Lenice Vaughan, and Donald, were visitors in Birmingham Monday.

Mr. Dobbins, successor of Mr. Lucien Giddens, at Alabama College, was a visitor at The Times office Tuesday. Mr. Dobbins has had a wide experience in matters of publicity, which we find qualifies him to "talk shop"' right along with a country printer. You can lay to this: a publicity man who knows his job all the way back from an apprenticeship in a county newspaper office has a foundation of experience that will carry him safely and successfullly through when he gets high up the ladder. We welcome Mr. Dobbins to Montevallo.

Power Co's Gorgas Plant Put To Work

SECOND STEAM UNIT WILL BE ADDED TO GENERATING SYSTEM

Birmingham, Aug. 30.—J. M. Barry, Vice President and General Manager of Alabama Power Company announced today that owing to continued dry weather the company was putting its Gorgas No. 1 steam plant into operation. Gorgas No. 2 plant has been in constant operation for the same reason since June 8th.

"The initial load to be carried by the No. 1 plant, he said, will be 50,000 kilowatts. The consumption of coal in the No. 2 plant for the past three months has been almost 1,000 tons per day and the estimated immediate additional coal consumption by plant No. 1 will be 1,000 tons daily, making approximately 2,000 tons per day for the two plants."

"The operation of the two plants, Barry said, results in increased employment by the company in their operation and also means increased employment among coal miners. Railroad employees, merchants and business people generly, will also benefit through this activity at the steam plants and large daily consumption of coal."

Indications are that the Gorgas plants will operate on a substantial basis for some weeks. This will be welcome news to those who work in the plants, to the coal mines which produce the coal, to the railroads which haul it, and to numerous others who benefit indirectly from increased payrolls.

NEW LUMBER BUSINESS IS OPENED IN MONTEVALLO

Mr. C. E. Day, formerly timekeeper for Montevallo Coal Mining Company, at Aldrich for five years, has opened a retail lumber business in Montevallo. Location of the new enterprise is in the brick warehouse building near the Southern depot, formerly used as a wholesale grocery house.

Mr. Day will sell at retail a general line of rough and finished lumber, moulding and finishing materials. Later he plans to add a number of other standard items of building materials.

This week Mr. Day will move his family from Aldrich to Montevallo. He will occupy Mrs. Crowe's house.

CIVIC CLUB

The regular meeting of the Montevallo Civic Club was held Wednesday noon at the Baptist church. Dr. H. W. Vaughan presided.

Dr. A. F. Harman, president of Alabama College, presented as guests three new members of his administrative staff, as follows:

Miss Lucile Hudson, executive secretary; Miss Jack Bowdon, assistant; Mr. Charles Dobbins, director of information and development. Mr. Dobbins, it was stated, also will be attached to the staff of Dr. Vaughan in the English Department, as instructor in journalism.

Mr. Ricardo F. Wallace, resident enineer, representing the U. S. Treasury Department in the construction of the new postoffice, was a guest. Mr. Wallace spoke briefly of his work here, stating that the plans indicate that Montevallo will have a postoffice building out of the ordinary for towns of this size.

Dr. M. L. Orr, supervisor of the Montevallo public schools, was the program speaker. He outlined the plan of operation of the High Shool and the Elementary School and their administration as training units for student teachers at Alabama College.

Stress was placed by Dr. Orr upon the high degree of training represented by the persons who constitute the teaching personnel of the two school units. Dr. Harman supplemented the references of Mr. Orr to the public school faculty by venturing the assertion that no public school in the State or Nation with a student enrollment of a comparative number, has a faculty of teachers so well trained for their work.

Dr. Orr stated that Mrs. Charlotte Peterson has been requested to serve as acting principal of the Elementary School in the absence of Miss Alice Boyd, who is seriously ill.

The meeting adjourned following Dr. Orr's talk. As the members dispersed one was heard to make this comment, which seems very timely and to the point:

"We have good schools. In fact we have the best of schools in Montevallo. We folks like to hear our leaders tell about our fine school system and our exceptionally well-trained teachers. We like to brag about it ourselves. But why is it that we want to go in a hole when we come to talk about financing our schools. Looks like we ought to know that we must pay for our schools. If we are proud of our good schools and our good teachers (and we surely are) then we should be willing to do the things necessary to finance them adequately. If we don't, we will not have these good teachers much longer. They can't live and teach school on mere praise for their fine work".

Freeing Of Bridges Expected By Oct. 1

Freeing of 15 toll bridges in Alabama by October 1 was regarded as a certainty in capitol quarters Tuesday, though C. A. Gray, Jr., of Birmingham, last week filed notice of a suit against the Alabama Bridge corporation, asking a "perpetual injunction" to prevent the highway department paying any funds now on hand on principal of bonds until all past due interest on his bonds had been paid.

Governor Graves said Monday no papers had been served in Montgomery and that plans to free the bridges would proceed. Lawrence Lee, legal advisor to the governor said the suit would not hinder the freeing process.

An agreement recently was made between a majority of dissenting bondholders and the bridge corporation to refinance the bonds and lease the structures to the highway department.

DOVE SEASON OPENS IN NORTH ALABAMA

North Alabama sportsmen prepared to test their marksmanship Tuesday with the official opening of the dove season in counties north of Tuscaloosa and Birmingham. The period will end September 30 and reopen December 20 to January 31.

Commissioner I. T. Quinn, of the conservation service, said the open season was in counties north of Pickens, Tuscaloosa, Talladega, Clay and Randolph.

Quinn said bag limits would be 20 doves a day and that automatic shotguns and pumps must be blocked to prevent nse of more than three shells.

Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Ivie announce the birth of a son on Wednesday, August 26. Mother and son are doing nicely at South Highland Infirmary, Birmingham.

Sheriff Starts Gambling Drive

PARAPHERNALIA SEIZED IN SHELBY COUNTY NIGHT CLUB RAIDS

Columbiana, Aug. 31.—Following raids on Forest Inn and the Log Cabin, smart night "clubs", just across the Shelby County line, on the Florida Short Route, Sheriff C. H. Fore, of Shelby County, announced Monday that he planned to head off any gambling activities in either place in the future.

"I have ordered them to cease gambling activities," said sheriff Fore, "and I think I can keep them from violating the law."

Sheriff Fore added that he planned to present evidence against both clubs, based on raids Sunday night, to the Shelby County Grand Jury, which will be organized in Columbiana, Sept. 14.

Log Cabin and Forest Inn, favorite haunts of many Birmingham people for several years, were raided by Sheriff Fore and Deputies Foster, White and Lee, shortly after 10 p.m., Sunday.

At the Log Cabin, Sheriff Fore said, he found the door locked, and entered forcibly. Sheriff Fore said although he did not catch anyone in the act of gambling, he seized a dice table, a roulette layout and other gambling paraphernalia. No arrests were made.

Sheriff Fore said a large crowd of "city folks" was present when he raided the Log Cabin.

At Forest Inn, Sheriff Fore added, he found no evidence of gambling but said there appeared to be a lot of people standing around "doing notring in particular."

The sheriff said apparently Forest Inn "had been tipped off" after the Log Cabin raid.

Since taking office in January, 1935, Sheriff Fore said he had raided Forest Inn 'three or four times' and the Log Cabin once.

Rogers Picture In Return Engagement By Popular Demand

For those who missed it before and for those who have requested to see it once moore, the Strand Theatre, by popular demand, is bringing back, Sunday and Monday, Sept. 5 and 6, that unforgettable Fox film, "State Fair," the picture that brought Will Rogers his greatest fame.

A vertible constellation of stars surrounds the beloved humorist in "State Fair" headed by Janet Gaynor, who is co-starred with Rogers, and also including Lew Ayres, Sally Eilers, Norman Foster, Louise Dresser, Frank Craven and Victor Jory.

The excitement, the laughter, the romance and adventure of the great State Fair is reflected in the expressions of the Frake family as they prepare to depart for the event they have eagerly awaited for a year.

Will Rogers (Abel Frake) has entered his prize hog, Blue Boy, in the stock competition while Louise Dresser (Mother Frake) is looking forward to winning first prize with her pickles and mincemeat.

The children, Janet Gaynor and Norman Foster, anticipate adventure and romance at the fair.

As the event is to last a complete week, the Frakes pitch their tent at the fair grounds. Rogers spends most of his time with Blue Boy, Louise Dresser is busily engaged comparing recipes with the other women, while Janet Gaynor has met Lew Ayres and Norman Foster has fallen in love with Sally Eilers, an aerial performer.

WILL ROGERS

As the fair moves through its exciting week, many things happen to the Frake family. Love, humor and excitement are skillfully blended in the narrative and the film stands today, as it was when first released, one of the screen's great pictures.

"State Fair" is a Henry King production, adapted from Phil Strong's famous novel of the same title.

Stanley Appointed On State Board

GREENVILLE EDITOR GETS APPOINTMENT BY GOVERNOR

Montgomery, Ala., Aug. 31.—Gov. Bibb Graves has appointed John Glenn Stanley, editor of the Greenville Advocate, to a seven-year term on the State Conservation Board. Mr. Stanley succeeds G. R. Swift of Atmore, whose one-year term expired on Aug. 15.

A conservationist by inclination, a doodler by preference and a bum shot by admission, Mr. Stanley is intensely interested in building up Alabama's game and fish resources. His paper has been a staunch supporter of the State Conservation Department for years.

Next to editing a weekly newspaper, which he describes as "the best and the worst job in the world," he likes to apply the law of "wise use without waste" while fishing for blue-gill bream or participating in a dove shoot.

"Conserve practically all the game there is" will be his practice as well as his policy while serving on the State Conservation Board. He also intends to be a stern economist and save expenses for the State Conservation Department.

The Greenville editor was born 42 years ago just across the street from his present home. He attended school just across the street from the home in which he lived the greater part of his youth.

He entered Auburn with ambitions to become an architect and after two years decided that the architectual profession demanded someone with greater interest in mathematics, so he returned to Greenville to become a printer's devil on his father's newspaper.

"I am a doodler," confesses the new board member, "and would rather fish for blue-gill bream than tarpon—but never caught the latter, and few of the former. Enjoy sitting in a peanut field and shooting at doves more than any other sport. Never came close to a bag limit in my life. Buy a new shotgun every season, and never have found one that can hit."

Mr. Stanley has a wife and two daughters—all fishermen!

ALABAMA SCHOOL FACTS

Do you know the state has not collected enough school revenue since 1930-31?

Do you know the Miller administration never collectel enough revenue.

Do you know Governor Miller supported a sales tax for school revenue, even though his is known as the economy administration?

Do you know the sales tax was defeated by only one vote in the 1933 Miller special session?

Critics of the school often point to a large increase in cost since 1917-18. Here are some of the reasons for the increase:

High school students increased from 31,233 to 145,000.

Elementary school enrollments grew 15 per cent.

Terms were even shorter in 1918 than now.

Teachers averagel $43.00 per month in 1918; the Minimum Program allows $75.00.

Modern Beauty Shop Opened Tuesday

The Modern Beauty Shop opened in Monteallo Tuesday, September 1, and was accorded a most favorable reception by a large number of patrons.

Mrs. W. C. Robinson, proprietor, was present during the opening days to greet her customers and make sure of their every comfort. When interviewed Wednesday she said:

"We are most grateful to the ladies of Montevallo and adjacent communities for the wonderful reception they have accorded us on our opening days. Everybody has been cordial and friendly, which makes us glad that we came to Montevallo to do business.

"We know from the number of people who have come to our shop and the expressions they have made to us that our service has been satisfactory. This is as we hoped to make it and as we shall strive to continue it.

"We are gratified with our opening, and we thank each and everyone who has contributed of their patronage and friendliness."

Mrs. Robinson announces that she will have as permanent operators in her shop Misses Louise Nolen and Birdie Brooks. While both these young ladies are fully trained and experienced in beauty shop work, Miss Brooks deserves special mention for her abilities in facial and manicuring.

The up-to-date equipment, artistic arrangement and friendly disposition of the operators has been pleasing to the many customers who have visited the Modern Beauty Shop during the opening days this week.

A TRIP TO MISSOURI

Felan Brown and Walter Fancher returned Monday night from a whirl-wind trip to Chillicothe and other points in the State of Missouri. The trip was made in Felan's trusted Chrysler roadster. Both state that they had a most enjoyable journey, but give a gloomy picture of that part of the country, as their destination took them into the outer edge of the drouth stricken area, giving them a fair idea of that stricken section. They say vegetation and everything is as brown as the proverbial berry While having a pleasant trip they came back home with the statement that after all there is no place like old Alabama, and Monteallo and Shelby county in particular.

State Convicts Are Working Highways

ELEVEN PRISON CAMPS ARE IN DIFFERENT PARTS OF STATE

From 11 prison camps scattered over Alabama, the State sends out more than 1,700 convicts daily to construct and maintain its highways.

Hamp Draper, chief of the State Convict Department, said the latest project for convicts would be the resurfacing of the highway between Birmingham and Calera—a bumpy stretch dreaded by all motorists.

The prison camps are located at Scottsboro in Jackson County, Hackleburg in Marion County; Lovick in Jefferson County; Calera in Shelby County; Cleveland in Blount County; Tuskegee in Macon County; Whitney and Cropwell in St. Clair County; Camden in Wilcox County; Nanafalia in Marengo County; and Whistler in Mobile County.

A great majority of the convicts at the road camps and prisons that work on the highways are negroes.

For their service the convict depatment receives $25 a month each from the State Highway Department.

The camps are similar to road construction camps of private contractors. The men sleep in single beds in big dormitory rooms. They are carried to work in trucks every morning and bought back every night.

The highway depatment supervises the work, and the construction work is confined largely to black-top roads. The men paint the hundreds of bridges on the highway system, and work the shoulders of the roads to offset the damage caused by the weather.

Life at the road camps is similar to the life of the convict at Kilby Prison, except that the broad recreational program at the State's chief prison unit is not available to the road camp convict.

Escapes are more frequent at the road camps, for the system of necessity does not afford the close confinement of a prison.

The road camp at Scottsboro was thrown into the national spotlight recently when 20 convicts enroute to work in a transfer "cage" were burned to death when the truck caught fire.

The fire started when a convict attempted to warm his hands by lighting a newspaper. Flames fell on gasoline that had spilled from a 50-gallon container on the truck, and the truck was turned into a flaming inferno with the men trapped inside.

Guards unlocked the back door and dragged two of the men to safety but the others stampeded towards the front end of the truck and were trapped.

The State board of adjustment paid the families of the convicts approximately $25,000.

Federal Loans In Shelby County

NINETY-EIGHT LOANS WERE CLOSED DURING THE PAST YEAR

In Shelby County, 98 loans were closed in the amount of $92,675 by the Federal Land Bank and the Land Bank Commissioner, from May 1, 1933, through June 30, 1936, according to information received by John D. Petree, National Emergency Council State Director for Alabama.

Of the loans closed in Shelby County 11 for $22,000 were made by the Federal Land Bank and 87 totaling $70,675 by the Land Bank Commissioner.

Through the agency of the Farm Credit Administration in Alabama, $21,067,074 have been loaned during the same period. These loans included 2,166 Federal Land Bank Loans for $5,327,100, 9,842 Land Bank Commissioner loans in the amount of $9,529,225, 13,483 Production Credit Association loans totaling $4,811,358, 27,114 emergency crop loans amounting to $1,399,391.

In addition to refinancing loans through the Farm Credit Administration, the farmers in Alabama were benefitted by a reduction mortgage principal which amounted to $1,411,300. Further savings resulting from lowered interest rates are estimated at $460,000.

In the period May 1, 1933, through June 30, 1936, 765,674 mortgage loans, totaling $2,065,165,826 were made and $1,391,3773,603 was advanced in loans to cooperatives, while $318,878,072 was loaned to cooperatives by the agencies of the Farm Credit Administration in the United States.

News Review of Current Events the World Over

Bullitt Is Made Ambassador to France—Hitler Stirs Stalin to Talk of War—Secretary Dern Dies in Washington.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union.

TRANSFER of William C. Bullitt from the embassy in Moscow to that in Paris is not surprising. He it was who was chiefly responsible for the recognition of the Soviet government by the United States, and when he was rewarded with the ambassadorship it was expected he would be able to swing a lot of Russian business to American concerns. Also it was hoped he could persuade his Russian friends to keep their promises not to disturb this country with communist propaganda. In these respects at least Mr. Bullitt has been a disappointment. But he retains the confidence of President Roosevelt and will not be out of place as ambassador to the leftist French government.

W. C. Bullitt.

Some observers think Mr. Bullitt is sent to Paris for the purpose of secretly sounding out the major European powers on the possibility of reconvening the world economic conference in 1937.

Jesse Isador Straus resigned as ambassador to France on the advice of his physicians. The President wrote him that "if this administration shall be continued for another four years, I shall count on your returning as a part of it."

REICHSFUEHRER HITLER has injected a little more ginger into the international armament race by suddenly announcing that the term for compulsory military service for Germans was doubled—two years instead of one. As matters are just now in Europe, this appeared to be aimed directly against soviet Russia, and if the London newspapers are to be believed, Dictator Stalin recognizes this and reacts as might be expected. The London Evening News and Daily Mail both assert that Stalin, in a secret radio address to the red army, said:

"Comrades of the red forces: We are on the very eve of momentous events. At any moment now you may be called upon to lay down your lives for the defense of the proletarian birthland.

"This is the moment you have been anticipating, and now your birthland is expecting you to do the duty you have so eagerly awaited.

"I have no doubts about you, and I am convinced you have no doubts about us, your leaders.

"Our enemies are getting into position. So be ready. The enemies are on the frontiers of our great land. Keep watch.

"Everything money could buy, everything the genius of man could invent and everything the loving labor of the workers could make have been given into your hands for the defense and glory of the Soviet land."

The London papers say other Soviet leaders followed Stalin with similar talks. The foreign office in Moscow flatly denied that the dictator had delivered any such address as was reported.

German economists, worried over the mounting costs of re-arming their country, were told the doubling of the term of military service would not be quite so expensive as it appeared, for more men in barracks means fewer on dole. However, the national debt continued to grow and ways of meeting payments are becoming fewer and more scanty.

SECRETARY OF WAR GEORGE H. DERN died in Walter Reed hospital, Washington, of heart disease and other complications resulting from influenza. He had been ill since last spring but part of the time had insisted on attending to his official duties, keeping this up even from his sick bed. Mr. Dern, who was 64 years old, was formerly a brilliant mining engineer and was the second non-Mormon to be elected governor of Utah, serving two terms.

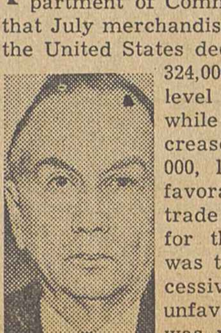
PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT'S special train made a quick run to Bismarck, N. D., and the special committee on the drouth, headed by Morris L. Cooke, reported to him on its inspection of the afflicted area. The President then took an automobile tour through the countryside to see for himself some of the effects of the long dry spell. He conferred with Acting Governor Welford and Senators Nye and Frazier of North Dakota and Acting Governor Holt and Senators Wheeler and Murray of Montana. Next day Mr. Roosevelt's train carried him down to Pierre, S. D., and thence into other drouth stricken states.

Mr. Roosevelt's original schedule was changed to permit him to make a quick run to Salt Lake City for the burial services of Secretary of War Dern.

JOHN L. LEWIS' Committee for Industrial Organization in one of its initial efforts to organize the steel workers seems to have succeeded only in leading one big plant to go out of business, throwing 750 men out of employment. Such is the result of a strike in the plant of the Standard Steel Spring company at Coraopolis, Pa., the strike being directed by the CIO. The employees who didn't strike later refused to work because, they said, their families had been threatened by phone with bombing if the men returned to the plant. So the company closed down and began removing the machinery. It was alleged the strikers were assured in advance that they would be given relief money if the plant were closed, and that the state authorities did nothing to protect the plant or the non-strikers from violence.

FEDERAL JUDGE JOHN P. BARNES of Chicago upheld the constitutionality of the Commodity Exchange act and denied an injunction to restrain its enforcement asked by members of the Chicago Mercantile exchange. Judge Barnes agreed with the contention of Special Assistant Attorney General Wendell Berge that the act is "merely an extension of the provisions of the grain futures act," which has been held constitutional by the United States Supreme Court.

FIGURES given out by the Department of Commerce revealed that July merchandise exports from the United States declined to $178,324,000, the lowest level of the year, while imports increased to $193,409,000, leaving an unfavorable balance of trade of $15,085,000 for the month. It was the second successive month an unfavorable balance was reported. However, compared with the 1935 month, exports were up 3 per cent and imports up 9 per cent.



Sec. Roper

The unfavorable balance was regarded by Secretary of Commerce Roper as convincing proof of economic recovery in the United States because nearly half the increase in imports over last year in dollar volume was accounted for by luxury items such as furs and whisky and commodities not extensively produced in this country, such as wood-pulp, paper, nickel and tin.

The increase in exports over July, 1935, consisted chiefly of finished and semi-manufactured articles, including machinery, electrical apparatus, aircraft, iron and steel manufactures and inedible vegetable products.

ACCORDING to estimates of the federal bureau of agricultural economics, the food supply of the United States for the year ending June 31, 1937, will be only 3 per cent below that of 1935-'36, and 1 per cent less than in 1934-'35. The reason is that the exports of food products probably will be less than during the last fiscal year.

The drouth has been unusually severe on feed crops, spring wheat, potatoes, and vegetables for canning.

AFTER more than five weeks of desperate fighting, neither the Spanish loyalists nor the rebels were able to claim a decided advantage, and it became evident that the conflict would be long drawn out if the other European nations could keep aloof. This latter eventuality was made more probable by Adolf Hitler's announcement that the German government had ordered an embargo on arms to Spain. He thus lined his country up with Great Britain and France, and Italy had accepted the French proposal for neutrality, though with some reservations.

These "neutral" nations, however, do not intend to be imposed upon and both the British and the German governments made strong protests to the Madrid government against alleged violation of the freedom of the seas. Five British warships set sail from Gibraltar and Hitler sent seven from the Baltic to enforce the demands that interference with shipping cease. The crews of these vessels were ready for immediate action.

The United States does not consider the attempted blockade of rebel-held ports any more valid than do the European nations. Secretary Hull told the Madrid foreign office: "My government directs me to inform you that, with the friendliest feelings toward the Spanish government, it cannot admit the legality of any action on the part of the Spanish government in declaring such ports closed unless that government declares and maintains an effective blockade of such ports."

FOLLOWING the confessions and execution of the Russian conspirators against Stalin and the Soviet government, the Norwegian authorities decided that Leon Trotzky, alleged author of the plot, had violated the conditions of his asylum in Norway. They gave him the choice of immediate arrest or signing a promise to refrain from all revolutionary activities, and he chose the latter. He is now under continual police surveillance.

DURING the fall army maneuvers France has been testing the strength of its new fortifications along the German frontier — the Maginot line. In the Montmedy region the elaborate system of concrete strongholds was subjected to an "enemy" attack and observers said the assailing troops, armed with the newest and speediest equipment, were able to penetrate the line only at a few places and in small numbers. Reservists from the interior of France had moved up to occupy the line in thirty-six hours. Watching the "battle" was a delegation of generals from Soviet Russia, with which nation France has a defensive military alliance.

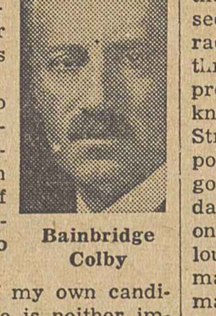
FLOYD B. OLSON, Farmer-Laborite governor of Minnesota and candidate for the United States senatorship, died of stomach cancer after a courageous fight. He had been ill for months but had kept up his executive and campaign activities as best he could until the end. Hjalmar Peterson, lieutenant governor, succeeds him as governor, but at this writing there is doubt as to whom the party's state central committee will select to make the race for the senatorship. Francis H. Shoemaker of Duluth announced his candidacy immediately, and two other men were being considered—Senator Elmer A. Benson, now a candidate for governor, and Representative Ernest Lundeen of Minneapolis.

F. B. Olson

On his deathbed Olson pledged his personal support to the New Deal in the November election, and it is presumed the Farmer-Laborites of his state will largely conform to that stand.

JOSEPH W. HARRIMAN, former president of the Harriman National Bank and Trust company of New York and a powerful figure in national finance, was released on parole from the federal northeastern penitentiary at Lewisburg, Pa. He hastened to New York where, it was believed, he would seek a position teaching business subjects. Harriman was sent to prison in 1934 for four and a half years after his conviction on charges of banking irregularities involving more than a million dollars.

SENATOR JAMES COUZENS of Michigan, a Republican long noted for his independence of party restrictions and a candidate for renomination on the Republican ticket, has announced that he will support President Roosevelt for re-election. His statement was:



Bainbridge Colby

"Believing as I do that the most important matter confronting the nation is the re-election of President Roosevelt, I intend to support him.

"The outcome of my own candidacy for the senate is neither important to the nation nor to me, but I believe it is important that my many loyal supporters in Michigan be advised in advance of the primary on September 15.

"The reasons for this conclusion will be advanced from time to time between now and election next November."

Former Gov. W. L. Brucker is opposing Couzens for the senatorial nomination.

On the other hand, Bainbridge Colby of New York, who was secretary of state in President Wilson's cabinet, announced that he is for Landon, declaring in a published statement:

"Governor Landon's candidacy carries the hopes of every American who knows what America stands for, and who respects the principles which have brought us to greatness as a nation, and preserved our liberties as self-governed people.

"The thoughtful and independent Democrats throughout the country —and their number is formidable— are determined in their election to rebuke the betrayal of their party by the administration in Washington."

GREAT BRITAIN and Egypt have settled their disputes and signed a treaty of friendship and alliance. It brings Egypt much nearer to its goal of independence while at the same time it provides full safety for England's interests, especially the Suez canal. The British troops probably will be withdrawn from Cairo and other cities and concentrated with the air force within the canal zone around Ismailia. The maximum strength is to be 10,000 in the army and 3,400 in the air force, but in an emergency Britain will be allowed to send necessary reinforcements.

The British high commissioner to Cairo and the Egyptian minister to London will be raised to the status of ambassadors.

Mud Slinging Ahead

Washington. — As the political campaign waxes warmer, it becomes painfully evident that the fight in 1936 for the suffrage of the people is going to be very dirty. It is going to be bitter and there is no way now apparent that such a characteristic can be avoided.

I do not believe that either Governor Landon, the Republican candidate, or President Roosevelt, seeking re-election as a Democrat, can prevent the hurling of invectives that are going to be very close to mud-slinging. Naturally the President of the United States seldom makes a mud-slinging speech and Governor Landon personally is a mild-mannered man who believes in discussing issues rather than individuals, but the intentions or the desires of these two candidates cannot control the bitterness that is, to my mind, certain to be found in this campaign in a large measure.

As typical of the sort of thing to which I have referred is the recent speech of Secretary Ickes who, in a national radio broadcast, became quite ill-tempered in his attack on Governor Landon. Mr. Ickes is not known for his composure any way and when he gets heated up on any subject he is likely to be guilty of remarks that are not becoming to an official of our government or any other.

I have not the slightest doubt that before the campaign has proceeded much further there will be similar speeches attacking Mr. Roosevelt personally and that, while Governor Landon may not approve, there will be unworthy charges hurled at the President.

Mr. Ickes skated pretty close to the line in his attack on Governor Landon by various adroit phrases which were designed to create the impression that the Republican candidate was either ignorant or dishonest. I do not know Governor Landon personally but I can offer this thought: No man is going to be nominated by any political party in a national convention, nominated by acclamation, unless his record is pretty clear. For Mr. Ickes to say, therefore, in effect, that Governor Landon has sold out to "Wall Street" was not the sort of campaign discussion likely to produce confidence among all the people in their government. It is comparable, in my opinion, to a charge that the President of the United States, who advertises himself continually as a friend of the common man, was guilty of increasing his own personal fortune through presidential acts—and every one knows this is not true. But to get back to the theme song of the Ickes' speech, it seems to me that the tragedy of his radio pronouncement lies in the fact throughout his discussion he was preaching class hatred. Every one knows, of course, attacks on "Wall Street" are very common in any political campaign. The demagogues use it every hour of every day everywhere they can find any one to listen to them. It is ridiculous, but it has happened for a good many years. So when Mr. Ickes made the charge that Governor Landon was either unwittingly or knowingly leading a "rich man's fight" against President Roosevelt he was descending to a rather low level of campaigning.

May Cause Showdown

I have seen indications of a reaction against the Ickes' speech in another way. John Hamilton, the Republican national chairman, on his recent organization tour of the western states, propounded the inquiry that seeks to identify the "economic royalists" about which President Roosevelt spoke several weeks ago. If the Roosevelt campaigners continue this class hatred propaganda, I rather suspect from what Mr. Hamilton said in his speeches there will be a perfect barrage of demands to know the names of these economic royalists. It may not seem important; indeed, it seems like it probably is inconsequential, but if the Republicans let down a barrage on the President of the United States, he is likely to be put in a bad corner.

Without attempting to forecast what the Republican opposition is likely to say, I can recall as an observer close to the wheels of government during the Roosevelt regime that Mr. Roosevelt frequently was a guest on the Astor yacht and that one of his chief advisors for many months was the multimillionaire, Bernard M. Baruch. It seems also that a very rich man, Henry L. Doherty, was in charge of the nation-wide dance program held on the President's birthday and Mr. Doherty, be it said, is head of one of the great utility chains.

These are just samples. It may be good politics for the President to encourage these attacks without approving them, but those of us who knew the late Louis McHenry Howe, are convinced that he never would have agreed to that sort of attack, had he been alive and serving as the President's closest political advisor as he did for a quarter of a century.

Probe G-Men

There is a situation in the federal government that threatens to be quite nasty. I refer to the row that has developed between the Department of Justice bureau of investigation (the G-men) and the Treasury's secret service corps. It is all very much under cover, quite secret, but the row has come to the surface sufficiently to result in a demotion of two long-time members of the secret service.

J. Edgar Hoover has been well press-agented as chief of the G-men. Joseph E. Murphy has had almost no advertising as assistant chief of the Treasury secret service in which he has served for more than a quarter of a century. Mr. Murphy and one of his subordinates have been reduced in rank, their record stained for life.

The two departments have kept the facts well covered up. It seems that something was going on among the G-men that the Treasury secret service thought they ought to know about. They conducted their own inquiry, their own investigation into the other staff of investigators. That is as much as has been made public except Secretary Morgenthau's announcement of the demotion order. I have known each of these men equally twenty years. Each is entitled to the utmost respect. But each operates along an entirely different line—Hoover with some willingness for publicity; Murphy with an absolute policy of never letting his name get into the papers. It is unfortunate that Joe Murphy was the goat.

Action Mystifies

The board of governors of the Federal Reserve system took an action recently that probably is quite mystifying to the average person. They ordered all of the banks of the country which are members of the Federal Reserve system to keep a deposit reserve with the Federal Reserve banks 15 per cent greater than ever has been required before.

With the technical phases of reserve requirements and the mechanical operation of this particular order, I think we need not be very much concerned. But with the principle upon which this action is taken I think every one with a bank account, however small, ought to be vitally interested. They ought to be interested for the very simple reason that this action illustrates better than any words I can write how far the centralization of control of the banking structure has gone. This action was taken under the National Banking act of 1935, a statute that has been frequently criticised as a "political banking act."

In the instance I have just reported, the change in the reserve requirements probably will have no serious reaction on us as individuals. It probably will not hurt the banks because few banks in the country have had calls for loans in any quantity since business is at such a low level. But the point is that under this law, the Federal Reserve board of governors can alter banking conditions over night. It can issue new rules and regulations that are wholly impossible of understanding by the average individual, but which are almost riotous in their effect upon the management of individual banks throughout the country.

To state this proposition in another way, may I describe it in the terms of a private business enterprise. If a storekeeper in a small town were subjected to regulation from Washington and the regulatory power in the federal government had such discretionary authority as the Federal Reserve board of governors, could that storekeeper ever feel that he was managing his own business? I think not. Then, in the case of the Federal Reserve board of governors, it must be added that the president of the board is Marriner S. Eccles who is known far and wide for his radical ideas about banking. It can be further said that Mr. Eccles has the ear of President Roosevelt. This has been criticised many times of course where opponents of the Roosevelt banking policies have contended that the banks can be utilized in any way the administration desires to use them. As an illustration of this, the federal government has been borrowing billions. Most banks are chock full of government securities. While I do not say it has happened, yet because I do not believe it has happened yet, nevertheless there is a possibility that government borrowings can be forced on the banks under such conditions. That is the course of action that has ruined the currency in half a dozen European nations.

War Financing
France Pays Piper
Lottery Millions
Ability to Endure

One hundred and fifty-three leading British economists, mapping out a new plan to preserve peace, say "the importance of American co-operation in the work of peace - making cannot be overestimated."

Arthur Brisbane

It is to be hoped that the part that America will play in future European affairs, such as war financing, may be very easily overestimated.

If those gentlemen cannot abstain from cutting each other's throats without the assistance and money of the United States, why, then let them cut each other's throats.

France is learning that the people always pay the piper, whoever the piper may be—a great conqueror leading them to war, or a clever politician loading them with taxes.

In France, sugar has gone up in price; bread and veal have both gone up; two sous a kilogram for bread, two sous a pound for veal, and the government is held directly responsible by the housewife as regards the bread, for the French government fixes the price of bread as ours fixes the price of postage stamps.

Trailing behind England and the United States the French, with less than 20 per cent of American unemployment, are discussing great public works to absorb the idle.

Billions are spoken of, but the "millard," French word for "billion," means only one billion four-cent pieces, the franc having been reduced by government fiat to that price. If a billion meant here 25,000 francs, equivalent to the American billion when the dollar was good, the French might well faint away, although they are fundamentally a rich people.

When Bismarck laid on France an indemnity equivalent to $1,000,000,000, after 1870, he thought he had asked for about all France could raise after a hard war. The French government offered bonds to pay Bismarck, and the French people subscribed to the loan 14 times over. Bismarck had guessed badly. France is far richer now than it was then.

French labor demands the 40-hour week and the government agrees; it also demands wage increases from 12 to 17 per cent, and that makes the country a little thoughtful.

With a shorter week, diminished production and higher wages, bread, sugar, veal and many other things must go up in price. Possibly the French worker, who really works, while he is at it, will manage to produce as much in 40 hours as he has done hitherto in 48 or more; even then increased wages will be added to the price of living and even the worker, who must pay, will growl.

How long will America continue pouring thousands of millions of dollars into gambling, lottery sweepstakes and other foreign enterprises?

It is interesting to read that in the banks of Dublin there are 25 millions of dollars undistributed from the so-called "Hospitals Sweepstakes." Hospitals did not get it—yet.

It might also enlighten this government to know that under the law no mention can be made of the sweepstakes gambling in England. The English are too wise to let their money be drained off in any kind of gambling enterprise, if it is not ENGLISH.

You cannot even send a telegram about sweepstakes over the English telegraph wires, to be published in countries outside of England. All telegraphing about the sweepstakes gambling game must go around England, her government-owned wire system will not handle it.

Under its Constitution, the United States cannot forbid newspapers to print lottery news that breeds more gambling and heavier losses. But the government might forbid transmission of such information through the postoffice. That would cut down the "graft."

School teachers, business heads, chambers of commerce, even clergymen, might find a good text in Mr. Son, the young Japanese with the determined face who won the long marathon race at the recent Olympic games in Berlin.

Not only could that marvelous Japanese runner go, and keep going, but there seemed no end to his endurance.

Everybody can run, more or less, but that by itself never wins a marathon.

The race for success in life is a marathon race, and real success depends more than anything else on your ability to KEEP GOING.

Gunlock Ranch

W.N.U. SERVICE

SYNOPSIS

Sleepy Cat, desert town of the Southwest, is celebrating the Fourth of July. Jane Van Tambel, beautiful daughter of Gus Van Tambel, hated owner of Gunlock ranch, has arrived from the East for the first time. She watches the Frontier Day celebration in company with Dr. Carpy, crusty, tender-hearted friend of the community. Henry Sawdy of the Circle Dot ranch, tricked in a fake horse race the day before by Dave McCrossen, foreman at Gunlock, plans revenge. He enters Bill Denison, a handsome young Texas wrangler, in the rodeo which McCrossen is favored to win, and lays heavy bets on him. Unknown to the crowd, Denison is a champion horseman. McCrossen and the young stranger tie in the various events. Denison drops a cigarette carelessly. Racing down the track full tilt, he picks up the cigarette. The verdict goes to Denison when McCrossen refuses to attempt the stunt. Entreated by the crowd, Denison agrees to perform another trick. Jane is asked for her bracelet, and throws it on the track. Just as Denison rides to pick it up a yell from Barney Rebstock, a McCrossen henchman, scares the pony, nearly costing the rider his life. Gun play is prevented by the intervention of Dr. Carpy. Back on Gunlock ranch after two years in Chicago, because of her father's illness, Jane gets lost riding in the hills and meets Denison, now a neighbor, who guides her home. Not knowing her identity, he speaks bitterly of Van Tambel. She tells McCrossen who brought her home and he denounces Denison as a cattle thief. Later she asks Dr. Carpy why her father is unpopular and he tells her it is because of Van Tambel's ruthless and unscrupulous character. Later McCrossen tries to woo Jane, but is sharply rebuffed. Once again she loses her way in the hills and meets Denison. On impulse she gives him her bracelet for guiding her home.

"Well, it happened I was just thinking about the other times we met, and wondering whether I'd ever see you again, when you dropped down out of the sky on me just now. It took my breath. On your way to town? So am I. Do you mind if I ride along with you?"

"I might mind if you didn't. In fact, if you don't mind a confession, I hurried a little to catch up. You were so kind before—"

"Nothing at all—"

"—and you gave me such good advice that I haven't been lost since. But I do feel safer, riding with company. So thank you again—if you're not terribly tired of being thanked."

"Just as much as you like, if you'll remember you're thanking me for nothing. I was afraid you'd gone back to Chicago."

"Where have you been all this time? I certainly couldn't have missed you, if you ride this trail as often as I do."

"I've been away—down at Medicine Bend. How long is it since that day?"

"Oh, I haven't an idea. It was an awfully hot day, as I remember. Wasn't it?"

"I can't remember a thing about the weather. If I measured the time by my feelings, it would be about three years."

"How perfectly ridiculous!" pouted Jane.

"What I was afraid of was, you'd gone back to Chicago and I'd never see you again. Then I figured that if you went back to Chicago, I'd look there next winter for a circus job and try to get into the same show with you."

She looked at him, frankly amused. "Now wasn't that nice of you? Really, Mr. Denison, you make me perfectly ashamed of myself. Will you get mad now if I confess again? No, you mustn't. I just won't have it. But—I was kidding about being a circus rider."

He repressed a smile. She saw it. "What amused you?" she asked.

"Nothing at all."

"Oh, yes it was. What?"

"You won't get mad?"

"Oh," she responded airily, "I never get mad."

"Well, I knew you were kidding because that time you rode up to Spring Ranch, I happened to see you come down the valley. It was after I'd heard these stories about circus riding. I said to myself, 'If that young lady ever rode in a circus, they'd have to tie her on.'"

Jane didn't like it—no girl could. But it gave her precisely the opening she wanted. "Now," she said with an attempted laugh, "it's my turn, and I hope you won't get mad."

"Try me—nothing'd make me mad."

Then, "You mustn't hate me because I am not some one you might have thought I was. I am Jane Van Tambel. My name is Jane—not Marie. I know you and Father haven't got along . . ."

CHAPTER V

TWO days passed. Jane ordered up her pony. "What's takin' you into town today?" asked McCrossen suspiciously.

Bull came up with the pony. Jane tossed the question: "I forgot some errands the other day. I shan't be gone long."

"Who's goin' with you?"

"No one. The boys are busy. I shall not need the wagon today."

She had ridden some two miles toward town, when a turn in the trail brought in sight a man riding out of the woods. He checked his horse and waited for Jane. His face was expectant.

Jane's cheeks flushed in spite of herself. "I hope I havent kept you waiting long," she stammered. He smiled and shook his head as if perfectly satisfied. "I came early," he confessed. "But I'd have hung around all night for this and not thought it long. Are we going up in the hills?"

"Not today. We—at least I—am going into town." Jane had private feelings of reserve about riding into the hills with Bill Denison. "In the hills we might get lost," she suggested, naively.

"I might; but not in the way you mean. I'm lost right now. I've been lost for two days. Something came into my life two days ago that I hope will keep me dreaming the rest of my life."

"Don't talk nonsense."

"You don't dare ask what I was dreaming about?"

"Was it about another dreamer?"

"It was."

"I know who, then." He looked at her with pathetic hope. "It was about McCrossen," she added heartlessly.

"Never! It was—"

"Let's gallop," she exclaimed, cutting him squarely off. "I feel just like riding fast. I can beat you to that big pine!"

When she pulled up after a brisk run, her face was flushed, her eyes dancing, her lips parted in laughter. Denison was just behind her. "Why, you didn't race at all," she complained, looking around at him. "Why didn't you try to pass me instead of sticking at my heels all the time?"

"If I passed you, how in the world could I see you? I wish it was fifty miles more to Sleepy Cat—don't you?"

"No."

"Well, don't you wish it was just a few miles farther?"

"No."

"Not even two miles?"

"What a persistent tease! Well—two, then. And no more."

"We could make it two by riding a little farther into the hills."

"You might ride up that way by yourself."

"I'm just a groom. I have to follow my mistress."

"Oh, no! We mustn't ride into town together. You gallop ahead."

Jane lunched that day at Dr. Carpy's hotel, hoping she might see Carpy himself. Fortune favored her. The doctor was in the office when she came.

"By the way, Doctor," she said, "I rode into town, part of the way, this morning with a neighbor of ours who doesn't bear a very favorable reputation at Gunlock, but—"

"What's his name?"

"Bill Denison."

Carpy laughed his dry little laugh. "Well!" he exclaimed benevolently. "You did pick a real outsider, didn't you? What did you think of the brute?"

In her confusion, Jane hesitated. "Why—I thought him not bad at all," she declared with spirit. "What do you think of him?"

"Why, to speak just offhand, Jane, I'd say Bill Denison had his enemies; but I think he's about as square and open-and-above-board a young fellow as lives in the hills. I don't suppose any of your father's following would agree with me."

"He struck me, too, Doctor, as just such a man," interposed Jane impulsively.

"What do you know about things like that?" asked Carpy jocularly. "You're just a kid! He might be a horse thief for all you could tell, girl."

Jane drew herself up. "Don't be so sure about every girl's being a fool—some of them might fool you! He told me he used to work at Gunlock. What was the quarrel between him and Father?"

Dr. Carpy laid his cigar on the edge of the table and braced himself. "It's a kind of long story," he began, not knowing exactly how to tackle a delicate subject.

"I've lots of time," remarked Jane disconcertingly.

"To begin with, your father was always a grabber, Jane. Probably couldn't help it—just built that way. I suppose that hurts your feelings?"

The girl winced a little. "Whether it does or does not, Doctor, I want to hear both sides."

Her appeal was not unheeded.

"You're a kind of surprise, Jane," continued the doctor slowly, "for in spite of the fact that the family name is not very popular in this country, everybody is talking about you.

"Just to show you, Jane, how feeling has been: we've got an ex-sheriff out here, one of the best and biggest-hearted men in the mountains. He's a character. He happened in to the hotel the other day, and we got to talking about you—now don't blush or get confused, girl—you're entitled to a good send-off, and I gave you a good one.

"Old Bill Pardaloe set where you're setting, with his feet on the table, chewing tobacco, listening to every word and never, all the time, saying one word himself. When I got through, I told him about you, and that you had an aunt in Chicago who'd been out here—a regular sport and no fancy airs because she had a rich brother.

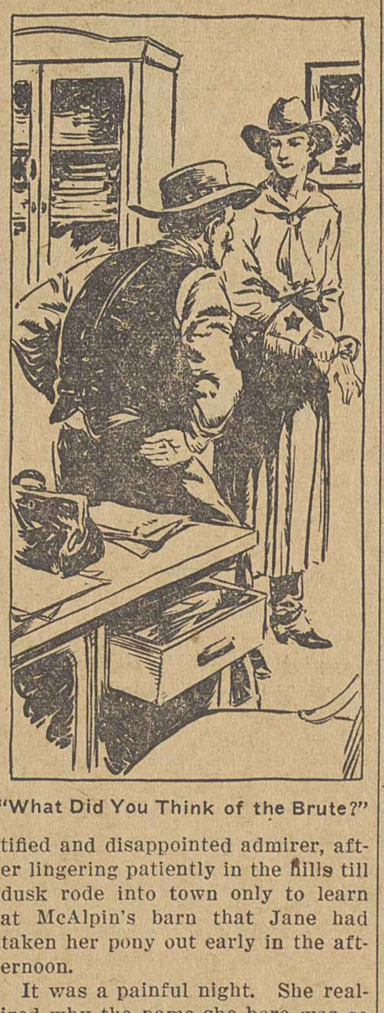
"Pardaloe—now I'm telling you this, Jane, only to show you how some of us felt—Paraloe shifted his quid and says, 'Doc, it's kind of hard for me to believe there's one decent Van Tambel in the world; I'm damned if I'll ever believe there's two.'"

"Oh, Doctor!"

"Bill Denison worked awhile for your father; he was foreman at Gunlock. Your father thought Denison was just about right. He could do everything—and do it well. He made so much money for your father that he gave him a share in the cattle, a tenth, I believe it was. When he quit, Denison asked for a settlement on his share. Your father told him he didn't have no share. They went to law about it. Denison got beat—he didn't have anything but a verbal contract. So Bill went back to live on his own ranch next to the Reservation. It's small but has plenty of good water from a big spring that makes it valuable. Then he began running off enough Gunlock cattle in small bunches—cattle he claimed belonged to him, anyway—to pay what your father owed him.

"So Bill was cussed by your father as a rustler. It made cattlemen laugh, thinking of your father's own reputation in that respect. And the old man brought a lawsuit against Bill to oust him from the little ranch, account bad title. That suit is still pending in the land office at Washington. Now, that's just about the story, Jane."

The shock of the doctor's story so humiliated Jane that she wanted only to get back home and hide what she felt to be the shame of her father from everybody. She had promised to ride back the hill trail with Denison; she felt she just couldn't do it. She took a short cut home across the desert. Her mystified and disappointed admirer, after lingering patiently in the hills till dusk rode into town only to learn at McAlpin's barn that Jane had taken her pony out early in the afternoon.



"What Did You Think of the Brute?"

It was a painful night. She realized why the name she bore was so unpopular in Sleepy Cat.

Her depression bore her down; even Quong saw that something was wrong. He cooked special dishes to tempt Jane's appetite, but her appetite could not be tempted.

"Why don't you get out and ride any more?" asked Bull Page one day. "You haven't been on a horse for two weeks—just sit moping around the house, eating nothing, talking nothing."

"Bull. Just let me alone. I'll be all right."

For another two weeks Bull was worried. Then suddenly Jane relented.

She would take a horseback ride if Bull would ride with her—not otherwise.

They started together. It was afternoon. The air was thick with a soft haze that tempered the sun's rays. The trail led in and out of the thin pine woods.

She began to think her nervous apprehension of meeting Denison again had been a wasted worry. Indeed, she and her guide were homeward bound within a mile of the ranch house when both heard the clatter of hoofs behind them. Jane would not have looked around for a million dollars. Bull told her there were two men coming up.

"Who are they?"

"Looks like Carpy and Bill Denison."

Jane's heart raced. However, this seemed not so bad. Three men and one woman were better than one man and one woman. Carpy and Denison approached together.

"Where are you riding to today, doctor?" asked Jane.

"Gunlock ranch."

Jane showed surprise. "Who's sick at the ranch?"

"One of the boys," said Carpy.

"That's the first I've heard of it," exclaimed Jane. "Who is it?"

"One of the boys that got cut up last night downtown. I sewed him up and want to see how he is. Nothing serious, I guess," said Carpy.

"Any news in town, doctor?" asked Jane, though not in the least interested in Sleepy Cat news.

"Nothing but the brush fires up North. This whole country's dry as as tinder. I hope the winds will keep 'em up North. What do you hear from your father?" asked the doctor in return.

"Oh, he's better," said Jane. "He talks about coming home pretty soon."

"Well, that's news," commented Dr. Carpy, noncommittally. "He's got a wonderful constitution, that man," thinking to himself that it was much too good. "How have you been yourself, girl?"

"Oh, I'm just fine, doctor."

"Rarin' to go, eh? Come on, girl, I'll race you through this pine belt."

Jane saw her chance to escape an uncomfortable situation, for Denison hadn't said a word. She dashed gayly ahead and outran Carpy. But Denison followed her, overtaking her and riding alongside.

The spurt couldn't last forever, though Jane prolonged it to the best of her ability. She wondered whether she had jumped from the frying pan into the fire; she was alone now with Denison.

When she slackened her pace, out of breath, her cheeks were aglow.

"I wouldn't push that pony of yours too hard," suggested Denison incidentally. "He's a nervous critter."

"Oh, he's all right," said Jane lightly, "but it does shake one up, doesn't it?" she exclaimed, panting a little.

"It does," agreed Denison. "But I got my real shakeup when I spied you on the trail. I've been staking myself out alone on this trail every day for a month or so, hoping to get sight of you."

"I haven't felt much like riding lately."

"I was afraid you were sick. I watched for the doctor coming out, but I didn't see him. I used to ride up Gunlock Knob every day or two to see if I could see anything of you."

"I wish you wouldn't do such things. Where is Gunlock Knob?"

"It's that peak over by the spring. it's really on your father's ranch, I guess, but I'm always careful not to run into any of your men."

"I'm sorry, but you musn't look for me any more—please don't." She glanced at him firmly as she spoke. To Denison she had never looked so lovely.

"Why?" he demanded. "Have I—"

"You haven't, but I have—I guess that's the way to put it. I mustn't see you any more. I don't expect to remain in this country very long, anyway."

"What have I done, Jane?"

"Nothing, nothing."

"Somebody's been telling lies about me," he declared with some bitterness.

"No."

"If you'd tell me what they are, I could answer them."

"I said, no! No one has talked about you." His sudden intensity frightened Jane. She burst into tears.

"Now I've made matters worse!" he exclaimed penitently. "I guess my bark's worse'n my bite. But it makes me wild to think I've been lied about to you."

"You haven't," sputtered poor Jane. "Don't you believe me when I say nobody's been talking about you?"

"Please excuse me, then. I do believe you. But if you'd give me a chance to, I'd be willing to tell you every mean thing I've done in my life—and leave it all to you. Don't condemn me without a hearing—that's all I ask."

"Nobody is condemning you. I'm only, if anything, condemning myself."

"For what?" he demanded.

Plane Altered to Carry Invalid

An interesting case of the use of an airplane as an ambulance occurred in Pennsylvania when a man to whose spine a part of his shinbone had been grafted was flown from a hospital in Philadelphia to his home in Bloomsburg. Due to the fact that his wound would require several months to heal, a special carriage had to be constructed in the interior of the plane so that his trip might be made in a prone position. Physicians interested in the case explained that the operation which had been performed was most unusual as it was only the fifth of its kind to be performed in this country.—Scientific American.

Good Pasture Is Needed for Stock

Permanent Feeding Places Prevent Topsoil Losses, Check Gullies.

Cattle get plenty of exercise but produce little meat and milk from worn out pastures. Properly managed pastures control erosion on sloping fields and produce the cheapest of all live stock feeds. Overgrazed pastures are soon reduced to a playground for hungry cows and mules.

Good permanent pastures prevent losses of top soil and the formation of gullies. Together with trees they represent the only natural and income-producing means for protecting slopes too steep for the production of clean-cultivated crops.

If you want to keep your pasture from becoming a live stock gymnasium and protect the soil from washing away, application of these timely pasture hints is suggested:

1. Do not graze heavily in dry seasons.
2. Mow the weeds and shrubs that rob moisture.
3. Let new seedings make a good top growth before grazing.
4. Plant temporary pastures of Sudan grass, soy beans, cowpeas, etc., to tide the livestock over the entire season.

Pastures Do Better When Allowed Breathing Spell

A breathing spell for pastures pays good dividends in more forage and better gains in weight of cattle, according to tests by the Bureau of Animal Industry at the Ardmore field station, Ardmore, S. D.

Two-year-old steers grazed continuously on native range stocked at the rate of one steer to ten acres from May 15 to September 14 (122 days), gained 83 pounds per steer as compared with 157 pounds gained by similar steers on alternate grazing but at the same rate of stocking.

It was estimated that from 10 to 15 per cent more grass remained at the end of the experiment when the area was grazed alternately than when it was grazed continuously.

Steers receiving a barley supplement of 9.57 pounds per head daily on alternately grazed range gained 297 pounds per head. An additional group fed a barley supplement of 9.8 pounds per head daily for the last 66 days on grass gained 227 pounds per head.

Water Required by Horse

Water requirements of the horse are largely dependent on the amount and kind of work performed and the feed used. Carbonaceous feeds oxidize more completely than nitrogenous feeds. A horse fed timothy hay and oats, with comparable weight and work, will drink less water than one fed alfalfa and grain of a higher protein content. At medium work, a 1,400-pound horse will average drinking 12 to 14 gallons of water daily.—Rural New Yorker.

Feeding Young Pigs

The amount of feed required to add 100 pounds to a 75-pound pig depends upon how long the feeding period is to last. A total of 340 pounds of feed will add the required amount in a period of ten weeks. The feeds include 30 pounds of fish meal or tankage, 120 pounds of corn meal, 20 pounds of wheat shorts, and 170 pounds of shelled corn. The first three items are fed as a slop mixture with the corn being fed separately.

The Percheron

Percherons originated in the district of LaPerche in France, the region between Normandy and the River Maine, says a writer in Hoard's Dairyman. Their development in France has been under the guidance of the government. There are more registered Percheron horses in the United States than all other draft breeds combined. Color: Preferably gray or black. Stallions should weigh a ton or even more and should show a quick and active gait.

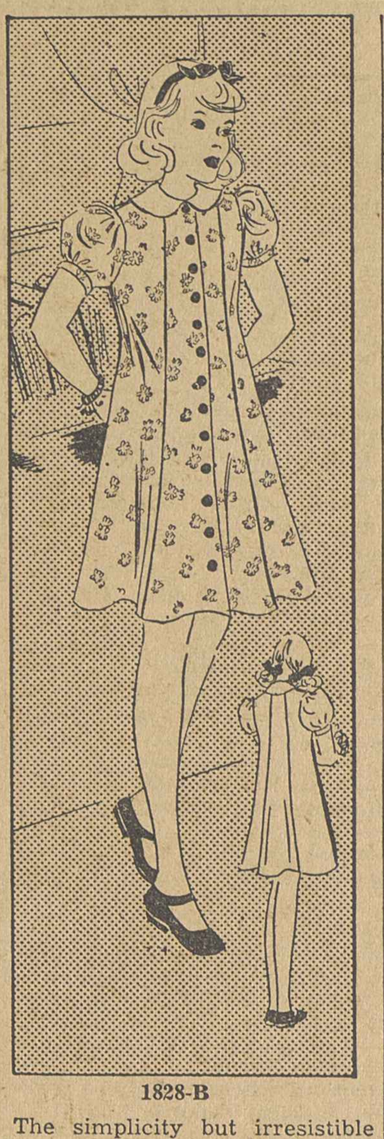
Agriculture in Philippines

Although the Philippines are chiefly agricultural, only about 16,300 square miles of their 114,400 square miles of area are cultivated. One of the several reasons is the abundance of coarse grasses that spring up if fields are neglected. In many cases it is easier to clear a patch in the jungle than to reclaim a field captured by grasses. It is not surprising that many of the islands' exports to this and other countries are fibers, and fiber products.

Cultivating Alfalfa Stands

Cultivating alfalfa stands after cutting off a crop was once rather widely practiced. Several experiment stations have had beneficial results from disking or using the spring tooth harrow, while others have shown a decrease. There was a benefit when blue grass was held down by cultivation. In the past the widespread appearance of alfalfa wilt has discouraged cultivation because it is believed that the practice tends to spread disease.

For the Little Princess



1828-B

The simplicity but irresistible charm of princess frocks accounts for their undiminished popularity and appeal for those who sew, and this one will make an instant hit with the mothers of growing daughters as well as with the daughters themselves. Slightly fitted at the waist to accent the mild flare of the skirt, this pretty and petite princess model goes together like a charm, the result of a minimum of effort and expense. Puff sleeves, a contrasting Peter Pan collar, and a row of small bright buttons down the front complete the picture.

Daughter will love to choose her own fabric — a printed muslin, percale, challis or sheer wool—and with a tiny bit of coaching she can make the frock herself!

Riches

THE riches you carry with you constitute your wealth. That which you can take out of a bank, that to which you can have a title-deed, is naught compared with your personal wealth. The grandeur and the nobility of your character, the sweetness and the helpfulness of your life, these are the things that are worth while, that give enduring satisfaction to yourself and those about you.

Happy the man who can endure with equanimity the highest and the lowest fortune.—Seneca.

The Montevallo Times

PUBLISHED ON THURSDAY

W. M. WYATT, Publisher

Subscription - - - - - $1.00

Published weekly in the Masonic Building on Main Street. "Entered as second-class matter, April 1, 1933, at the Post Office at Montevallo, Ala., under the Act of Congress, March 3, 1879."

FORMER CITIZEN OF MONTEVALLO SUGGESTS

A former citizen of Montevallo, now living in another town in Alabama, sends a renewal subscription to The Times, and offers the following interesting comment and suggestion:

"Montevallo is getting so progressive now I don't see why the clubs don't unite and build a community house. It would be grand to have one for the people who come to town to rest in with their babies.

"I once suggested one in memory of the boys of Shelby County who died in the war, but no one seemed to be interested enough to push it forward."

SIMPSON'S SUGGESTION FOR BETTER TELEGRAM SERVICE

The Times hopes that the suggestion recently made by Mr. J. R. Simpson for improvement of telegraph service in Montevallo will be taken up in an organized community effort to accomplish the end suggested.

We believe Montevallo deserves to have a telegraph office more easily accessible than which now exists at the railroad station. An office in the business district of the town is what we need and what the telegraph comany should provide.

Montevallo is making progress. The town is growing. We have better highway connections with the outside world than we have had heretofore. We have electric light and power service compatible with our other steps of progress. We have telephone service adequate for our needs.

The telegraph company should keep step with Montevallo's progress by placing and maintaining an office in the heart of town.

We believe they will do it if we will follow Mr. Simson's suggestion and place our appeal before them in the right manner. Most surely they will permit us to jog along with the present unhandy arrangement, unless and until we convince them we deserve and want something better.

Sports Spotlight

By Donald Vaughan

Action Expected

Football practice will probably start Setember 8th. Already many boys are getting into shape so as to be able to "take it" when Coach Leon Hicks arrives.

Coach Hicks is expected to reach Montevallo during the week end. With his coming, definite action is expected to be taken, and from what we hear when Coaches Hicks and Collins get together action is action and more too.

Cahoon In Shape

Discouraging news developed today. George Cahoon, regular tackle, may not be able to play this season, on account of an old back injury. But Cahoon stated that he is hoping and expects to play. "I weigh 170 pounds and am getting in some fine running practice," says Cahoon. We certainly hope that back gets well.

Punter Needed

M. H. S. will need a punter this year to replace Loyd Green who was one of the best punters ever seen in Montevallo. Capt. Lee and Frost seem to be the best prospects for that post in the coming gridiron encounters. Both boys are coming along in fine shape, adding yardage to their punts each day. Rarely a day passes when these two boys and one are two others are not seen on the field.

Possible Change

It is rumored that David Leslie will go to end next year, thereby leaving a post at guard open. The best candidate for that position seems to be Aston Johnson, though you can't tell.

Coming Games

Montevallo will have, as it looks now, a good team and they have some very tough opponents; so the coming games should be good. But the team can't do its best without support. So make plans to come to the games, ladies and all.

State Capitol News

Montgomery, Ala.—As Alabama's 600,000 public school children prepare to return to their class rooms this month for a school term that is sure to collapse unless sufficient revenue is provided to assure them a full term, educational leaders throughout the State are working feverishly to solidify public sentiment in their demand for more funds.

Meanwhile Governor Graves has revealed nothing of his plans regarding another special session of the Legislature. Because the lawmakers muffed their chance to solve the school problem during the abortive 1936 extra session, the Little Colonel is unwilling to recall them without definite assurance that they will do something.

Petty partisian differences and the blandishments and threats of lobbyists of vested interests are responsible for this Fifth Annual School Crisis, in the opinion of competent observers.

However, several factors have served to strengthen the Governor's pledge of full school terms and adequate public health and welfare protection. As this paper pionted out a month ago, the infantile paralysis epidemic and the drougth have had the effect of focusing attention upon the vital and indispensable work of the Health and Welfare Departments, both of which are woefully hampered by lack of funds.

Then too, the incontrovertible facts regarding the State's needs have silenced the so-called "economy" group, who now realize the futility of their selfish obstructionism.

Their silence was broken by one of their group last week when Senator Hayse Tucker, of Tuscaloosa, suggested that gasoline tax receipts be diverted to the schools. Not even his own political allies took the suggestion seriously.

A state-wide campaign to bring out a record confidence vote for the reelection of President Roosevelt in November has been launched by the Alabama League of Young Democrts under the direction of John P. Kohn, Jr., league president.

An advisory committee, representing every Congressional district in the State was named by Kohn last Friday. The committee is expected to meet during the first week of October to perfect plans for a State rally.

High school students in Alabama will receive approximately $150,000 out of the student aid fund of the National Youth Administration during the 1936-37 school term, according to announcement by J. E. Bryan, state director.

Students between 16 and 25 years of age who are unable to continue their studies because of financial difficulties will receive allowances of $3 to $6 a month.

A bill to enable Alabama to obtain approximately $60,000 a year from the Federal government under the Social Security Act for the State's 700 indigent blind will be introduced if a special session of the Legislature is called, according to announcement by A. H. Collins, commissioner of the State Department of Public Welfare.

The measure will simply broaden the scope of Alabama's social security laws enacted during the 1935 regular session and will cost the State nothing, he explained. A similar bill was introduced during the 1936 special session and though it encountered no opposition, it died on the House calendar when the Legislature adjourned sine die.

Pledged to support William Lemke for President and Thomas O'Brien for Vice President of the United States, sixteen Union Party candidates have been certified to Secretary of State Howell Turner, and their names will appear on the ballot for the general election in November.

W. O. Bonham, of Birmingham, chairman and secretary of the Union Party in Alabama listed the following party nominees for U. S. Senator, Congressman from the 9th District and for Presidential electors.

For. U. S. Senator, William C. Irby, Jacksonville. Congressman, W. S. Glazenor, of Birmingham. For Presidential electors, A. W. Holstun, W. O. Bonham, Randolph Kern, Arthur S. Gray, A. B. Fewell, W. O. Broyles, L. D. Holstun and Dr. A. B. Powell, all of Birmingham; L. K. Smith, Bankston; C. C. Rolfe, Hartselle; George Jordan, Tuscaloosa and Mrs. R. E. Hill, Bessemer. Alternate, J. Jordan, of Boaz.

Three new WPA construction projects for Alabama totalling $16,826 have been approved by the Comptroller General and will be started soon, according to Ray Crowe, State WPA administrator. The projects:

Washington county — School building for Millry, $11,298.

Birmingham—Repair of Tuggle Institute buildings to be converted into public schools, $4,076.

Clarke county—Construction and repair of schools, $1,452.

The State Highway Department has advertised for bids to be opened Sept. 17 on a grading, draining and paving project of one and threequarter miles on the Fayette-Townley road in Fayette county, and the construction of a steel and concrete bridge on the same road over the Sipsey river.

A contract was awarded last week to the Hardaway Contracting company of Columbus, Ga., for grading, draining and paving 3.956 miles of the road between Eutaw and Tuscaloosa in Greene county at a cost of $117,475.29. This project will complete a continuous paved road between Eutaw and Birmingham, via Tuscaloosa.

Though most of the activities were declared unconstitutional last Spring by the U. S. Supreme Court, Alabama farmers had received a total of $31,420,987.87 up to June 30th.

"King Cotton" received the lion's share—$30,167,468.46; tobacco, $6,946.92; corn and hogs, $726,273.10; sugar, $33,091.31; and $487,190.02 for peanuts.

U. C. Jenkins, of Faunsdale, was elected president of the newly organized Alabama Livestock Growers Association here last Friday. Allen E. Grubbs, Jr., Livingston, was chosen as vice-president and K. G. Baker, Marion Junction, secretary-treasurer.

The association which is designed to encourage and promote livestock production in Alabama is composed of approximately 150 charter members. R. J. Goode, commissioner of the State Department of Agriculture and Industries explained that its aims are to cooperate with the State and Federal agencies in disease control; to obtain favorable freight rates on livestock, and to support State and Federal legislation in the interest of the industry.

Gasoline tax collections for the month of August on sales made in July indicate comlete recovery from the depression in Alabama, especially the gasoline industry.

Collections for the month amounted to $1,067,046.86, an increase of $142,766.72 over the same month last year and $270,746.06 over the same month in 1934. All of this money, less cost of collection and administering the gasoline tax laws must be used for highway purposes.

August collections represent sales in July, 1936, of 17,784,114 gallons, an increase of 150,376 gallons over the previous peak month of August, 1929.

Expressed in percentages, the increased collections in August this year over last year is a little more than 15 per cent and over 1934 it is slightly more than 34 per cent.

Each county's share of the road fund to be distributed on or before Sept. 10 will be approximately $7,800.

BANKERS WILL MEET IN ANNUAL COUNCIL

Business Men Also Invited to Present Their Views on Services of Banks to the Public

WASHINGTON, D C.—Robert V. Fleming, President American Bankers Association, has announced that the organization's annual convention will be held at San Francisco September 21-24 and its program will call in not only bankers but speakers from various lines of business to present their viewpoints and advice.

The plans for the convention discussions take into consideration the fact, he said, that one of the major problems of banking today is to develop its operations along lines that will create greater public understanding of its methods and services.

"It is my earnest conviction that such public understanding of banking is not only an essential defense against attacks from whatever source but is also requisite to re-establishing it upon a firm and satisfactory basis of profitable operations." Mr Fleming said.

General Improvement Cited

"The improvement in general conditions which is now taking place should be a material aid to bankers in carrying forward a constructive program for increasingly useful relationships between banking and business, as well as one of more helpful personal business services to all our people. Sound banking conducted in ways the public need and understand must be the aim of successful bank management.

"How can the banker make his operations and policies more understandable to the people of his community? How can better and broader financial services be soundly provided? How can banking improve its operating methods and income? These and many similar questions demand the earnest attention of all bankers. They call for a fresh counselling together and a new interchange of experience and advice among the members of our profession.

"With these thoughts in mind, we have built the convention program with the view of also calling into our councils speakers from various lines of business to give us their viewpoints and advice. I can say without reservation that this is to my mind one of the most crucial years in the evolution of American banking, and that we are passing through a period demanding, as never before, cooperation and mutual exchange of viewpoint among our members and others."

Radio Commencement Exercises

More than 200 widely separated chapters of the American Institute of Banking, the educational section of the American Bankers Association, hold annually in September a simultaneous commencement exercise at which they listen to the speaker of the evening by radio. This is said to be the most extensive graduation ceremony held by any educational institution. The aggregate membership of the chapters, which are located in cities and towns throughout the United States, totals about 35,000 bank employees and officers. The graduates number each year more than 2,500, and total graduates are now over 25,000.

The Business Outlook

NEW YORK.—The natural forces of recovery have demonstrated their strength and have a momentum which may reasonably be expected to carry the country into new high ground, says "Banking," the publication of the American Bankers Association, in its August issue. The momentary stimulation following the distribution of bonus funds to the veterans has practically died away and is no longer an important business factor. A certain degree of uncertainty arising from the national political campaign is unavoidable, the magazine says.

United States Has More Telephones Than All Other Countries Combined

THE WORLD'S TELEPHONES On Jan. 1, 1935
North America	18,275,570
South America	685,524
Europe	12,028,758
Asia	1,504,391
Africa	289,834
Oceania	755,813
Total	33,539,890

Both in actual numbers and on the basis of telephones to population, the United States leads the world in telephone development.

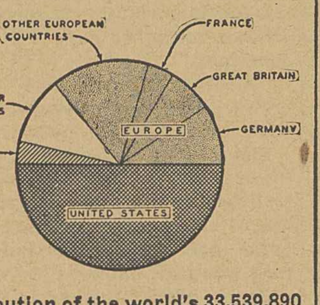
On January 1, 1935, the latest date for which comparable figures with other countries are available, the United States had 50.29% of the world's telephones, and the entire continent of North America had 54.49%. Europe had 35.86% of the telephones of the world, Asia 4.49%, South America 2.04%, Africa .87%, and Oceania, which comprises Australia, New Zealand, Dutch East Indies, Philippine Islands, etc., had 2.25%.

The total number of telephones in service in the world on January 1, 1935, was 33,539,890. Of these, 16,868,955 were in the United States, more than in all the other countries of the world combined. Next to the United States in actual number of telephones came Germany with 3,134,103, followed by Great Britain and Northern Ireland with 2,366,311, France with 1,399,869, Canada with 1,193,729, and Japan with 1,068,244. These are the only countries each with a total of more than a million telephones.

Soviet Russia, including Siberia and associated republics, was the country with the largest number of telephones below the million mark, with a total of 739,381. Next came Sweden with 616,947, and Italy with 516,075. The only other country above the 500,000 mark was Australia with 501,402.

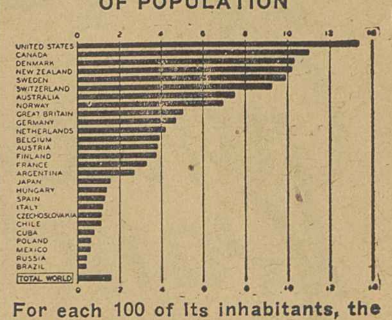
The country in South America with the largest number of telephones is Argentina, with Brazil in second place, followed by Chile, Colombia, Uruguay and Peru in the order named.

On a basis of telephones to population, the six leaders are different from those figured on the total number of telephones. The United States still leads by a wide margin, however, the number of telephones for each 100 of its population being 13.36, in contrast to 1.58 for the entire world. Canada jumps into second position with 11, followed closely by Denmark with 10.31, New Zealand with 10.20, Sweden with 9.90, and Switzerland with 9.25. Great Britain, Germany, France, and Japan, high in total number of telephones, have respectively 5.06, 4.69, 3.30, and 1.56 telephones for each 100 of their populations, while Soviet Russia, which was seventh in actual number of telephones, has a telephone development of 0.43 telephones for each 100 of its population.



Distribution of the world's 33,539,890 telephones on January 1, 1935

TELEPHONES PER EACH 100 OF POPULATION



For each 100 of its inhabitants, the United States had an average of 13.36 telephones on January 1, 1935.

Will They Pass "WITH HONORS" (or just get by?)

Beginning of School Term is the Time to Think of How Your Child Will Progress

Many a child with the makings of an honor student just "gets by". He starts the school term out with a spurt -- then his grades begin to fall, and by the end of the semester he's "just passing".

There may be several reasons for this, but eyestrain is one proven reason. Doing lessons in poorly lighted classrooms and then having homework to do at home in insufficient light can dull the interest of the most enthusiastic boy or girl.

Foreign Trade

The Commerce and Marine Commission of the American Bankers Association has made a report which shows that the foreign trade of the world for the year 1935 on the basis of its estimated physical volume was 78.9 per cent of the 1929 level. This was 2.1 per cent above the volume of 1934 and is the highest since 1929. The gold values of world trade were much lower due to the lower commodity prices in January, 1936. The combined index of 75 countries showed 35.7 per cent of the 1929 average.

National Bank Growth

Comptroller of the Currency O'Connor announced recently that total deposits of the 5,374 national banks in the United States on June 30, 1936, the date of the last call made for statements of condition, aggregated $26,200,453,000. The figure is a new high record for national banks, exceeding by $1,340,998,000, or 5.39%, the amount reported as of March 4, 1936, the previous high record. The current figures show also that deposits increased $3,682,207,000, or 16.35%, over the amount reported as of June 29, 1935, the date of the corresponding call a year ago.

Mr. G. T. Murphee and Mr. Quinton Culver are vacationing in parts of Florida.

Mrs. Marion Jones spent Monday in Birmingham on business.

Two Operators Given Silver Medals, Cash Awards, for Notable Service

MISS MAMIE INEZ PITTS
Operator, Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Co., Pontotoc, Miss.

MRS. RUBY C. BAHR
Night Operator, Community Telephone Co. of Wisconsin, Fairchild, Wis.

These telephone employees received silver Vail medals and cash awards for noteworthy acts of public service in 1935.

Two telephone operators have recently received silver medals, each with a cash award of $250, from the national committee of award of the Theodore N. Vail Memorial Fund, which provides for the recognition of acts of noteworthy public service on the part of telephone employees.

The recipients of these medals are Miss Mamie Inez Pitts, operator of the Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Company at Pontotoc, Miss., and Mrs. Ruby C. Bahr, night operator of the Community Telephone Company of Wisconsin at Fairchild, Wis.

She Carried On Alone During a Tornado

Shortly after eight o'clock on the night of March 11, 1935, when a severe electrical storm began, Miss Pitts was on duty alone in the telephone exchange located on the second floor of a two-story building. Anticipating interruption to the local electric light service, which later occurred, she secured and lighted the emergency electric lantern, then closed the windows and doors. Hearing the crash of falling trees and houses on the far side of the town, she returned to the switchboard to handle the expected heavy volume of traffic. The tornado, reaching a velocity of sixty miles per hour, struck the building, and tore off the brick coping and a section of the roof. Part of the roof, the ceiling, bricks and other debris crashed to the floor within five feet of where Miss Pitts was seated.

Despite the danger of further collapse of the roof, she remained on duty throughout the night, rendering material assistance to officials and citizens in locating doctors, relatives and relief authorities. To protect the switchboard and the distributing frame from the rain pouring through the damaged roof, she improvised a cover from canvas on her cot and a roll of oil cloth secured from outside, with the result that although the floor was covered with water, the equipment was only slightly damaged. As there was total failure of all long distance lines passing through Pontotoc, she sent a report of the storm damage to the Plant Chief at Tupelo by people driving through, which information materially expedited the completion of repairs to the lines.

She Helped Catch a Murderer

About four o'clock on the morning of August 21, 1935, while on duty, Mrs. Bahr heard the sound of gun fire. Hurrying to the door, she saw an automobile occupied by a man and a woman traveling at high speed in the direction of Black River Falls. Anticipating that the persons in the machine might have been connected with the shooting, she noted the first three digits of the license number and the general characteristics of the car.

Returning to the switchboard, she received a report that a filling station attendant had been shot and killed. She promptly notified the sheriff at Black River Falls, twenty-two miles away, giving complete information and advising that the car was evidently short of gasoline. She next called police authorities at nearby points in all directions and also operators at exchanges along all routes. As a result of her accurate observations and prompt action, the fleeing criminal was quickly located and identified when he drove into a service station at Black River Falls. He attempted to escape, was shot and wounded but finally captured and convicted of murder.

Dr. and Mrs. R. C. Curtis spent Friday in Birmingham.

Mrs. Lucile Daws of Georgiana is spending several days this week with Mrs. W. H. Martin and family.

Find Ivory Apollo in 300 Fragments Down Athens Well

Statue Believed Work of Great Praxiteles

PRINCETON, N. J. — An ivory statuette of Apollo by a very great Athenian sculptor, possibly Praxiteles himself, is an outstanding discovery of this year's archeological digging by Americans at Athens, just announced.

The statuette, which was found in 300 pieces in the depths of a well in Athens, has been successfully put together again, says Dr. T. Leslie Shear, field director of the American School of Classical Studies at Athens, who has just returned to the United States.

When several experts failed at the delicate task of restoring the jig-saw problem piece, Mrs. Shear, wife of the director, tried, and with help from the school staff she completed it in two weeks. The ivory was fitted over a mass of beeswax for foundation.

The statuette was found during excavation of 27 wells located when the expedition scraped the rocky hill on which the famous Theseum, or Temple of Hephaestus, stood. This most perfectly preserved of all Greek temples is near the Agora, or market place, where the expedition has been making important discoveries since 1931.

On the side of this Theseum hill looking toward the Agora, the digging revealed ancient landscape gardening plans. Two rows of holes were found paralleling the temple's columns. The holes once contained flower pots, judging by their shape, and the pots were quite modern in style.

Dr. Shear plans to beautify the ancient Athenian market place when the long task of exploring its buried contents is nearer completion. It will be, he says, made into "a real garden spot."

Giant Star Camera Will Photograph Entire Milky Way

WYNNEWOOD, PA. — A two and one-half ton battery of three-star cameras, the largest using plates two feet wide, has just been placed in operation at the private observatory of Dr. Gustavus Wynne Cook, located here.

Largest camera battery of its kind in the world, Dr. Cook will use it to make a series of photographs of the entire Milky Way. After photographing all the Milky Way area that is within reach from here, he expects to move the equipment to South America or South Africa, so that regions of the sky which never rise in the Philadelphia area can be recorded.

Takes Huge Pictures.

The three cameras take pictures on plates 20 by 24 inches, 14 by 17 inches and 8 by 10 inches. They are equipped with lenses, 6½, 5 and 4 inches in diameter, of a type invented by Dr. Frank E. Ross, of the University of Chicago's Yerkes observatory.

There is a guiding telescope with four-inch lens by means of which the photographer can keep the cameras accurately pointed at a selected part of the sky. He can also correct any errors in the running of the electric motor which turns it once daily from east to west to compensate for the earth's rotation.

Chronic Hoarseness May Be Early Sign of Cancer

NEW YORK. — Persistent hoarseness calls for careful examination by a trained throat specialist, warns Dr. Leo Schwartz in the current issue of Preventive Medicine. He calls hoarseness the "herald symptom" of cancer of the larynx and points out that it is also the symptom of 49 other conditions, none of them trivial.

Cancer of the larynx gives its warning sign earlier and remains localized longer than cancer anywhere else in the body, and early diagnosis and treatment offer a better chance for recovery than in other cancers.

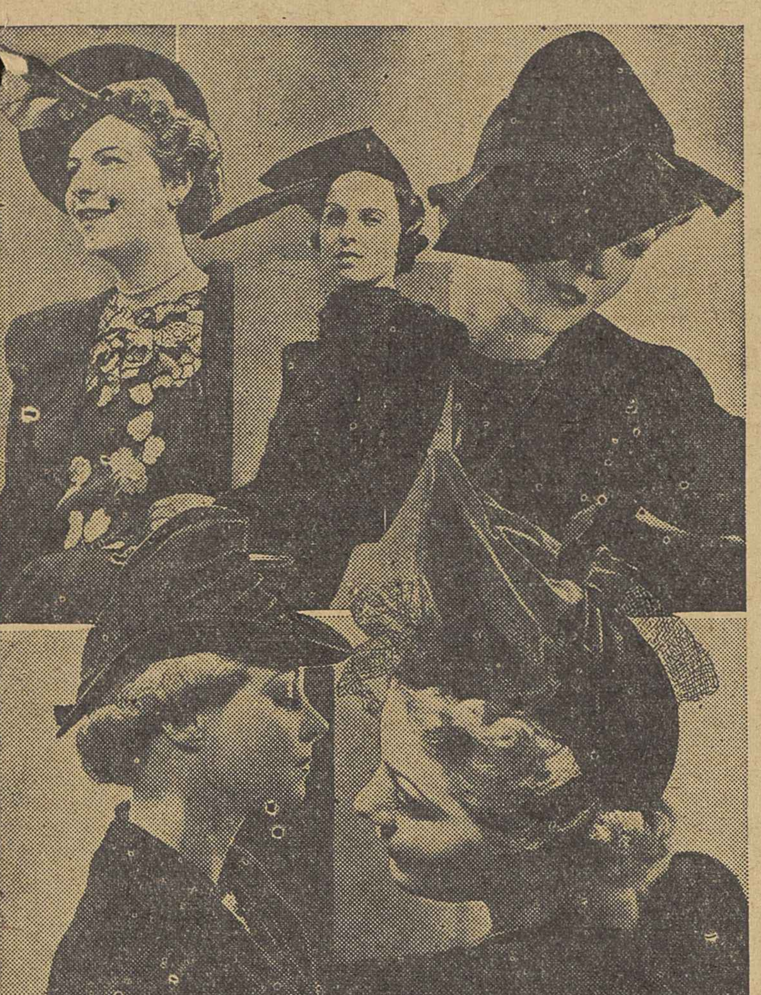
Behold! the New Fall Hats Arrive!

By CHERIE NICHOLAS



THE early fall hats thrill with excitingly new silhouettes that fairly make you gasp with their daring. No style is too dizzy, no media too extreme to have place in the smart millinery picture.

In Paris, women of fashion are wearing tiny skull-cap turbans of black silk velvet that flaunt enormous bows at the side or on the forehead. You will be seeing these bow turbans all over town.

Intricate manipulation is the key to high style throughout all millinery for fall and winter. It is a well-known fact that rich fabric and ingenious manipulation always go hand in hand. Which leads us to say that luxurious silk weaves are adding big interest to hats appearing on the autumn style horizon. When choosing your first autumn chapeau look for models in the new silk satins, the velvets in rich glowing color, silk taffetas and the handsome deep-toned velours and duvetyns such as go to make up ultra chic headgear.

The newer shapes have rolling brims with crowns built up to a peak, for the trend is decidedly toward tall peaked and conical effects. See one such shown to the left below in the illustration. It is of spruce green silk velvet covered with fine vertical stitching. You'll see lots of stitching on best-looking hats this fall. Wear this type hat with your tailored silk or sheer wool daytime frocks or suits.

Heavy silk velvets of the Lyons class are being made up in models with sports type brims. Often these velvets are combined with silk faille as manipulated for the front of the hat to right at top in the group. This type of hat you can wear equally well with tailored silk dresses or with wool dresses of smart "town" character.

It's when you are choosing a hat to go with your best afternoon or cocktail costume that you can let yourself go in the matter of silk millinery. Not only are there the afore-mentioned bow-trimmed skull caps in wide profusion but variations of the popular beret are shown together with unique types such as the model at right below. The back of its tiny crown is of black felt and the front of rust silk velvet draped softly into an ascending point in front — a perfect complement to your afternoon outfit.

This will be a season of color. Millinery will more than ever tie up with colors of the costume. Of course black will be in the spotlight. A large per cent of French wines, rich reds and aubergine purple will be worn. Spruce green is a noted color and olive will be a highlight novelty. All browns will be good in lighter casts. Bordeaux, a wine brown, is also of prime importance.

As to sources of inspiration the Napoleonic influence has been almost universally adopted by leading modistes of Paris. Some sponsor the military style of the soldiers of France of that time. Others glean their inspiration from the conquering armies of North Africa while still others concentrate on the soft, luxurious influence of the gay society of Napoleon's reign.

The beret shown with striking quill as worn by the figure seated (note her velvety duvetyne tunic blouse) bespeaks the military trend. This model, called "Marching On" by its designer, is proving a favorite in high class shops that are showing it. The lady pictured with the voguish be-curled coiffure and the blouse elaborated with applique in leaf design is wearing a becoming portrait beret designed by Marthe. It has new cire ribbon accents.

FALL SUEDE BAG

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

This stunning brown suede handbag has a decidedly "new" look as it visions what style-conscious spectator sports maidens will be carrying to the football game. Bags stitched to match gloves are also a fashion highlight in promise for fall and winter. The handbag pictured has deep inside pockets, staunch handles to swing by and the new jewel slide fastener providing a delicate golden chain across the top. The frock and hat are in soft gray as an effective contrast to brown.

Off-Shades

The fall dress and coat picture will be brightened by so-called off-shades. Particularly is this true of football spectator clothes. Foremost among these are rust, royal and purplish blue, moss green and maple sugar brown.

Contrasting Side Seams

Rochas outlines side seams of suits and evening gowns with bands of contrasting colors.

TREND TOWARD RICH HUES FOR AUTUMN

A new fashion season means a new brainstorm for the experts who must name the featured hues in women's attire. Every name must be suggestive of the hue but it has to be different from its predecessors, otherwise a woman will think it isn't new.

For the coming autumn season, the trend in shades is toward rich colorings and the names chosen show a tendency toward specific description rather than flowery language. Sage green, for example, looks exactly like the herb for which is it named. It has that same soft, grayed tone which is unusually lovely. Maple sugar brown is another new tone which has a pale, subdued cast that is different from the browns usually appearing in the autumn.

Suit Simplicity Subtle and Therefore Expensive

Simple suits are always in demand, but the simplicity of such suits is subtle and therefore always expensive. Chanel has created a beauty which appears for summer in lightweight gray flannel, and for early autumn wear in smooth navy wool. The jacket, with one-button fastening at the waist, is slightly fitted in front and has a straight back. On one of the wide-stitched revers is a slit pocket that holds a hankie. There is a tiny turnback cuff that continues from a set-in seamed panel with three buttons.

Heel Taps

Although many of fashion's high priests claim that flats and low-heeled evening slippers are definitely out, they refuse to take the count, according to the latest style news from Paris.

Baseball's Tribute Brings Hope Game Will Uphold Trust

THERE is little wonder that I could not recognize the feeling. I have not felt that way in years. So I just stood there and watched the strange procession winding around the Polo Grounds.

On they came in barouches, landaus, buggies drawn by lone horses and by pairs. Cops marched ahead arrayed in those queer old helmets and long-belted coats of a gaslit era. There were ladies in dresses so gay that even now it seems sad their fate has been some lonesome corner in a costumer's shop. There was a band that might well have played under waving torches, while Manhattan whooped it up for Tilden and Democracy. There was—wonder of all wonders on this very baseball field where luck has behaved so well of late—a carriage drawn by two white horses.

In the boxes near the dugout sat baseball's veterans, hands gnarled by many a foul tip or hard-sped grounder, clasped tightly in their laps. Some of them still are in their prime as life is reckoned in most businesses. Others were taking a belated grateful glimpse of a parade that long since has passed them by. The faces of all of them—some deep wrinkled, some full fleshed—had that leathery look which never fades from those who have spent many busy hours squinting into a hot sun.

Memories of yellowed newspaper clippings came back as I watched them. There was Jim Mutrie, a shrunken little man with bristling white moustache. Jim, they say, is ninety-two and so he does not see much baseball now. Indeed they also tell that the last time he came over from Staten Island he was so puzzled by unfamiliar scenes that he was lost before leaving the Battery and so never reached the Polo Grounds at all. But it was Jim, whose eyes still flash as in better days, who managed New York's first pennant winner in 1888.

McGraw

There was Arlie Latham, boon companion of John McGraw and still proudly employed by the game he served so well. Arlie came into baseball in 1872 and it was Mutrie who brought him to New York in 1879. It was then that he came to know Smiling Mickey Welch, who, for all that he pitched the town's first Polo Grounds game in 1883, sits sturdily beside him. McGraw would have liked a scene like this. Old time players had an appeal to him that was irresistible. He chummed with them and helped them whenever they needed it.

There also were men of later baseball generations. Otto Knabe once—that was in the days when he played second for the Phillies and when he managed the lamented Baltimore Terrapins—was one of the most hard boiled as well as one of the most capable of players.

George Smith also sits serenely. Columbia George, as few people recall now although it has been a mere thirteen years since he left the game, also was an athlete with whom it was unsafe to take liberties. Now a sedate school teacher—as indeed he was during most of his seasons in the big time—he merely chuckles when reminded of that feud waged for years with Lavan of the Cards.

There they sit. Harry Courtney, probably less than forty even now, but ten years removed from baseball, and a rising young man in Wall Street. Jocko Fields, who starred with both Pirates and Giants. Danny Murphy, great outfielder with the Athletics of the more celebrated $100,000 infield. Moose McCormick, pinch-hitter extraordinary of the Giants.

They sit there watching, tiny smiles, proud and wistful upon tightened lips. On the field they are watching so intently innings are to be played as they were sixty years ago. But this day is something else.

There is a silence while the bugler blows taps.

Now I know this feeling that has not come over me for years. Sports and war are alike in far more things than ethics.

Too long ago I used to watch thin lines of men in gray and blue parade down the streets of a tiny Maryland town on an afternoon late in May. I——

I hope baseball continues to keep its Memorial day trust as well

NOT IN THE BOX SCORE:

When the Hambletonian was trotted at Goshen, N. Y., recently, a ten-year old jinx which has prevented any driver from winning the event twice was licked. The hoodoo wrecker was Rosalind, the favorite driven by Ben F. White, who won with Mary Reynolds in 1933. White drove carefully, but with an air of great serenity. The White family was $19,604 wealthier by catching the winner's share.

Bullet Joe Simpson, the former Americans' manager who distinguished himself in the World war, and Murray Murdock, who set that consecutive play record, have been offered manager-coach jobs with "amateur" hockey teams in England . . . Rental for the St. Nicholas Palace, which will be coupied with the Central Opera House as a boxing enterprise this winter, is $1,075 per week. That could indicate that boxing business is picking up. Judging, though, from the state and federal tax returns of other small clubs recently it also could indicate that Steve Brodie and the daring young man on the flying trapeze were far from being the suckers people suspected . . . Charlie Snow, the blacksmith who specializes in trotters, has shod 50,000 horses during his 35 years on the Grand Circuit.

Although Saratoga is the only New York track with a $1 field, gents who patronize that section of the joint are in a sad turmoil. They sob that the way favorites have been running recently there soon will be dire need for a 15-cent section for two-bit parlay betters . . . Mrs. Ethel V. Mars, who spends 200 grand or so at the Saratoga yearling sales, does not do all that bidding and buying merely on feminine intuition. The lady, who last year purchased Case Ace, Arlington Futurity winner undefeated in three starts this season, has a staff of experts to minutely inspect each bargain . . . Because of the many abuses which cropped up last season the next Pennsylvania legislature will be presented with a bill to abolish amateur boxing and wrestling shows.

Anyhow, it might have happened. Doctor: "So, you say you haven't been feeling well lately and have had to run out on your work and your guests?" Hitler: "Yessir, every time I get out in the sun I keep seeing black spots in front of my eyes."

Travis Jackson May Head Giants' New Rookie Farm

Travis Jackson

If the Giants run a farm at Jersey City next year Travis Jackson will manage it . . . Could it be that the eyeless racqueteer or the posters advertising the national tennis championships symbolizes the U. S. L. T. A.'s blindness to violations of the amateur rules? . . . The racing commission in the state of Washington is making a drive to put all handbook operators in jail . . . What high public official has threatened to resign his racing post if the starting is not improved at the New York tracks? . . . Jock Whitney's heavyweight, Abe Simon, has such big paws that he has to bring his own gloves when he goes to a club to fight . . . Francis Albertani has passed up offers from both of the big bushwacking fight organizations to handle publicity for the National Bowling Congress . . . Caswell Adams, the very able Herald Tribune sports writer, will publicize Columbia's football this fall.

Dutch Carter, the attorney and former Yale athlete who died recently, was a true sportsman. Both his alma mater and the game of baseball, to which he gave such unselfish devotion as a fan, will miss him . . . That 8 to 5 price quoted on Braddock over Schmeling is far out of line . . . Bookies claim Terry Burns was bumped off because he welched on a race bet, not because he was hot with Lucky Luciano.

Probably this has nothing to do with the benefits that come from owning a farm. But the prevailing rate of big-time hockey pay is about $4,000 a season. And the paternal Rangers reward their amateur grads, Alex Shibicky and Mack Colville, with $2,000 apiece . . . In addition to anticipating an undefeated football season, Fordham folks already are trying to persuade the new university president that the ban on Rose Bowl trips should be lifted. . . Although he seldom appears on the street with one of them, Madison Square Garden Jimmy Johnston has a collection of twenty walking sticks.

Stewart Iglehart, ten goal polo player, learned the game on a bicycle . . . Professor Charles E. Merriam, University of Chicago political scientist, dined with Max Schmeling aboard the Hindenburg on its most recent trip to America . . . Ray Daughters, American Olympic swimming coach, has been instructing aquatic stars since sixteen years old . . . Earl Averill's ambition is to quit baseball with enough to buy a cabin cruiser, return to his Snohomish (Wash.) home and spend the rest of his days fishing in Puget Sound . . . Young Corbett, former world's welterweight champion, holds licenses as a referee, second and manager in California.

What Kind of Salad Shall We Have for Lunch, or for Dinner?

That Seems to Be All-Important Question on These Warm Days.

And what kind of a salad? That's the usual question in warm weather both for lunch and for dinner. Whatever you choose, it must, of course, be crisp and well chilled. For dinner, it will probably have French dressing. This mixture of oil and vinegar can, however, be varied by different blends of seasoning.

The most important seasoning is, of course, the oil itself, and next to that is the vinegar. You may have your preference between Italian and French olive oil or you may be American enough to prefer one of the salad oils made from a corn or cottonseed base. A malt, a cider, a wine vinegar or one of these vinegars flavored with tarragon will each give a different character to your dressing. Lemon or lime juice used instead of vinegar will lend an individual note.

Whatever acid you use, be sure that you do not overdo it. Many dressings are too sour. While the standard proportions are supposed to be three tablespoons of oil to one tablespoon of vinegar or lemon juice, four to one often makes a more desirable combination. Besides salt, pepper and sugar, which are always used for seasoning, a little mustard, chile sauce, ketchup, or a dash of one of the sauces of the Worcestershire type are good additions. Some prefer to have the bowl rubbed with garlic or add some sliced onions or onion juice.

Chiffonade Dressing

½ cup French dressing
2 tablespoons minced celery
1 teaspoon minced parsley
1 tablespoon minced onion
1 hard-boiled egg, finely minced
2 tablespoons minced green pepper, or cooked beets

Mix other ingredients and add to French dressing.

Special French Dressing

1 cup salad oil
1 cup sugar
¾ cup malt vinegar
1 teaspoon grated onion
½ cup ketchup
1½ teaspoons salt
1 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce

Mix ingredients and beat until thick. Store in refrigerator and beat before using.

Wise Men

THE Chinese, who know more about wisdom than any other race, designate the wise by a combination of the ideographs for wind and lightning. Wise, with them, is not the serene old man bereft of all his illusions, but he who, like the wind, rushes headlong and irresistibly on his way, and cannot be stopped nor laid hold of in any station of his career—who purifies the air in the manner of lightning and strikes wherever there is need. —Hermann Keyserling.

A smile is a sermon.

Living Tailor's Dummy

World's strangest job is held by Rudolph Nedvidek, of Prague. He earns his living by standing still. But it has cost him many hours of practice to reach his present proficiency. He can stand for three hours in a shop window or on a cart being drawn through the streets without moving so much as an eyelid. Rudolph is a living tailor's dummy.

YOUTH MAY LEAD PARENTS BACK TO THE OLD IDEALS

Youth is turning old-fashioned, back to the Victorian age, longing for lavender and lace and lovely romance. It is beginning to revolt at the misconduct of the elders; it is rejecting the cheapness of flapperism and flames and hip flasks.

This is the hopeful report of Margery Wilson, New York psychologist, who has received 3,000 letters in the last four months from boys and girls between fifteen and twenty-one. She says they write of unhappiness over the low standards of their parents, shocked by crudities, the immoralities and drinking.

Observations among young people may to a large extent support this refreshing trend. They are not becoming old-fashioned in the manner of our grandmothers, who blushed at the slightest pretext. This new youth understands the realities of life, physical displays seem to mean little or nothing to them; they openly discuss issues tabooed generations ago. But their minds are clean.

It is only natural that a reaction should set in. Evil conduct may not become epidemic. It may provide the bad examples which disgust the observer, lead to reform. Then the depression of recent years has had its beneficial influence in transferring thoughts to more serious matters.

Perhaps the children will lead their elders back to normal and sane existence.—Miami Herald.

Newsboys' Earnings

According to a report of the International Circulation Managers' association, the 570,000 newsboys in the United States earn more than $1,500,000 a week. The survey shows that the boys spend from 58 minutes to two hours and a quarter on their jobs daily and the average weekly earning per boy is $3.52.

New Liner Queen Mary Has Double Ship-to-Shore Telephone Circuits

The S. S. Queen Mary, pride of England's shipping industry and largest man-made thing afloat, is, of course, the last word in maritime equipment. Included among the numerous arrangements for the convenience and comfort of her passengers is the most extensive telephone layout aboard any vessel.

This super-liner is equipped with apparatus providing not one but two independent ship-to-shore telephone circuits, making it possible for passengers to carry on simultaneous conversations while at sea, with friends in America and in Europe. During the Queen Mary's maiden voyage westward, ending in New York City on June 1, a total of 284 telephone calls were completed from and to the ship, and it is estimated that about half that many more were not completed because of the difficulty of locating passengers who were not in their cabins.

The liner was in contact with New York's "Long Distance" at frequent intervals from the time she left Southampton until after she had dropped anchor at Quarantine. Conversations with the ship linked passengers with telephone subscribers on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts, in the Middle West, and in Canada. In addition to the telephone conversations, numerous radio broadcasts from the vessel were transmitted over the ship-to-shore telephone circuits to the broadcasting chains on land.

All of the 700 first class passengers have telephones in their staterooms, and the 1,400 passengers in the other classes are served through telephone booths in all parts of the ship. In addition, the entire personnel of the ship is provided with telephone service. Calls are handled through a three-position switchboard, similar to that in a large hotel, located on A Deck. Four young women operators and a male night operator are required to care for the telephone business of the ship, which on the maiden voyage averaged 2,000 "local" calls a day.

The Queen Mary brings the total of ocean liners having telephone connection with the Bell System up to nineteen. This comprises practically all of the large transatlantic liners.

Ship-to-shore service in the Atlantic is handled on the American side by two stations on the New Jersey coast. These stations maintain contact with ships on four different frequencies, the frequency used in any given case depending upon the distance of the ship from the coast and the time of day or night. In general, the greater the distance, the higher the frequency.

BANK GROUPS MAKE NATIONWIDE SURVEY

American and State Banking Associations Collaborate in Investigation

LOAN SERVICES STUDIED

Activities of the Government in the Banking Field Are Reviewed and Position of Banks Analyzed

NEW YORK Detailed bank researches, covering all phases of practical operating and economic facts and conditions related to banking, are being made by the American Bankers Association The resulting material is being placed at the disposal of all state banking associations which in many instances are extending the researches of the national association in their own states These activities are said to be a part of the general program of banking development which is being carried on by the organized banking business.

Among the most extensive researches being conducted by the American Bankers Association is that of its Committee on Banking Studies, which is making a detailed survey of Federal Government lending agencies and policies The basic material, which is kept up to date by continuing studies, shows where the Government agencies get the money they lend, what liability the Government assumes, what subsidy it extends, what return it gets, for what and to whom the money goes and on what terms it is loaned.

The Government in Banking

"It is not the intention of the committee to express its viewpoint about any agency," says the foreword to this material "Its intention is only to determine the facts. These facts properly assembled and presented should help banks to meet Government competition if and where it exists. The committee believes the Government entered the lending field at a critical period in order to aid banks and financial institutions If the time has come for the Government to withdraw, it is the duty of bankers to demonstrate their readiness to take care of all sound credit needs."

It adds that the banks must be equipped with full factual material as to the Government's emergency lending activities and practices, and that full cooperation has been given the committee by Government agencies in obtaining facts. Binders of the material gathered have been placed by the committee in the hands of state association officers and committees of three members appointed to cooperate with it in carrying on banking research

The Committee on Banking Studies has also made a survey of the Postal Savings System throughout the United States to ascertain to what extent it is competing with chartered banks Questionnaires were sent to banks in all places where Postal Savings depositories are operated and over 93 per cent returned answers which will be analyzed as a basis for the committee's findings.

The Bank Management Commission of the American Bankers Association has made a nation-wide survey covering the movement among banks to increase their earning abilities "through fair and legitimate rates for services they render their depositors." The commission has developed a uniform plan of account analysis as a basis of sound charges

The Bank Management Commission has also formulated methods for installing and operating personal income loan departments in banks. "This plan contemplates making loans primarily to individuals and small business concerns, based upon the character and assured incomes of the borrowers, as distinguished from the usual basis for 'commercial loans,' " the commission says.

It points out that a large part of the population is not now making use of available bank credit and that "to these people the personal loan department extends a valuable service which at the same time is profitable to the bank " It adds that it is "the duty of the banks to educate the public to come to the bank for all financial services Small borrowers should be informed that the local bank is ready and willing to take care of their demands "

Other Researches

Other researches are being made by the Economic Policy Commission of the association dealing with shrinkages in liquid commercial loans caused by the economic changes in the nation's business methods, while the National Bank Division has made studies of the lending and investment powers of this class of bank, the present status of the real estate investment field and of detailed data by states on earnings and expenses.

The Savings Division has gathered the facts showing savings in banks of all types, the number of savings depositors, the per capita savings for the country as a whole and the effects of current economic and social changes upon the savings habits of the American people

The association's State Bank Division has issued the most recent figures available as to the detailed conditions of state banks, showing steady improvement in the position of the state banks, with marked expansion in their aggregate resources, while the Trust Division has compiled a guide to fees with a recommended cost accounting system.

Former Shelby Co. P. M. Is Sentenced

Birmingham, Sept. 1.—For a Federal offense he admittedly committed 20 years ago, Adrian B. Welden, former Chelsea, Ala., postmaster, was sentenced by Federal Judge David J. Davis today to serve 90 days in jail.

Indicted in 1916 for misuse of money orders, Weldon disappeared from Alabama. He was arrested recently in Colorado.

His wife, a Colorado woman, appeared with him in court today. They were married in 1934. She told the judge that Welden was doing his best "to live a clean life."

The former postmaster related the story of his enlistment in the Army in 1917, under an assumed name, and an honorable discharge after the war. Husky and red-faced, he said he recently had worked on a mining claim near Boulder, Colo., but hadn't "done so well."

Welden told the judge he has suffered a great deal, in dread and fear during the last 20 years. The jurist told him he realized his suffering. Welden was given 90 days and five years probation, with 90 days in which "to get your family affairs in order for your absence."

Welden, under $1,000 bond, walked from the judge's office slowly, holding his wife's arm.

Woman Farmer Sets Record To Shoot At

Miss Ethel Edwards, the rural rehabilitation client who distinguished herself last year by reepaying rer obligations ahead of all others in Montgomery County, claimed the same distinction for 1936 yesterday when she sold two bales of 1936 cotton and laid on the desk of W. E. Elsberry, county supervisor, enough money to cover all advances made to her.

Working alone on land assigned to her on the McLemore place, nine miles east of Montgomery, Miss Edwards gained wide attention in the Fall of 1935 when she paid up her cash advances, rent, and interest.

Yesterday she hurried into Mr. Elsberry's office to repeat the record. After "paying out", she left the rehabilitation office with cash in her pocketbook amounting to $39.

She told Mr. Elsberry that she yet had to harvest 600 pounds of seed cotton, 150 bushels of corn, one ton of velvet beans, 455 bushels of field peas, 1,000 lbs. field peas, 1,000 pounds of peanuts, 30 bushtion she has a Fall garden coming in and 98 quarts of canned vegetables.

Her father is dead and she is supporting her mother.

Family Of Four Shot To Death

Carbon Hill, Ala., Sept. 1,—Attracted by a dim flame in the modest home of Marcus Studdard, 32, neighbors today found Studdard, his wife and two children dead in a burning bed.

Investigation revealed all were shot in the forehead.

Sheriff H. G. Mitchell, of Fayettee County, after an inquiry, said Mrs. Studdard apparently had slain her husband and children, set fire to the bed, and then committed suicide.

The neighbors could advance no motive for the quadruple killing.

They discovered the tragedy at 3 a.m.

Mitchell said one of those first to enter the house reported a bloody ice pick fell from Mrs. Studdard's clothing as the body was moved from the burning bed.

Chief Deputy Sheriff C. A. Sides who aided in the inquiry, reported he found marks on Studdard's head, besides the bullet wound, indicating he may have been wounded by a sharp weapon. Mitchell said the wound in Mrs. Studdard's head showed distinct powder burns.

The two children's bodies were found lying close to their mother. Studdard's body was slumped across the foot of the bed. The body of Mrs. Studdard was badly burned.

A jar of kerosene was under the bed.

Studdard had but one arm, having lost the other as a result of an injury suffered while cranking an automobile sometime ago.

Funeral for the entire family will be held tomorrow, with burial at Studdard's Crossroads.

ALABAMA SCHOOL FACTS

Do you know 205,000 rural boys and girls were forced to leave school last year because of closed door?

Do you know that a big percentage of them could not be promoted to the next grade?

Do you realize this means the loss of a school year for these children?

Do you realize the money spent on these children is lost and must be paid again?

Do you know that the average salary set by the Minimum Program is $75 a month, or $525 a year in a seven-month school?

Do you know that if the school had run a full term last year the salary would have been only $56.

Do you know that in 1929 teacher salaries were less than $60 per month in seven counties?

Do you know that the Minimum Program raises salaries in such counties and lowers them in others?

It is only in the counties that formerly paid very low salaries that expenses have increased.

July Farm Income Increase Is Shown

The Department of Agriculture estimated today that the sale of farm products brought American farmers a cash income of approxifately $711,000,000 in July.

This figure showed a sharp gain over the cash income of $451,000,000 in July, 1935, and $582,000,000 in June, 1936.

"Rental and benefit payments paid out in July on contracts entered into in 1935, and July cotton price adjustment payments amounted to $24,000,000 as compared with a total of Government payments in June of $57,000,000, and in July, 1935, of $19,000,000, the department said.

"The sharp increase in cash farm income in July as compared with June, 1936, and July, 1935, was mainly due to the pronounced gain in income from grains, chiefly wheat Receipts of wheat in the principal markets in July were the fourth largest for the month on record, despite the relatively small supplies on farms this year . . . .

"Marketings of meat animals, particularly cattle and hogs, contrary to the usual seasonal decline continued unusually heavy as a result of the poor pastures and high feed prices accompanying the drouth . . . .

"Prices of all livestock products other than eggs were higher in July than a year ayo, and cash income from dairy products increased more than seasonally, while income from youltry and eggs made the usual seasonal change."

Mr. J. A. Brown reports that cotton is coming in fast and his gin is busy rendering the customary prompt service to its farmer customers. "We have one of the best gins in Alabama," said Mr.Brown, "which is proven by the satisfaction we are able to give our patrons."

Mr. Wiley S. Casey, D.D.S., of Columbia, S. C., and Mr. Homer A. Casey, M. D., of Oakland, California, are visiting Dr. and Mrs. Fred B. Peearson. Mrs. Pearson's father, Dr. T. A. Casey, has been critically ill at the home of Dr. and Mrs. Pearson for several weeks. Dr. Homer Casey came from California by airplane, leaving there at 7.00 a.m. Tuesday and arriving in Birmingham at 3:30 a.m. Wednesday.

Shelby Team Is Victor Over Chilton In Five-Game Series

Arrangements were made last week for a series of baseball games to be played between picked teams representing Chilton and Shelby Counties. J. E. Easterling of Clanton and Mr. Walker of Maplesville were handling the Chilton end of the deal, while Harry Kendrick of Montevallo was taking care of the Shelby end. The schedule called for play until one team had won four games.

The first game was played at Clanton last Saturday afternoon, Chilton winning by a score of 3 to 2.

A double-header was played in Maplesville with the Shelby team winning both ends. The first game was won 3 to 1, and the second 9 to 2.

On Monday another double bill was played. Shelby took both ends of this, also, 6 to 2 and 5 to 2, and the little central Alabama series was history.

CHILTON 3—SHELBY 2

On Saturday, Chilton took the first game of the series, 3 to 2, behind the 4-hit pitching of Jim Burnett. Only 16 Shelby batters faced Burnett during the first 5 innings. To begin the 6th, Eiland singled and Kendrick sacrificed him down to second; he went to third on Dement's infield out, and was caught off third a moment later on a rifle throw from Tatum to Jones.

Shelby scored in the 8th. Underwood and Little hit successive singles, and Underwood scored on a fielder's choice and an infield out. In the 9th, Dement was safe on Haye's error; Lee Walked for the fourth time in the game; Hartley hit into a double killing, with Dement taking third; he scored on Henderson's double.

Chilton scored first in the third; Golson singled, stole second, and scored on a single by Hayes. Chilton scored again in the seventh; with one away, Reynolds singled, and when Eiland picked up Tatum's bunt and threw wild at first, Reynolds raced home.

In the ninth, after Shelby had tied the score at 2-all, Cecil Jones was first man up; he hit the first pitched ball for what looked like a homer over the right field wall; Hartley backed against the fence to catch it, stepped into a hole near the fence, fell against the fence, and Jones came around with the winning run, when Hartley was stunned by his fall.

Henderson led Shelby's attack with a double; all the other three hits were singles.

Cecil Jones led for Chilton with two safeties. Golson contributed a fielding gem in the third inning when he speared Kendrick's triple.

The lineup for this game was as follows:

Shelby: J. Dement, lf; Lee, ss; P. Underwood, 2b; Henderson, 3b; Little, 1b; Carter, cf; Hartley, rf; Eiland, c; Kendrick, p.

Chilton: Tatum, c; Burnett, p; Jones, 3b; Haye, ss; Reynolds, 2b; Littlejohn, 1b; Golson, lf; Williamson, cf; Smith, rf.

SHELBY 3—CHILTON 1

In the first game of the twin bill at Maplesville Sunday, Wheeler, Shelby fire-ball artist let the Chilton team down with one lone hit.

In the sixth an error, a base on balls, and Reynolds' lone hit gave Chilton's team their only score. Wheeler struck out 9.

Golson gave up 9 hits and his mates contributed five costly errors. Three successive singles in the second brought in the first run. The other two came in the sixth when the Chilton inner works exploded with a bang; C. Dement's single brought in the two markers. C. Dement, Eiland and Wheeler led the attack on Golson with a pair of hits each.

The lineup was as follows:

Chilton: Alex Hayes, ss; Williamson, cf; Burnett, 3b; M. Hayes, 1b; Smith, rf; Tatum, c; Reynolds, 2b; Tucker, lf; Golson, p.

Shelby: Byrd, cf; Dement, 2b; Lee, ss; Henderson, 3b Underwood, 1b; C. Dement, rf; Eiland, c; Kendrick, lf; Wheeler, p.

SHELBY 9—CHILTON 2

Chilton's defense blew up again in the last game of Sunday's twin bill, Shelby taking this game 9 to 2. Tucker gave the Shelby team only five hits, but a number of bases on balls, coupled with errors at inopportune moments spelled his downfall.

"Skillet" Bird, a portsider, allowed Chilton four hits. The Chilton batters were tuned up to Wheeler's smoke ball, but Bird's floaters had them looking like armless wonders all through the fray.

Shelby scored two in the first inning, four in the fifth, and three in the sixth. Chilton's two runs came in the sixth, when Williamson was safe on Underwood's error, Burnett singled, and Monroe Hayes tripled.

Chilton bobbled four times and Shelby three times.

The lineup was as follows:

Shelby: J. Dement, 2b; C. Dement, rf; Underwood, lf; Henderson, 3b; Little, 1b; Lee, ss; Carter, cf; Eiland, c; Byrd, p.

Chilton: Alex Hayes, ss; Williamson, lf; Burnett, rf; M. Hayes, lf; Jones, 3b; Tatum, c; Reynolds, 2b; Golson, cf; Tucker, p.

SHELBY 6—CHILTON 2

In the first game of Monday's bargain bill, Chilton lost again, 6 to 2. "Red" Amos, veteran of the Buck Creek hey day season, let Warren was allowing Shelby 10. Chilton down with four hits, while Chilton erred five times, while Shelby bobbled twice.

Shelby scored twice in the second when Jones and Hayes each booted the ball, and Eiland followed with a double. Three more came in the third, one in the fifth.

Chilton scored in the first when Jones lifted one of the Amos slants over the centerfield wall. The other came in the sixth as a result of two errors and a single byJones.

SHELBY 5—CHILTON 2

Monday's nightcap also went to the Shelby team by a score of 5 to 2; this was a six-inning affair.

Warren tried the iron man stunt and set out to pitch this game also, but retired in the fifth in favor of Golson, but one of them was C. Dement's home run clout in the fifth, with two mates aboard. Chilton scored twice in the fourth and called it a day, also a season — in which they were forced to yield the championship all-star honors to the fast and furious little men from their neighbor county of Shelby.

J. E. Easterling got the Shelby boys stirred up when he brought his "Swamp Scratchers" up here and defeated Montevallo following Harry Kendrick's drubbing of Lay Dam. Harry then got blood in his eyes and decided to show J. E. a thing or two. Instead of two he made it four in a row.

Gay P. G. Wodehouse Farce Coming To Strand Screen

One of the most uproarous laugh riots of the year comes to the Strand screen Sunday and Monday with the release of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production, "Piccadilly Jim," starring Robert Montgomery.

Of all the hilarious comedies written by the brilliant British humorist, P. G. Wodehouse, "Piccadilly Jim" has been proclaimed his funniest.

The picture brings together for the first time in three years the romantic team of Montgomery and Madge Evans. They were last seen together in "Lovers Courageous."

Directed by Robert Z. Leonard, who made "The Great Ziegfield," the new picture gives Montgomery and Miss Evans a stellar supporting cast that inclules a new comedy team, Frank Morgan and Billie Burke, in addition to Eric Blore, Robert Benchley, Ralph Forbes, Aileen Pringle and Billy Bevan.

As Montgomery's step-mother, Billie Burke makes her first screen appearance under the terms of her new Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer contract.

Too, the new picture brings Montgomery and Morgan together for the second time. Their last appearance together was in "Trouble for Two." In "Piccadilly Jim", Morgan plays Montgomery's father, a has-been Shakespearean actor.

"Piccadilly Jim" is the story of a young American caricaturist in London who plunges into romantic difficulties by unknowingly burlesquing in a comic strip the family of the girl with whom he is in love.

The settings of London and New York and the transatlantic steamer backgrounds are described as among the most beautiful ever designed by Cedric Gibyons. Harry Rapf was the producer.

Decline In Farm Taxes Reported

36 PER CENT DROP SINCE 1929 SHOWN IN DEPARTMENT STUDY

Washington, Sept. 8.—A drop of 36 per cent in farm real estate taxes from 1929 through 1935 was reported today by the Agriculture Department.

A tax study, limited to farm land taxed by states, counties, school boards and other local units disclosed that the levies had been whittled down from an average of 58 cents an acre in 1929 to 37 cents last year.

Nevertheless, the study showed that the 1935 taxes were still about three times above the 1900 average of 15 cents an acre, and more than 50 per cent above the 1914 average of 24 cents.

A "sharp rise in taxes from 1900 to 1929" was said to have been caused by "rapid expansion in local and state services," with road-building and education chiefly responsible.

The depression, the study said, has "reversed the farm taxation trend," with public services either curtailed or their costs shifted to the State and Federal Governments.

During this shift, the report said, "Many rural schools were closed or put on part time," teachers' salaries cut and school courses eliminated. Road building and public works construction were said to have been expanded, the cost being shifted from farm real estate to state and Federal governments with payment "from sources other than property."

The study showed the average acre tax varied widely in different regions and states. In 1934 the tax was 5 cents an acre in New Mexico and $2.21 in Massachusetts.

Dr. Acker Opposes Added Taxes For Montevallo

"Certainly I am not for more taxes, nor an increased tax rate locally," said Dr. C T. Acker Tuesday in answer to the rumor that he favors raising Montevallo's tax rate.

Continuing his remarks upon the subject, he said: "As owner of two pieces of residence property and fourteen acres of unimproved real estate within the city limits, I am sure that my personal feeling about higher taxes is the same as any other indivilual in a similar situation as a property owner."

Relative to the efforts of the town officials in the past to secure needed improvements, Dr. Acker made this very appropriate observation:

"All who have worked with Mayor Lyman for the past two years in the effort to secure through PWA and WPA financial assistance for sewer and sidewalk extension and added fire protection will tell you the story of how unpaid bonds and unpaid interest on our bonded indebtedness have prevented our town from getting these needed improvements, as well as the much-wished-for public auditorium and city hall.

"And those who are thus familiar with the efforts of the town government to secure these advantages, and the reasons why we were not able to get them, can explain how, at last, at the suggestion of our city attorney, we decided to ask the people of the State of Alabama to make an amendment to the State Constitution that would, if and when adopted, give the people of Montevallo the right to make themselves able to meet the requirements necessary to get WPA and PWA aid in improvements, if they should desire to do so

"This enabling process, which would remain vested entirely in the people of Montevallo, is provided in a proposed amendment to the State Constitution to be voted upon at the general election in November. It provides a way by which the people of Montevallo can make themselves able to meet PWA and WPA requirements, by voting upon themselves an increased rate of taxation, if they want to do so.

"The town authorities have not set up a program of increased taxes. They have attempted to set up a means whereby the people of the town may strengthen and increase the credit of the town, if they want to do so, to such an extent as would render PWA and WPA willing to accept the town's obligations and our requests for assistance.

"And, in justice to everyone, and in the interest of the future progress of our town, it should be clearly understood that no step has been taken by anyone on behalf of any measure that would increase local taxes, unless the people of Montevallo themselves specifically authorize such increase, with definite and positive designation as to the uses to which the increase would be applied.

"Personally, I am not advocating more taxes; but if the majority of people of Montevallo should desire to impose more taxes upon themselves to do a certain thing which they want to be done, I, of course, as any other citizen, would be governed by the majority opinion."

President Harman Sounds Note of Economic Recovery

As Alabama College prepared Monday for the start of its forty-first session, President A. F. Harman, beginning his second year of his administration, declared that in the renewed and accelerated flow of youth into Alabama schools he found one of the most encouraging aspects of economic recovery.

"Alabama's greatest loss during the depression," stated Dr. Harman, was not in business failures, but in the drastic curtailment of educational opportunities for our young people. While the losses of these recent years can never be fully made up, I find it heartening that in the pre-registration outlook at Alabama College and other colleges in this state there is strong evidence of recovery benefits for our boys and girls as well as for business."

The vanguard of upperclassmen arrived at Alabama College Monday in order to be on hand for the welcoming of freshmen and new students Tuesday morning. Registration of freshmen began Wednesday morning. Registration of upperclassmen will begin Thursday afternoon.

A round of entertainment is included in the first week's student program. The president's Council was host to freshmen Tuesday night at a theatre party at the Strand. Wednesday night the student senate gave a party in the gymnasium. Each of the Montevallo churches will entertain freshmen Thursday night with a reception. Freshmen will hike to the camp house Friday night for a supper sponsored by several campus organizations.

The first faculty meeting of the year was held at 10 a.m. Tuesday, when President Harman introduced new faculty members and outlined general policies for the session.

Classes will begin Monday, September 14, at 8 a.m.

Returning students will find that since May a number of improvements have been made to the college grounds. A program of paving and beautification has continued through the summer. The driveway past King House, the nursery school and the home management house has been completed. There also has been an extensive addition to the power plant which assures an adequate supply of heat, light and power for the college. A new filtration plant is under construction by PWA in cooperation with the state health department.

The approach to Montevallo has been greatly improved by paving of the seven-mile road to Calera, and construction of a handsome overpass which spans the creek and railroad tracks at the edge of town.

Literary Digest Presidential Poll Now Under Way. Ballots Mailed

Individual ballot have geen mailed to voters of Montevallo and nearby communities in a new Literary Digest poll of over 10,000,000 persons to ascertain who will be the next President of the United States. The votes should be distributed by the post office locally within a few days according to advice received today from the magazine's publishers.

Alabama's returns in this 1936 referendum will be tallied as a unit so they may be compared with the voting in other states, it was announced.

The voting of the post-card ballots is secret as no signature or other identification is required and the return postage is paid by the magazine. To guard against tampering and counterfeiting a specially maunfactured card-board is used for printing the ballot, according to the sponsors of the poll, and all spurious votes can be detected immediately and destroyed.

The ballot asks the voter's choice of the seven officially nominated candidates and for whom he or she voted in the 1932 election to reveal the general drift from one party to another.

This is announced as the fourth quadrennial national Presidential poll conducted by The Literary Digest. The three previous polls have forecast the presidential winner with "uncanny accuracy".

Ballots are reported being mailed from the magazine's headquarters in New York at the rate of over 350,000 per day and will continue until every section of the country has been sent its proportionate share of the total being mailed.

Publication of the first tabulated returns was made September 5.

The forthcoffing palloting will be the twelfth national multi-million vote poll conducted by The Literary Digest besides several localized referendums which included the 1933 Mayoralty contest in New York City and the 1934 gubernatorial election in California.

Seven of the twelve polls were held in advance of elections and each of the seven forecast the official outcome with a small margin of error, the magazine reports.

The Literary Digest states that just prior to the 1932 election it predicted Roosevelt would get 59.86 per cent of the popular vote in his campaign against Hoover. The official returns showed that the president received 59.14 per cent of the Rooevelt-Hoover vote, revealing an error of 0.72 per cent in the magazine's forecast.

A staff of more than 2,000 additional employees is reported to have been engaged by The Literary Digest for the mailing of the ballots and the tallying of the returns in the forthcoming presidential poll.

Mr. and Mrs. K. M. Vinson of Scottsboro were visitors with friends in Montevallo last Sunday. They brought their daughter, Miss Gertiwyl Vinson, who will be a student at Alabama College this session.

Security Program Cuts Relief Costs

WPA REPORTS NUMBER ON DOLE REDUCED 8.3 PER CENT: 900,00 GET HELP

Washington, Sept. 8.—Social security payments to the aged, the blind, and dependent children were credited by the Works Progress Administration today with a large share in reducing the relief burden of States and communities.

Estimating that the total number of families and single persons on the dole declined from 1,985,000 in March to 1,820,000 in April, a WPA report noted the social security program got under way in February. Its expansion during March and April, the report added, "contributed to the reported decline in the number of cases receiving general relief."

Another reason for the 8.3 per cent decline in relief cases between March and April, the WPA said, was that some local agencies ran short of money, forcing them to curtail relief payments or discontinue them entirely.

The WPA report coincided with a social security board announcement that more than 900,000 people unable to work received help during July.

This included 715,007 persons over 65 years of age, 22,250 blind people, and 183,427 dependent children.

Estimating that the number of pensions would be greatly increased during the next few months as new State plans are approved by the social security board, officials said that between 200,000 and 250,000 old people were receiving State pensions before inauguration of the program.

Pelham Farmer Slain; Wife Held

TWO MEN ARE ALSO JAILED IN FATAL SHOOTING OF HENRY SMITH

Columbiana, Ala., Sept. 7.—Investigating the slaying Sunday night of Henry Smith, of near Pelham, Shelby County, Sheriff Claude Fore Monday held the victim's widow; Wilburn Strange, 21, cousin of Smith, and Ocie Peyton in Shelby County Jail here on charges of murder.

Sheriff Fore said Strange admitted shooting Smith with a .22 caliber rifle during an altercation which followed what the sheriff described as a "drinking party" at the victim's residence about 15 miles northwest of Columbiana.

Both Peyton and Mrs. Smith corroborated Strange's account of the shooting, Sheriff Fore said Monday.

Investigating officers quoted Strange as saying a quarrel started in the Smith residence and that he fired the .22 rifle from an embankment.

Warrants against the three persons held, charging them with murder, were sworn out Monday by Deputy Sheriff Clyde Smith, of Chilton County, brother of the slain man.

Sheriff Fore said there probably will be no preliminary hearing for Mrs. Smith and the two men, but that he expected evidence to be presented to the Grand Jury which convenes here September 14.

Roosevelt Meets Landon and Other Governors in Drouth Relief Conference—Revised Budget Figures Put Debt at 34 Billions.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

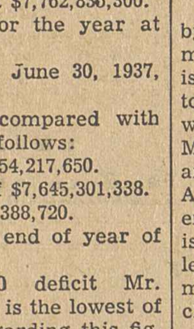
© Western Newspaper Union.

Gov. Landon

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT and Alf M. Landon, rival candidates for the Presidency, met in somewhat dramatic fashion in Des Moines, Iowa; but they met as chief executives of the United States and of Kansas respectively for the purpose of discussing plans for the relief of drouth stricken farmers. The conference, held at Mr. Roosevelt's suggestion and including the governors of the other states that had suffered especially from the drouth, began in the state house in Des Moines, where Governor Herring entertained the distinguished visitors at a luncheon. The President and Mr. Landon, it was said, did most of the talking at this repast and exchanged a lot of joking remarks. Then the conference was started in earnest, each state being taken up in turn. When it came to Kansas, Governor Landon presented in manuscript form a definite plan, in large part the same as he submitted to Harry Hopkins two years ago.

Early in the evening Mr. Roosevelt entertained the governors at dinner aboard his special train. On that occasion he and Mr. Landon had their most intimate talk. Results of the conference, if any, were not made public at once, the President reserving announcement of his plans for a radio address.

HARRY RICHMAN, night club entertainer and aviator, and Dick Merrill, veteran pilot, successfully flew across the Atlantic in their monoplane Lady Peace, but failed to reach London, their destination, by some 200 miles. Running into a hard rainstorm over Ireland, they lost their way and were forced to land near Llandilo, Wales, because their fuel was exhausted. Neither the aviators nor the plane were injured. Richman said the flight was pleasant most of the way.



President Roosevelt

REVISING the 1937 budget figures he submitted to congress in January, President Roosevelt now estimates that expenditures caused by the bonus and the AAA invalidation will put the public debt at the all-time high figure of $34,188,543,494. He says, however, that better business will run tax receipts up $12,000,000 higher than was expected. The President's revision covered the fiscal year that began July 1 last and will end June 30, 1937. During his absence from the capital it was issued by Acting Budget Director Daniel W. Bell.

The chief items changed by the estimate were:

1. Receipts, fixed at $5,665,839,000.
2. Expenditures at $7,762,836,300.
3. Gross deficit for the year at $2,096,996,300.
4. Public debt on June 30, 1937, at $34,188,543,493.73.

These estimates compared with January figures as follows:

1. Receipts of $5,654,217,650.
2. Expenditures of $7,645,301,338.
3. Deficit of $1,098,388,720.
4. Public debt at end of year of $31,351,638,737.

The $2,000,000,000 deficit Mr. Roosevelt estimated is the lowest of the New Deal. Regarding this figure the President said:

"The estimated deficit for 1937 is $2,096,996,300, which includes $580,000,000 for statutory debt retirement and $560,000,000 for further payments under the adjusted compensation payment act.

"Deducting the amount of the statutory debt retirement leaves a net deficit of $1,516,996,300.

"This does not mean that there will be an increase in the public debt of this amount for the reason that it is contemplated during the year to reduce the working balance of the general fund by approximately $1,100,000,000."

What Mr. Roosevelt meant by this was that instead of borrowing money to cover the difference between receipts and expenditures, the Treasury would dip into the general fund for $1,100,000,000.

IT WAS Benito Mussolini's turn to go into the European version of the Indian war dance, following Hitler and Stalin, and he gave a great performance. At Avellino, center of the Italian army maneuvers, Il Duce announced to a cheering throng that he could mobilize 8,000,000 soldiers "in the course of a few hours and after a simple order." The premier declared the world is in the throes of an irresistible re-armament race and Italy must reject the idea of eternal peace, which he said is "foreign to our creed and to our temperament." He asserted that the armed forces of Italy are more efficient than ever as a consequence of the Ethiopian war and that the 60,000 men engaged in the maneuvers are but a modest and almost insignificant part of the country's actual war strength.

"We must be strong," cried Mussolini. "We must be always stronger! We must be so strong that we can face any eventualities and look directly in the eye whatever may befall!"

Germany's new army of a million men, created by Hitler's order doubling the term of compulsory military training, is to be financed by increased taxes on all companies and corporations by 25 per cent for 1936 and by 50 per cent for 1937. This increase brings the corporations tax up to a minimum of 25 and 30 per cent on new profits.

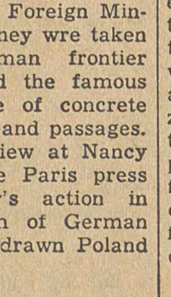
JAPAN proposes to build up a submarine fleet approximately 30 per cent larger than that of either Great Britain or the United States. Such was the substance of a note delivered by the Japanese embassy in London to the British foreign office. The decision replaces the submarine parity among the three powers established by the 1930 London naval treaty.

Japan notified Great Britain that it was determined to keep afloat 11,059 tons of destroyers and 15,598 tons of submarines above the 1930 London treaty quotas. This tonnage, if the treaty's provisions were carried out, would be scrapped at the end of this year.

The Japanese note was in reply to Great Britain's memorandum of July 15, 1936, invoking the "escape clause" of the first London treaty in order to increase its destroyer tonnage above the pact's allowance.

Japan gave the lack of sufficient excess destroyers as its reason for retaining a surplus in submarines.

The United States, like Great Britain, has decided it must keep in service after the end of the year 40,000 tons of over age destroyers in excess of the total permitted by the 1930 treaty.



Gen. Rydz-Smigly.

SHOULD war break out in Europe, France counts on having the powerful Polish army on her side. Consequently the week long visit of Gen. Edward Rydz - Smigly, inspector general of that army, and a Polish military mission to France was made the occasion of elaborate ceremonies. The train carrying the Poles crossed the border at Belfort and there General Rydz-Smigly was received by the commanding generals of the area and reviewed thousands of troops of the frontier regiments. Going thence to Paris, the Poles were accorded the highest military honors and the crowds in the decorated streets cheered them lustily.

Dinners for the guests were given by President Albert Lebrun, Premier Leon Blum and Foreign Minister Delbos. Later they wre taken to the Franco-German frontier where they inspected the famous Maginot defense line of concrete and steel strongholds and passages. A great military review at Nancy ended the tour. The Paris press is sure that Hitler's action in lengthening the term of German military service has drawn Poland closer to France.

FASCISM in Lithuania, established about a year ago by Antanas Smetona, the president-dictator, is likely to come to an end very soon. The new parliament is now in session and has begun to study possible revision of the constitution.

The Lithuanian government has had serious trouble with Germany over Memel, which, though mainly populated by Germans, was turned over to Lithuania for use as a port by the League of Nations. The country's second source of woe is its broken relations with Poland.

IN AN appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States the Virginian Railway company made an attack on the provisions of the railway labor act authorizing collective bargaining between representatives of the employees and the carriers.

The railroad appealed from rulings by the Eastern Virginia Federal District court and the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals requiring it to negotiate concerning disputes with a unit of the American Federation of Labor. It contended the legislation, passed in 1926 and amended in 1934, violated the Constitution by depriving it of liberty and property, and attempting to regulate labor relations with employees engaged solely in intrastate activities.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT ATTORNEY L. C. GARNETT of Washington was asked by Vice President Garner to present to the federal grand jury the case of six Railway Audit and Inspection company officials who failed to appear before a senate committee some two weeks ago. Those cited by Mr. Garner were: W. W. Groves, president of the company; W. B. Groves, vice president; Earl Douglas Rice, vice president; J. E. Blair, secretary-treasurer; R. S. Judge, director, and J. C. Boyer.

The committee, headed by Senator La Follette, is investigating the alleged use of labor "spies" by employers in disputes with their employees. At the time of the hearing an attorney for the company told the committee an injunction was being sought in federal court to prevent the officials' appearance and to prohibit production of their records.

Ruth Owen.

MRS. RUTH BRYAN OWEN, now the wife of Capt. Boerge Rohde of the Danish king's royal life guards, has resigned as American minister to Denmark in order to be free to campaign as a private citizen for the re - election of President Roosevelt, and the President has accepted her resignation. This was done in an exchange of telegrams, that from Mr. Roosevelt saying:

"While I am very loath to have you discontinue the very fine services you have been rendering as United States minister to Denmark, I appreciate your reasons for wanting to resign and the motives that prompt you. I therefore reluctantly accept your resignation."

SIX bombs dropped from an unidentified Spanish airplane fell perilously near the American destroyer Kane, which was en route from Gibraltar to Bilbao to help in the removal of Americans from the war zone. The Kane fired several rounds from an anti-aircraft gun at the plane. Naturally our government was roused to protest. Secretary of State Hull instructed his agents abroad to request both the Spanish government and Gen. Francisco Franco, leader of the rebel forces, to "issue instructions in the strongest terms" to prevent another "incident of this character."

The rebel forces in the north were making a powerful air attack on Irun, scattering many bombs on that border city, and an assault by land and sea forces was expected at any moment. The government troops there had refused to surrender and their officers said rightist prisoners, including some prominent men, would be exposed in the most open places during the bombardment.

The Madrid government admitted its troops had sustained an "important reverse" in a battle at Oropesa, 100 miles southwest of the capital and were driven back to Talavera. Later a loyalist victory at that place was claimed, though London heard the rebels had scored another victory there. The fighting in the Guadarrama mountains continued indecisively, and in Toledo the loyalists were still hammering away at the ancient Alcazar in which about 2,000 rebels were besieged.

RESOLUTIONS adopted by the American Bar association at its meeting in Boston declare firmly against any attempt to limit the power of federal courts to pass on the constitutionality of laws. The association avoided what had been expected to be a lively debate by taking a noncommittal attitude on the report of another committee which denounced in great part the alleged invasion of the rights of citizens by the New Deal. This report, to which there was a minority report appended, was received and filed by the assembly, but not accepted, and the committee which filed it was discharged from further duty.

Frederick H. Stinchfield of Minneapolis was unanimously elected president of the association for the coming year.

PERHAPS the farmers of America don't realize it, but during July they enjoyed the largest cash income they have had since 1929. Figures given out by the Department of Agriculture show the sales of farm products brought them $711,000,000 against $582,000,000 in June and only $451,000,000 in July, 1935.

To their income from sales, the farmers added $24,000,000 in various forms of government benefits, bringing the total cash at their disposal to $735,000,000. The rental and other benefits totaled $57,000,000 in June and $19,000,000 in July, 1935.

BECAUSE labor costs in New York city are too high, the Charles Schweinler Press, largest magazine printing house there, has decided to close the plant in which it employs 1,000 men and women and move where costs are lower. Executives of the company said they did not object to the wage scales imposed by New York unions, but found the differential between the local scale and the rates in force elsewhere so great that it was "impossible" to continue in New York.

When the Schweinler Press moves it will take with it an annual pay roll of $1,750,000.

Strength Alone Protects

Arthur Brisbane

An association called "The Anglo-German Fellowship," a name which shows that men forget wars as easily as they do seasickness, gave a dinner in London in honor of the Duke and Duchess of Brunswick, who are Germans, as was the British royal family originally.

Among other speakers at the dinner, Lord Lothian talked about war, the importance of doing something to satisfy Germany, now that Germany is strong enough to fight back.

Lord Lothian has discovered that it is one thing to deal with dissatisfied populations when they are unarmed, and a very different thing to deal with the same dissatisfied populations when they are fully armed.

The British made that discovery for themselves long ago, before Lord Lothian was born, in the process of building up their great empire. If the Boers, Hindus, Zulus and some others had been as thoroughly armed as they were thoroughly dissatisfied, the British empire would be smaller.

Americans who want to know what Europeans, including the English, are thinking and planning, will be interested in the following statement by Lord Lothian concerning Germany. It has been suggested that England and France should pacify Germany by giving back some of the colonial properties taken from Germany at the end of the war. Lord Lothian is one of the numerous Englishmen who do not believe in "giving things back." Said he:

"Personally, I do not believe that the problem can be solved along the lines of the restoration to Germany of the old German colonies. That would not solve Germany's difficulties, and things have changed since 1914. The question must be considered on much wider lines. All the colonial nations must be willing to make their contribution to a transfer of territory. The new world as well as the old must be willing once more to reopen its doors to trade and migration."

The statement of the noble lord that "the new world as well as the old MUST be willing," etc., has no pleasant sound in American ears. The word "must," especially, is one that a wise Englishman could hardly apply to the United States after 1776. Lord Lothian probably meant that the United States "ought," not that it "MUST," once more reopen its doors to trade and migration.

The United States, it is to be hoped, will decide for itself about reopening its doors to trade and immigration. This country needs more of the immigration that made it what it is—it is NOT a redskin country, its people came from Europe, and it needs many millions more of the same kind. It also needs, and the majority of its people intend to keep, American jobs, American wages and American money for the people who live and work in the United States.

There is nothing like being strong and prepared for trouble. You notice how differently Germany appears in the eyes of France and other nations surrounding her today, as compared with the years after the war. Hear Lord Lothian on that subject:

"Germany now has both equality and strength. Reparations have gone. Part V of the Treaty of Versailles has gone. The demilitarization of the Rhineland has gone, and the sooner that recovery of her natural right to self-defense is accepted without further discussion the better. Germany is rearmed. It only remains for the British government to abandon once and for all the fatal system whereby she first has a conference with her friends and then presents the results as a kind of ultimatum to Germany—the system represented by the recent questionnaire—and to substitute for it free and equal and frank discussion around a table. The old system is not equality, either for Germany or for ourselves."

What telephone girl in America has the softest, most beautiful, most easily understood voice? That question was asked in England and a Miss Cain won the competition arranged by the British postoffice, which owns British telephones and telegraph. The finest voice having been selected, a robot was manufactured to imitate that voice by phonographic process. Now, when you want to know the time in London, you dial "Tim" and the soft voice of Miss Cain, perfectly reproduced, tells you: "At the third stroke it will be four twenty-seven and fifteen seconds—"

'Social Defense' in Russia

Washington. — The Associated Press carried a dispatch from Moscow a few days ago that had more in it than just the announcement that certain oppositionists among the Soviet leaders were to be executed. The dispatch reported that 16 confessed conspirators against the Soviet state were sentenced to death by the firing squad as the "highest measure of social defense" of a government.

It reported a new stage in the so-called progress of Communism in the Russian state. For the first time since the Bolsheviks came into power they ordered the death penalty for some of the leaders who marched in the Revolution of October, 1917.

So we have a clean sweep now of the men who sat next to the dictator, Lenin; the men who were his closest advisors in council are out of the way, and in their place remains the extensively practical and strong-willed executive, Stalin, who has in this instance declined to allow theory to interfere with a condition.

Here is the picture. Leon Trotsky in exile and under sentence of death if he returns into Russia. Zinoviev shot to death. Kamenev also executed by a firing squad (he will be remembered as an outstanding pillar of Bolshevism). Tomsky, a suicide. Rykov, Bukahrin and Rodek under investigation by the dreadful Ogpu. A hated secret service is looking into the records of Sokoknikov and Pyotakov. The latter two have been important advisors to Stalin. But what is all of this about? The answer is simple. While these men were charged with plotting the murder of Stalin, with conspiracy, beneath it all lies the thirst of men for power. Through all of this since the fall of the Russian empire and the execution of Czar Nicholas, the Communists have pushed forward. The strongest of them have traveled. That is the why of Stalin. Yet as most always happens under any circumstance where the will of a few men runs free, they have inflicted to the last degree the power that they have gathered unto themselves. In so doing they have not failed to reserve unto themselves such considerations as they thought necessary—a perfectly human trait of character answerable only where a whim becomes a will and there is power to carry it out.

Between Stalin, who was able to enforce his will, and Trotsky, who dwelt in the starry heavens of theories and dreams, there is only a theoretical difference. Each wanted Communism. Trotsky considered the problem in the terms of world revolution; Stalin thought of it as the Russian state and recognized his capacity to carry his plans through in that jurisdiction. So the Stalin-Trotsky feud, as it has turned out to be, has become ferocious and any one who has gone contrary to the will of the mighty Stalin—committed a sin against the state. And a sin against the Russian state under Stalin means to disappear.

Lesson for Americans

It seems to me there is an important lesson for the American people in that situation. Stalin, along with Hitler and Mussolini, is always right. It matters not what the people may desire, what their philosophy of life and living may be, how they propose to encourage or accept responsibility for self-government, the dictatorship continues.

Many times in these columns I have criticized bureaucracy in the federal government. There are so many bureaucrats in Washington now that some one has bitterly described them as locusts. It may seem quite a jump from bureaucracy to dictatorship but the difference actually is very small. When the people of the United States concede to the federal government such rights as the federal government attempted to exercise in NRA and even to a greater extent in the AAA, they are taking the first step to grant to a centralized government the authority that leads to absolute control of the person and everything that person does.

There are conditions undoubtedly that need to be remedied before our form of government is anything like perfect. There is always to be considered changing conditions and the changing whims of people themselves. But I entertain the conviction that so long as the American people are unwilling to accord increasing powers to the federal government, the nation as a whole will go forward, civilization will progress and we will enjoy having a government.

Bullitt's Big Job

The transfer of William C. Bullitt from his recent post as ambassador to Russia to a similar assignment in France upon the resignation of Ambassador Straus has occasioned but very little comment, but it seems to me in view of all conditions and circumstances that it should attract attention. He will take up the job as the chief American diplomat at Paris in most troublesome times, the most difficult, perhaps, that have confronted an American diplomat anywhere since the days of 1914 to 1916. Appointment of Mr. Bullitt then, it would appear, is a move that calls into consideration not only the conditions which he will meet as our ambassador but also his qualifications for the job.

It is to be remembered, first, that the post of ambassador to Paris is the second highest in rank among our foreign diplomats. It is a post that always has called for about the best that our nation can turn out in the way of tactful representation even though we always count the assignment to London as the No. 1 ranking post. The reason is that we seldom, if ever, have had the problems to deal with in the case of the London government that continuously arise between the United States and France. We always have been friendly with France in modern times, but it can not be denied that there has been constant friction between the two peoples. The same has not been true concerning Anglo-American relations. Hence, the job at Paris has always been regarded as more difficult than that at London.

As for Mr. Bullitt's capacity, there is a general feeling that he is not an outstanding diplomat. He has achieved success in some lines, yet I believe the consensus is that in so far as his recent service at Moscow is concerned, the Russians can claim much greater success in dealing with the United States than we can in dealing with the Soviet.

Those of us who were present as observers in Washington during the days when Foreign Commissar Litvinov met with President Roosevelt in the series of conferences that resulted in recognition of the Union of Soviet Socialistic Republics can not fail to recall how Mr. Bullitt labored to accomplish that recognition. It will be recalled as well that Mr. Bullitt insisted throughout these negotiations how trade would follow recognition. He urged that the 13-year old policy of non-recognition, held by Wilson, Harding, Coolidge and Hoover, should be cast aside in the interest of trade, predicting a great flow of commerce between the nations. President Roosevelt eventually made that the real basis for granting recognition.

None of the predicted trade has come about. None will be possible until the Soviet finds means of paying for American goods. American business men are a bit old fashioned. They want to be paid for what they sell.

After what some critics have called Mr. Bullitt's "dismal failure" at Moscow, he is promoted to the French post. The selection comes at a time when French internal politics are boiling. It comes likewise at a time when the Washington government is striving to expand American exports and when it is hoped that there will not be a further decline in outbound shipments such as official figures of the Department of Commerce show has taken place in trade with Russia.

Upsets Apple Cart

Senator James Couzens of Michigan who is up for re-election this fall has sort of upset the apple cart for the Republicans, although they profess not to be particularly worried. The senior senator from Michigan has always served in the senate as a Republican but now he makes the announcement that he is going to support President Roosevelt for re-election and that brings the senator's regularity as a Republican into question.

Senator Couzens has been a powerful man politically in Michigan in years past. He has served his city, Detroit, and his state and the nation in a distinguished way. Obviously, such service builds up an important political following but, according to superficial indication, no one knows exactly how much remains of that following. This statement assumes that the senator's strength is not as great as it used to be and all current information supports that view. Yet, in politics, nothing is certain and that is the reason why Senator Couzens's action has proved disturbing.

Former Gov. Wilbur M. Brucker is seeking the Republican nomination for the senate in Michigan and thus the incumbent has his difficulties in getting the nomination because the Democrats will have a candidate of their own. Be it said in favor of Senator Couzens, however, he was fair with the voters of his party by announcing before the primaries what his attitude would be respecting the presidential candidates and his sincerity in this regard may have some effect. On the other hand, it is difficult to say how dyed-in-the-wool Republicans can remain with Senator Couzens after an announcement by which he virtually has read himself out of the party.

Gunlock Ranch

SYNOPSIS

Sleepy Cat, desert town of the Southwest, is celebrating the Fourth of July. Jane Van Tambel, beautiful daughter of Gus Van Tambel, hated owner of Gunlock ranch, has arrived from the East for the first time. She watches the Frontier Day celebration in company with Dr. Carpy, crusty, tender-hearted friend of the community. Henry Sawdy of the Circle Dot ranch, tricked in a fake horse race the day before by Dave McCrossen, foreman at Gunlock, plans revenge. He enters Bill Denison, a handsome young Texas wrangler, in the rodeo which McCrossen is favored to win, and lays heavy bets on him. Unknown to the crowd, Denison is a champion horseman. McCrossen and the young stranger tie in the various events. Denison drops a cigarette carelessly. Racing down the track full tilt, he picks up the cigarette. The verdict goes to Denison when McCrossen refuses to attempt the stunt. Entreated by the crowd, Denison agrees to perform another trick. Jane is asked for her bracelet, and throws it on the track. Just as Denison rides to pick it up a yell from Barney Rebstock, a McCrossen henchman, scares the pony, nearly costing the rider his life. Gun play is prevented by the intervention of Dr. Carpy. Back on Gunlock ranch after two years in Chicago, because of her father's illness, Jane gets lost riding in the hills and meets Denison, now a neighbor, who guides her home. Not knowing her identity, he speaks bitterly of Van Tambel. She tells McCrossen who brought her home and he denounces Denison as a cattle thief. Later she asks Dr. Carpy why her father is unpopular and he tells her it is because of Van Tambel's ruthless and unscrupulous character. Later McCrossen tries to woo Jane, but is sharply rebuffed. Once again she loses her way in the hills and meets Denison. On impulse she gives him her bracelet for guiding her home. Their interest in each other growing, she reveals her identity to him. Jane is distressed to learn from Carpy that her father had wronged Denison. The Texan had worked at Gunlock as foreman and been promised a share in the profits. When he quit, Van Tambel reneged. In reprisal Denison has been running cattle off Gunlock ranch. Shamed and humiliated, Jane avoids Denison, but longs to see him. Then they meet by accident.

"For ever coming to this country at all, if you must know," she declared in angry desperation.

"But, Jane, that doesn't sound reasonable," protested her companion.

"I can't help that," she said petulantly. "I wish I'd never seen this country. And I'm going to leave it, the very first minute I get a chance. Don't see me any more. I don't want to see anybody till I can leave here."

"Just as you say, Jane. But if I can't see you any more, please remember that wherever you are, I love you."

Jane got home thinking of how wretchedly she had handled the situation with Denison.

It proved to be her foreman, McCrossen, who had been cut up in a gambling quarrel.

Jane kept Dr. Carpy for supper, and that evening she held him so long as she could. She felt down in the depths.

When he started for town, Jane walked out in the moonlight with him, talking and clinging to his hand. When he mounted, she still asked questions to keep him talking and kept his hand in hers.

"Jane," he said, "there's something hurting your mind, not your body. Do you want to tell me, girl?"

"Not tonight, doctor."

"Sometime, maybe—come to me just the same as if I were your father."

Her face fell against his hand. He felt on it the warmth of her tears. "Mustn't worry, my child. And if the load, whatever it is, gets too heavy—you know where to bring it," he added, wheeling away.

She had promised Dr. Carpy to ride every day, and while attending the wounded man he kept close tab on her, but she avoided the main trails and kept to the hills near the ranch house. Carpy brought little news from Sleepy Cat, but he spoke of the forest fires north of town.

"I hope we shan't be bothered here," said Jane.

"No danger here unless they cross the river. You haven't much timber on the east ranch. There's none to speak of over on the range. But you've got a lot scattered around here in the hills. If it should get down into the reservation timber, there would be hell to pay."

"How is McCrossen coming on, doctor?" asked Jane.

"He'll be up in a few days now. The infection is disappearing. How are you? You're the one I'm interested in."

"Following orders like a lamb, doctor. Don't you see how brown I'm getting?"

"Yes, outside. But what about inside? That's where I want you to get brown. By the way, your friend Bill Denison was in to see me the other day. He's been up north with the fire fighters—'way up on the Crazy Woman at Jim Laramie's ranch. Look here, girl," he continued, "what are you doing tomorrow? We are going to have a moose dinner. Ever eat moose? Come in and try it."

Jane hesitated, "Oh, I don't know—"

"Come along. There'll be nobody else there, if that's what you're afraid of?"

Sleepy Cat looked deserted when Jane rode in next day. She asked McAlpin at the barn where all the men were.

"Up north, fire fighting."

"Is it as bad as that?"

"I never saw it so bad in the twenty years I've lived here and at Calabasas! They brought in a wagonload yesterday of the worst burnt men I ever seen in my life. The hospital's pretty near full. Doc Carpy was there all night."

Jane was for going home. She walked up to the hotel and talked with Puss, the housekeeper. "Don't you go," counseled Puss. "If the doctor's expecting to see you, he'll be all upset if you don't stay."

"But with all these men in the hospital? I'd rather wait till he has a free day," suggested Jane.

The housekeeper laughed. "If you wait for a free day for the doctor, you'll wait till Judgment day. And he might be busier then than he is now. There's a preacher in town this week, baptizing folks down in the river. 'Cording to what he says, there'll be a lot more Sleepy Cat fire fighters needing help Judgment day than is needin' it now. Come in here and take off your things."

When Jane sat down with the doctor in his private dining room for the moose dinner, he made light of the fire situation as well as of his labors.

"All in the day's work. Puss is an alarmist. She's always telling me I'm working too hard."

Jane repeated the anecdote of the preacher and Puss' application of it to the doctor himself on Judgment day.

Carpy laughed "That's Panama she's talking about. Puss is powerful afraid of him . . . Who is he? Why, a pretty good fellow—used to be an auctioneer and all-round gambler—got converted—preaches up and down the line from Medicine Bend to Sleepy Cat. But he volunteered for fire fighting. He's one of the men got burnt yesterday, and he's up with the rest of 'em at the hospital.

The ex-sheriff, Bill Pardaloe, rode out to Gunlock two days later and conscripted the men to fight fire coming down the Crazy Woman and threatening Sleepy Cat.

The quiet of that day and the next was like a calm before a storm. After supper Jane ordered her pony saddled and rode clear up to the summit of Gunlock Knob, where she could see the northern country for many miles.

When she reached the top she was sorry she had attempted the climb. The spectacle was awe-inspiring, but terrifying.

Far beyond the hills and all along the northern horizon she saw patches of dull, silent red, slowly rising and falling, at moments increasing, and again subsiding.

She fell asleep early, but after midnight she woke. The sky was fairly clear, and she could hear the wind singing in the pines about the ranch house. She was roused from her thoughts by the approaching clatter of galloping hoofs. Raising herself to support her head on her elbow, she listened. The clatter came nearer, the galloping faster. In a moment she heard a man pull his horse sharply up and spring from the saddle under her window. "Miss Jane!" he called. "Wake up, please!"

She knew the voice. "I'm awake, Bull. What is it?"

"The boys are ridin' in behind me."

"All of them?"

"Everybody. They'll be here inside twenty minutes."

"What time is it, Bull?"

"From the moon, about two o'clock. The boys'll want somethin' to eat. They're ridin' right out again. I'll call Quong."

"What's the matter, Bull—what are they riding out again for?"

"The fire has crossed the river."

CHAPTER VI

BULL PAGE, the messenger of alarm, turned in with Quong and Jane to make ready a hasty supper for the hungry, weary men.

While Jane asked questions, McCrossen lighted a cigarette. "Not a bit of danger, Jane, to Gunlock—not while I can get out on the fire line, anyway. I've fought these infernal blazes all my life, and I don't figure this one's goin' to beat me. The only thing that worries me, Jane, is to think of your bein' here alone at home while we're firefightin'."

"Of course, I can't help some worry now, with the ranch threatened," she returned thoughtfully.

"Jane," he said impressively, "you needn't worry. I like to fight for a girl like you. While I'm able to raise an arm, Jane, I'll be out there thinkin' of you." His hands closed firmly on her shoulders.

She shrugged them and edged uneasily away. "Saddles, boys!" shouted McCrossen in his rich, hearty voice. "Look alive, there, everybody! Come over to where my horse is, Jane. I want you to say good-by to us! Give the boys a word of cheer."

"Where are you going?" she asked.

"Over the Divide. I want to do some backfirin' north of the pastures. Come along, girl," he insisted, taking her arm firmly.

All at once he caught her in a vise-like grip of his arms and kissed her twice before she could escape. She slapped him indignantly and pushed him violently away.

McCrossen laughed. "Slap me again, Jane; that was worth a string of slaps, girl. But why not take a little practice? You'd get to like it, same as I do!"

Toward the night of the second day, the fire crew straggled back to the ranch house, McCrossen at their head.

Next morning, the sun rose hot and in an atmosphere without a breath of wind. Faces were brighter.

But after breakfast, the mail carrier, Ignace, from the Reservation, on his way to town, brought disquieting news. A fire had broken out in the timber along the eastern boundary, and every buck had been called out to fight it.

McCrossen listened carefully. "Which way was the wind, Ignace, when you left?"

"From the east."

"Hell's bells," exclaimed McCrossen "just where we don't want it." He questioned the carrier closely. The big ranch was now threatened on the southeast, and McCrossen started with the freshest of his men for the new danger point.

In the afternoon Jane rode into town to order some supplies sent out. While she was in Rubido's store, a white man from the Reservation came in. The clerk who waited on him asked him about the fires down his way.

"Not so good," said the man. "A new one broke out this morning between the Reservation timber and Bill Denison's ranch. Bill's in getting men together now."

Jane, in another aisle and unobserved, walked quietly outdoors and down the street for McAlpin's livery barn.

"Mose," she said to the hostler on duty, "is Bill Denison in town?"

"He is. His horse, Music, is here—Bill rode in pretty fast, an' I been rubbin' Music down. Bill says—"

"Mose, I want to see Bill. Go up the street and see if you can find him. Tell him I want to see him and I'll be up at the hotel.

Half an hour later Jane, sitting with the door open in Dr. Carpy's office, off the hotel lobby, heard footsteps approaching and, turning, saw Denison. She rose quickly, extended her hand, took his without a greeting, and spoke rapidly and nervously. "I heard you were in town," she said, "and that you were in danger at the ranch—I suppose, for that matter, we all are. But they said you were taking out men, and I wanted to see you, Bill, and ask what we could do to help. You won't take that amiss, I'm sure."

"How could I take anything amiss from you?"

"In a common danger," she said, flushing in some confusion and interrupting him to hide it.

"What can we do at the ranch to help make you safe? Is there anything, Bill? Anything to help?"

Both were conscious of slight strain. Denison shuffled awkwardly. "Why, Miss Jane—"

"Since when Miss Jane?" she asked with asperity.

"I didn't know—" he began.

"Neither did I know, Bill. Now answer my question. If you're in danger, tell me what I can do."

"Have the boys keep a close eye on the two Reservation fires. If either of 'em get around Gunlock Knob, it'll be kind of bad for both ranches."

"Yes, but, Bill, how am I to know when or whether they do get around the Knob? How am I going to know whether you yourself need help?" She was beginning to realize that it was impossible to get anything but evasive generalities out of him. "Tell me this: If you need help from us, will you send me word? Right away?"

He thought for a moment. "I'll send word over to you at the ranch house, Jane."

She could not escape the significance of his tone in uttering her name. But she kept her balance and spoke steadily:

"Keep your promise, Bill: I shall be waiting for the word when it comes."

Along the hill trail as Jane rode home the air was heavy with smoke drifting slowly up from the south. It was laden with the pungent smell of brush fire and acrid with the creosote of burned slashings from cut-over lands on the Reservation.

Reaching home, she was not surprised to find everything there abnormally quiet. McCrossen, with most of the men, was up in the hills. The sole exception to the general atmospheric gloom was Quong.

When Jane dressed at daybreak and looked out, the wind had shifted and was blowing fresh from the south.

McCrossen and his men were up betimes. He reported to Jane that they had checked the fire up toward the pass. He was in good spirits. Jane went to her breakfast feeling reassured. She was finishing her coffee when Quong stuck his head through the kitchen door into the dining room and said. "Man to see!"

Jane walked to the front door and found a man on horseback.

"What can I do for you?"

"I've just come from Bill Denison's. He says if you can spare a dozen men quick, he can, maybe, save his ranch buildings."

"Tell him I'll do everything I can to get them over right away. What's your name?"

"Scott, ma'am."

Jane ran over to the corral, where McCrossen was closing the wire gate.

"Bill Denison has sent a messenger over—"

"I saw him," interjected McCrossen curtly.

"—asking for help," Jane went on rapidly. 'If we can get a dozen men over to him quick, he can save his ranch buildings—"

"A lot of gall, ain't it, Bill Denison lookin' to Gunlock for help?"

"No matter what differences there have been," insisted Jane firmly, "in the hills we're all going to stand together in a time like this. Get the men together, Dave, and get over quick and do what you can."

McCrossen, drawing from his pocket a plug of tobacco, bit off a chunk. "I don't approve of that."

"It's not a question of your approving, Dave, I want you to go. Right off; now!"

McCrossen was in no hurry. "Who's goin' to look after Gunlock if I go over to Bill Denison's?" he asked, regarding Jane sullenly.

Jane was nobody's fool on the danger of the situation.

"Dave," she exclaimed, impatiently, "you know the worst threat to us, with this wind, is from the south. If the Denison ranch burns we're in danger ourselves. Will you saddle up quick and get over there with the boys?" she demanded.

McCrossen made no move to go. "I'll tell you right now I've had a damned sight more experience in these forest fires than you have. And I say my place's right here!" He spoke loudly and angrily.

Jane grew white. "I want you to know I'm boss of this ranch. My father has told you so—and this order is going to be obeyed or I'll know the reason why."

McCrossen faced her with as much animosity as he dared show. "Well, if you want to know one reason why your order won't be obeyed, just look at me—I'm a reason. I know where my place is when Gunlock's in danger," he thundered.

"Stop your talk!" exclaimed Jane. "Will you do as I tell you or not?'

"I will not."

"Then you're discharged as foreman of this ranch. Take your things and get off it by tomorrow morning."

"Like hell I will."

Half a dozen cowboys had edged up to listen to the controversy. Jane whirled around to them. "Boys," she said, speaking in lower but very determined tones, "take no more orders from David McCrossen. He's no longer foreman here."

Reeling off her words rapidly and firmly, Jane explained the situation to her growing circle of listeners. "Now I have discharged McCrossen," she said in conclusion, "and I want all of you boys who are loyal to me to ride with me over to the fire line on the Denison ranch and see what we can do to save his buildings. Those of you who will go, line up here with me."

One of the boys, Bull Page, stepped promptly to Jane's side. Before he reached it, four more were on their way. Barney Rebstock and a crony stood still. It meant that they sided with the foreman.

"Now, Bull," she added snappily, "hunt up as many of the other boys as you can find and let's get going."

Within a few minutes, with the ponies dancing and the men shouting, a party of ten headed south for the Denison ranch.

Not until they reached the last crest of the hills separating the two ranches and Jane looked over on the lowlands of the smaller ranch, did she catch her breath in sudden fear. In the distance she saw a formidable wall of white smoke billowing into the sky.

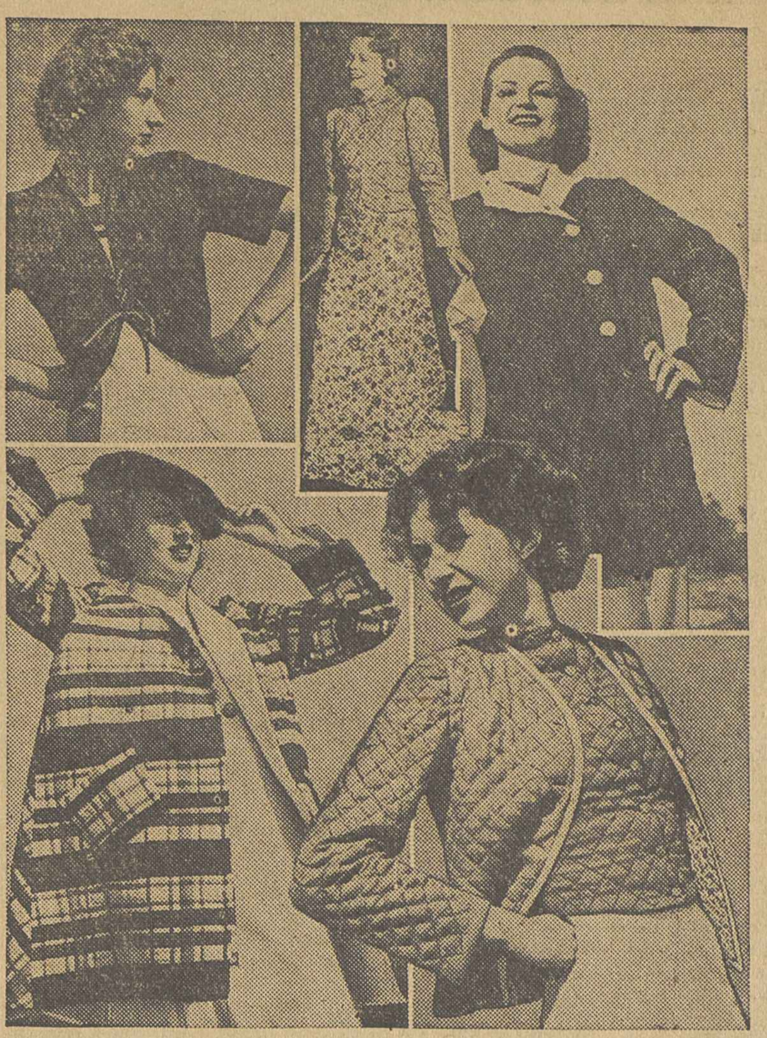
Soap Plants

Of the numerous kinds of soap plants that were once extensively used for washing because of their unusual emulsifying and cleansing properties, probably the most interesting is a tree which grows in tropical America. Its pulpy fruit is said to clean as much linen as sixty times its weight of manufactured soap.

Flair for Hand-Quilted Fashions

By CHERIE NICHOLAS



UP TO comparatively a short time ago handquilting was regarded as a form of needlework to be utilized and reserved for luxurious intimate apparel, robes, bedjackets, negligees and such. The thought no longer holds good. The emergence of hand-quilting from boudoir environs becomes a high-style event—the dawn of a new era for this exquisite needle work.

That faithful perennial back-to-college clothes problem is with us again. By way of a new and interesting approach to the subject suppose we talk about the perfectly fascinating hand-quilted sports coats and evening jackets such as are now pridefully showing in shops that make boast of being ever "first" in fashion.

Tuck away one or more of these cunning and chic hand-quilted garments in your back-to-school wardrobe. Wear 'em on the campus and to parties and proms and you will excite the admiration and envy of the whole college. If you think this is an exaggerated way of putting it, please take one long look at the hand-quilted fashions here pictured. The argument is closed, n'est ce pas?

Hand-quilting really dates back to early history, some of the oldest pieces originating in China and India. In the general art revival of the Renaissance period Trapunto quilting came into exisetnce, the same accomplished by quilting the design in double lines, raising the space between into a bas relief effect by drawing through wisps of soft wool to form a padding.

Women especially in north of England and in northern Italy created unusually artistic and original pieces of hand-quilting. Via the English route the art of quilting was brought over by the English settlers whose descendants, farmers' wives, living in the mountains of Kentucky carry on the work today.

Visioning the possibilities in this attractive handiwork, current style creators have put experts in voguish costume design at the service of native workers and thus is added to hand-quilted garments now showing in the shops.

The new sport coats and evening jackets now featuring in the fashion picture are made mostly of hand-blocked linens, cottons, smart satins, sheer woolens and dainty challis. There are flowery prints, geometrical designs, checks and plaids as well as plain colors in flattering combinations.

The stunning swagger coat in the picture is made of hand-blocked challis in brilliant plaid. It is lined with plain linen. Just the thing for campus wear or to stroll about town on an early coolish autumn day.

The good-looking model to the right at the top makes an ideal knockabout country club coat. The original was done in brown lines. The pronounced vogue for satin this fall bespeaks the appeal of a hand-quilted coat thereof fashioned in like manner.

The sports cardigan "set" shown in foreground is of bright monotone fabric lined with a gay print, the complementary waistcoat being of match-color pique with silver coin buttons to add to its lure. The evening jacket (in panel) is in a Trapunto design on silk-finished linen with contrasting lining. This model comes in exquisite Chinese colorings. A perfect accessory to complete an autumn campus frock is shown to left above. This roundabout jacket is reversible and has contrasting lacing.

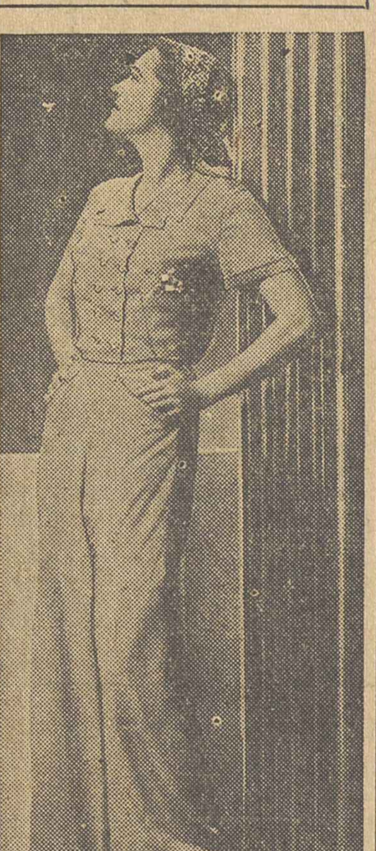
TAILORED SILK

By CHERIE NICHOLAS



Emphasis is on the tailored theme for pajama costumes. The pajamas pictured is typical. This two-piece is tailored of gray silk shantung with glove stitching to give it fine finesse. This model is not only good to wear at a resort or at countryside, one may even drop in to see a friend and wear this conservatively styled pajama costume with perfect propriety.

LOOKING AHEAD TO COATS FOR WINTER

Those who prefer to ignore the heat by focusing their thoughts on the winter and fur coats will find sufficient different styles in the shops to keep them guessing for hours as to which is the most important. If they're wise they'll choose the most becoming silhouette and forget about the others.

Outstanding in fur fashions is the flared silhouette, the width of hemline contrasted with the slenderness of the waistline. A coat of this type is obviously dressy, so the busy woman may prefer to pass it by in favor of a straightline "topcoat" model which proves serviceable from morning until night.

Fall Hosiery to Glisten in Bright Copper Tones

A penny—or rather a copper—for your thoughts if you're thinking of colors that are good in hosiery at the moment. The copper tones are important—shades that glisten with the bright bronze of a new penny, or of your burnished copper teakettle. The copper casts will continue into the fall, the fashion makers tell us, because they consort so well with the new autumn colors in fabrics and shoes. New taupes and grays are also coming into the picture.

Wine Tones Are Popular in Fashions for Autumn

The prominence of wine tones, grapes and vintage greens in the first fall fashions springs from the Exposition Vinecole at the Tuileries in Paris.

American women have already caught this Bacchanalian note in fashion. Evidences of its presence are seen in clusters of grapes worn in the hair for evening, wine colors in the first fall hats and leaf motifs in trimming.

The Montevallo Times

PUBLISHED ON THURSDAY

W. M. WYATT, Publisher

Subscription - - - - $1.00

Published weekly in the Masonic Building on Main Street. "Entered as second-class matter, April 1, 1933, at the Post Office at Montevallo, Ala., under the Act of Congress, March 3, 1879."

BEST WISHES

The Times extends congratulations and best wishes to Rev. Burns and Mrs. Burns. But we don't much like it because they slipped off and got married without letting anybody around home know about it. So well did they guard their little secret that we didn't even know about it in time to publish it in last week's Times, although they were married on Saturday before. But we did find it out at last, thanks to the Christian Advocate.

MISS ALICE BOYD

Montevallo mourns the death of Miss Alice Boyd, who for thirteen years has been an important part of our public school administration.

Serving ceaselessly here during those years in our school, this able and efficient woman grew into the lives and hearts of the people. Her excellent traits of character, her noble examples of life, are as good seed planted in fertile fields—the hearts and minds of our youth. Good fruit will be borne therefrom in the years to come.

Our community has lost one whose value is beyond estimate—and we mourn her departure

WE WANT MORE OF THEM

This week a friend sent us a long list of local news items saying "Please publish these items, as I am very much interested in The Times, especially the local news items." Thank you, and permit us to say that The Times is very much interested in friends, especially the kind who send us news items to print.

There is only one thing lacking about this friend's contributions. We would like to have the name of all who send us items for publication.

State Capitol News

Montgomery, Ala. — Declaring that Roosevelt has done more for Alabama than any other President in history, Judge Matt A. Boykin, of Mobile, chairman of the Alabama Democratic Electors' committee, has appealed to all Democrats to contribute their share to the national campaign fund for the reelection of Roosevelt.

At the same time Judge Boykin announced the organization of the Alabama Democratic Electors committee, which will lead the movement for the collection of the campaign fund and will be maintained as a permanent organization to assist the Democratic party in carrying out its program.

Prominent citizens of all sections of the State have accepted offices on the committee. In addition to 13 vice-chairmen, each Congressional district will have a district chairman, each county a county chairman, and an organization will be formed in each voting precinct.

Those who have accepted appointment as vice-chairman are John J. Kohn, Jr., and Mayor William A. Gunter, of Montgomery; John C. Persons and William S. Pritchard, of Birmingham; E. W. Pettus, Selma; Charles E. Carmichael, Tuscumbia; Adolph Reich, Gadsden; Thomas E. Buntin, Dothan; James J. Mayfield, Tuscaloosa; Senator Hardy Riddle, Talladega, and Representative Harry Hodges, Fayette.

Pitt Tyson Maner, Montgomery, secretary to Governor Graves has been selected committee secretary, while John P. Courtney, Mobile, has been named treasurer. Charles R. Raney, Cullfan, has been named coordinator of activities, and the following persons have been named special representatives to assist in the formation of local committees in the counties: William H. Holcombe, Mobile; Cyrus B. Brown, and J. W. Heustess, Montgomery, and Matt H. Murphy, Birmingham.

Chairman of the various Congressional districts follow: First, George Pegram, Linden; Second, Webb Stanley, Greenville; third, Charles S. McDowell, Jr., Eufaula; fourth, George C. Blanton, Selma; fifth, B. T. Kinney, Cullman; sixth, R. C. Price, Tuscaloosa; seventh, J. C. Inzer, Gadsden; eighth, Seaborne Lynne, Decatur, and ninth, F. R. Matthews, Birmingham.

State headquarters have been opened at the Battle House, Mobile, and subheadquarters at the Exchange Hotel, Montgomery.

"Alabama must do her part in the reelection of our beloved President," said Chairman Boykin in his first statement. "He has done more for Alabama than any president and it is our time to show our appreciation and gratitude by cooperating in this drive for funds which are so essential in conducting this campaign." Judge Boykin pointed that Alabama's contribution will be used in financing the campaign in some of the states that have been regarded as doubtful. He announced that Robert H. Clarke, divisional director of the party's finance committee, has been assigned to Alabama and will assist the local committee in perfecting its organization and in obtaining Alabama's quota.

Alabama's cotton crop made splendid progress during the past week, and other crops, except in some northern counties were "fair to good" for this season, according to E. D. Emigh, U. S. Meterologist here.

"Excepting light to locally moderate rainfall on Friday, Aug. 28, followed by cool weather, the week was dry and temperatures were considerably above normal," he said, "sunshine was abundant and cotton made good to very good progress. It opened fast and is geing picked and ginned rapidly, the staple being of good quality and the crop is mostly good to very good condition.

Crops other than cotton need rain in northern counties, but over the State as a whole pastures are above average for the season, the sweet potato crop is good, corn fair to very good with the average good, truck fair to good, and Irish potatoes and other recently planted vegetables doing well. Legumes and miscellaneous farm crops are growing nicely except in the dry area."

License fee and tax collections of the State Bureau of Insurance for the 9 months of this year were $918,046.25, exceeding the receipts for the entire 12 months of 1935 by almost 25 per cent, according to State Superintendent of Insurance Frank N. Julian.

Total collections for 1935 were $755,436.06, and $691,810.60 for 1934, Julian stated. Escaped revenue collected by the Bureau this year far exceeds the entire operating expense of the department.

In addition to Alabama's $4,000,000 "three-way" highway construction program now in full swing, 15 regular state and Federal aid road and bridge building projects totaling $1,086510.06 have been approved by the State Highway Department since Aug. 1, and contracts aggregating more than half that amount have already been awarded, according to announcement by Gaston Scott, chairman of the Highway Commission.

Contracts totaling over $200,000 for which low bids have been announced will probably be awarded this week, Scott said. Three construction projects in Marion, Dallas and Barbour counties estimated to cost approximately $215,000 await the formal approval of the U. S. Bureau of Public Roads and are expected to be released soon.

Bids will be opened Sept. 17 on grading and draining 1.476 miles of the Fayette-Townley road and construction of a bridge on the same road spanning Sipsey river. The project will cost about $75,000.

"Despite the approach of winter the department is exerting every effort to match available Federal aid funds," Scott said. "Of the total cost of the projects approved and pending since Aug. 1, the State's share is $292,196.93, while the Federal government will pay $794,313.13. This does not include any part of the "two-way" and "three-way" building programs."

All funds for the State's share of the roadway construction are derived from gasoline tax receipts.

An inventory of the "three-way" road building program which is financed equally by the Federal, State and county governments shows 60 projects under construction in 40 counties on 492 miles of roadways, according to H. H. Houk, chief engineer of the highway department. Practically all "three-way" construction work is done by WPA and "relief" labor, Houk pointed out.

Contracts awarded from Aug. 1 through Sept. 4 on the regular State and Federal aid program are:

Talladega county: (2 projects) 7.907 miles grading, draining and bituminous surface treatment between Talladega and Sylacauga; R. T. Smith, Tallapoosa, Ga., contractor, $206,535.89, cost divided equally by State and Federal governments.

Talking Fish at Expo

DALLAS, Tex.—Now it's the talking catfish.

Two of this type of catfish were received recently at the Texas Centennial Exposition Aquarium.

They won that cognomen because of the peculiar noises they make when they are taken from the water.

The fish were discovered in the Amazon river, and procured by the Aquarium from a New York importer.

EBENEZER NEWS

A very interesting event was the birthday of Uncle Ziebe Henton, which was given at Ebenezer Church Sunday. Those joining him were his relatives and many, many of his old friends. You Do Not Hesitate When Disease Threatens

Eyestrain, too,

PICKS ITS VICTIMS YOUNG!

When disease epidemics threaten with their ravishing after-effects, you do not hesitate to take every precaution to protect your child.

Not so spectacular in its damage, but frequently a life-wrecker just the same, is eyestrain.

NOW IS THE TIME TO DO SOMETHING ABOUT IT

Eyestrain Is Easily Preventable

Eyestrain usually is caused by one of three things (1) Defective eyes; (2) Using normal eyes in poor light; (3) Failure to rest the eyes when they are tired.

Only an eyesight specialist can correct defective vision, but even that will not eliminate eyestrain if the child must continue to try to see in poor or insufficient light. Enough light of the right kind is the ONLY thing which will avoid eyestrain for the child or adult with normal or corrected vision.

New Ford V-8 Made Test Record

Operating 4 hours a day for four days over the famous memorial highway connecting Washington and Mount Vernon, Virginia, Washington's ancestral home, a stock Ford V-8 sedan has just completed an economy run, supervised by the Contest Board of the American Automobile Association, in which a fuel economy record of 22.789 miles per gallon was established, according to information received here today by local Ford dealers.

The test covered 2,764 miles and was conducted at an average driving speed of 29.727 miles per hour, according to the certificate of performance just issued by the A.A.A. Contest Board. Oil economy performance was at the rate of 1,387.82 miles per quart, the records showed.

Most important feature of the test was the fact that througout the drivers, under direction of the A. A. A., were subject to all local traffic and speed regulations including the necessary frequent stops and starts at traffic lights and other intersections. In this way average driving conditions were duplicated. A total of 152 traffic light stops were made.

In the entire four days of operations, which included 92.237 hours running time and 3.763 hours for refueling and other servicing, total of 121.313 gallons of gasoline were used. No water was added during the period of the test and no repairs were required, the certificate stated.

Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Mahan and son, Michael, have returned from a vacation in Panama City, Florida.

Facts About the Telephone

Ecuador is the only country in South America that has no dial telephones.

More than 25,000,000 copies of telephone directories are distributed annually to Bell System subscribers.

New York's first telephone directory which carried telephone numbers was published in 1880. It contained 2,800 listings.

The world's first radio telephone service, between Los Angeles and Santa Catalina Island, Cal., was opened to the public on July 16, 1920. It was subsequently replaced by a submarine telephone cable.

During the height of the floods of last spring, telephone calls between Springfield and Northampton, Mass., which cost 16 cents, were routed via Boston, New York and Albany, over lines or through the territories of four Bell System telephone companies.

'What Does It Prove' Bout Gives Sailor $30,000 for Trouble

WHILE beating his Basque Woodchopper par in slapping over the Boston Bartender at Yankee Stadium, Joe Jouis was far short of his top Chicago Kingfish performance. Yet, even though it took one minute and two seconds of the third round before he could convince a trembly-legged, eye-scarred, thirty-three-year-old veteran that he had enough, this falling short of perfection should not be held against Joe. He did the job assigned to him and probably the whole Vassar Daisy Chain team could not have done it any better.

Jack Sharkey.

Whether he is, by any chance, the same gifted athlete he was before the Schmeling mistake is something that need not be gone into here. Certainly he entered the ring more blithely than for any other New York appearance up to date. Even before he got his first glimpse of that dreadful Sharkey man, who, by the way was the round-heeled riot of two rounds and 1.02 later, he was grinning.

That, of course, may have been because he was getting his first glimpse of Leon Kettchel, the human beanpole who some day may be stood up to be bowled over in the same alley and under the same benevolent auspices as last night. It also might have been because a youngster, whose best ballyhooers had been doing masterpieces about his "shellshocked" reactions, was at last coming to realize that instead of going into a battle he was facing a pink tea.

Anyhow it hardly matters. Keeping his right up high, as he did not against the fairly young and fairly agile Schmeling, Louis started slowly. Perhaps a punch into those whiskers he has never yet had time to grow might have caused him some inconvenience and slowed him up even more. But, even though the leaden-footed, half-bald Sharkey made some motions, which indicated that Joe still has a bit to learn before being better than even money against such two-legged gents as Ettore, Pastor and John Henry Lewis, nothing much happened.

Sharkey went through the first round as if surprised that the bad news was so long delayed. So, he pawed his bemused way into the second round, scarcely landing a blow. He went down from a right to the jaw, got up and went down again shortly thereafter from a right, a left and a feeling of futility. In the third round he again was bowled over twice, once sprawling over the lower strand of ropes.

After this he got up. He was not as badly beaten as was Louis in the Schmeling fight and it is probable that he expected to go on. But Referee Donovan had already counted ten. So that was that. The battle of "What Does It Prove?" was over and, even though the radio and movie concessionaires may squawk to the high heavens, there will be no rematch. Sharkey now can go back to Boston and impatient customers who have been screaming can get some service again.

Sloughed Sailor Need Have No Regrets

While explaining how he held the Brown Bomber to a mere count of ten kayo three years after the stalwart Carnera won the championship from him by means of a slashing, lone uppercut, the sloughed sailor need have no regrets, though. He got a very handsome $30,928 for his scant moments of light exercise. So he departs with the pleasant feeling that in a town where 6,000,000 people take daily chances of being bowled over by autos, merely because they cannot afford carfare, at least 6,000,000 people are envying his pretty opportunity and his bright reward.

Not in the Box Score:

Dartmouth football fans are worried about Mutt Ray, who recently underwent a back operation. The crack center is far from right and chances are he will see little action this fall. The two star guards, Latta McCray, severely injured in a skiing accident, and Joe Hanrahan, who was stopped by the June exams, also may be unavailable.

Animated Cartoon in 1831

Five years after the discovery of the persistence of vision in 1826 by Peter Mark Roget, the first attempts were made to show motion pictorially by a series of drawings. With a device called Phenakistoscope, invented by Joseph Antoine Plateau, motion was depicted by a series of drawings, 14 in number.

This was followed by the Daedaleum, or wheel of the devil, invented by William George Horner in England in 1834. It consisted of a cylinder into which strips of paper were inserted depicting scenes such as a child jumping rope, a man pumping water, etc. The wheel of life, a similar device, was introduced into the United States by William Lincoln and was patented on April 23, 1867.—Washington Star.

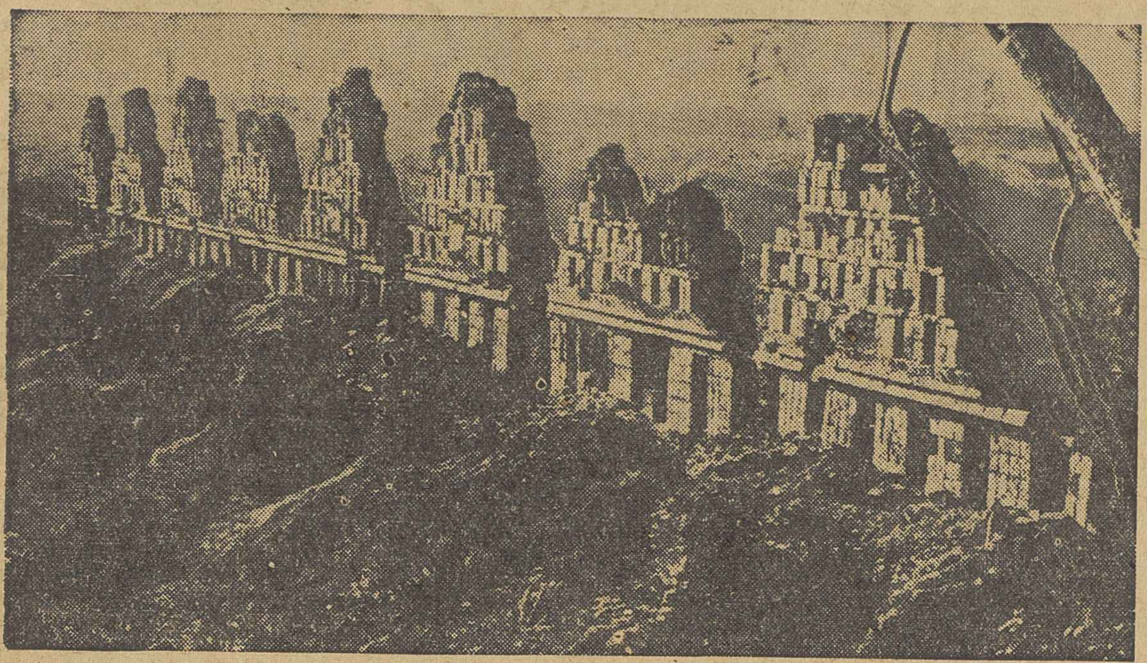
Ancient Ruins Throw Light Upon Mayan Indian Civilization; Old Sculpture Reveals Rare Sense of Humor.



Ruins of Buildings in the Nunnery Quadrangle at Uxmal, Yucatan.

By WILLIAM C. UTLEY

IN THE "Hills of the Dead," long-forgotten slopes of the back country in Guatemala, the picks and shovels of archeologists from the Carnegie Institution of Washington, D. C., are discovering new answers to many mysteries of one of the most brilliant of early American civilizations. Under the direction of Dr. A. V. Kidder, these explorers into the past have come upon important new relics left hundreds of years ago by the Maya Indians.

The Mayas challenge the best minds of science. The civilization they achieved received no assistance from the Old World. It is—or was—America's own.

The Mayas were proficient astronomers. They perfected writing, sculpture and architecture to a high degree. They conducted their affairs under an efficiently organized government. Science is still at a loss to explain how they reached the high cultural achievements which they did, but the patient researches of archeological groups may some day find the answer to the riddle.

"Of first importance," according to the Carnegie archeologists, are the findings in Guatemalan hills, although they have not yet been completely analyzed. It is hoped that they may eventually reveal the whole fascinating story.

Find Four Tombs.

The area now being explored is no more than a mile and a half long, but it contains 100 mounds, beneath which are the ruins of a large Mayan community. Farmers of the region call the site Milaflores, but the Carnegie people intend to name it Kaminaljuyu, the Queche Indian for "Hills of the Dead."

Three important tombs of ancient American rulers have already been opened here, and a fourth is to be opened soon. From the evidences revealed concerning the burial practices of the Mayas, much about their civilization is learned.

"It will take months to get the collection in shape," says Doctor Kidder, "but it will prove a tremendous addition to our knowledge of Maya life, ceremony, dress and art."

Opening one tomb, the archeologists found in its center the figure of a middle-aged priest or noble, who had been left sitting cross-legged there many centuries ago. Jade beads and pendants, handsomely carved, ear plugs and ornaments of crystal and shell, together with a pile of pottery found beside the remains, gave evidence of pompous burial.

Pile Up Pyramids.

At the feet of the skeleton was found another—a slave girl entombed to wait upon her master in the world beyond. Even the dead man's small dog was sent on the long journey with him, for in a corner of the room its skeleton was also found. There were vessels for serving food and millstones to grind the heavenly corn.

The Mayas had a peculiar practice in building their tomb. One pyramid was built upon another, like a nest of jars or boxes. It is believed from the location and formation of the tombs that when one of these priests or rulers died, he was placed in a tomb covered by a pyramid which had been associated with him, indeed one which in all probability he had built himself. When the next in line died, it appears, another pyramid was built, over the first. In the recent Carnegie findings there are four tombs and four layers of pyramids.

Guatemala's lowland jungles, where most of the preceding Mayan discoveries have been made, have already been pretty thoroughly explored. But the new discoveries are in the highlands, and for that reason it is believed they may open up entire new fields of discovery. Though the pyramids were more or less common in the lowlands, this is the first to be found in the hills.

Progressive periods of the Mayan civilization, which may help to trace it back to its mysterious beginnings, are revealed in the new findings. Dr. Kidder has already discovered stratification of buildings. From the various levels of the earth have come generous quantities of pottery which definitely represents a sequence, telling something of the culture of the people over successive eras.

The pyramids belong to a period known as the Old Empire, which is of somewhat later date, flourishing during the early centuries of the Christian era. This empire included many cities in Guatemala, Honduras and southern Yucatan.

The new discoveries bear out the prediction made by Dr. Kidder a year ago, when he said:

"Apparently the highland region was much more of a highway for trade and migration than the densely jungled lowland country. Consequently intensive work on the sites of the region can be expected to provide extremely valuable information as to the chronological interrelation of the various ancient cultures, particularly as it is probable that stratified remains will be discovered."

Stone Art Reveals Humor.

The art of the ancient Mayas is notable not only for its skillful execution, but for the evidence it gives of a sophisticated understanding of human nature—and above all, a delightful sense of humor.

What some critics declare to be the finest specimen of Mayan art in stone was recently discovered by an expedition sponsored by the University museum of the University of Pennsylvania. The stone lintel was the work of an unknown sculptor. In Mayan hieroglyphics were six dates, none of them later than Dec. 2, 757 A. D., according to Dr. J. Alden Mason, of the expedition.

Particularly amusing is the old sculpture in this, a political year. For the scene which it treats is apparently some sort of meeting in the council chamber of a governmental body, and the characters are listening to one of their number as he delivers a speech. That political oratory, then as now, was flavored with a generous helping of plain hooey is evident from the antics and postures of the listeners while the speaker is "waving the flag" in traditional enthusiasm and gusto.

Expert Reconstructs Original.

Now it has long been the custom of sculptors to present such occasions as full of dignity and always working smoothly. But here was a chisel-wielding wag who knew better and did not hesitate to interpret his characters as he knew them, even though his work was to decorate the doorway of a beautiful and dignified temple.

When it was found, the sculpture was badly worn and damaged, but attempts have been made to reconstruct it. Broken lines have been extended with the aid of the many remaining cues to poses and costumes, by Miss M. Louise Baker, expert on archeological art, who is able to visualize the complete scene in its original state.

In the bulletin of the university museum, Miss Baker directs attention to some of the amusing points of the work.

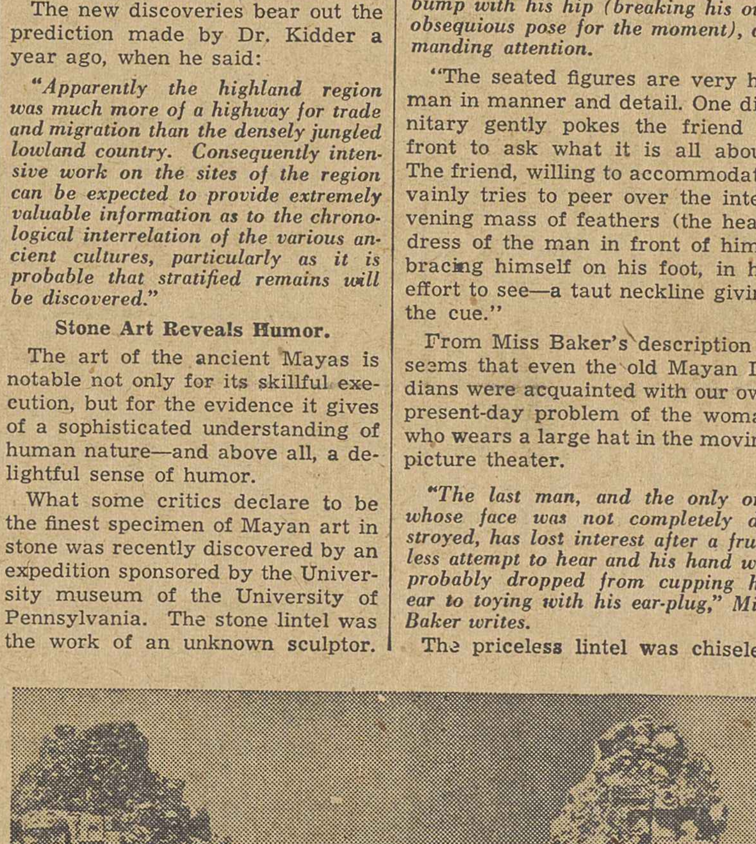
"Two of the trio," she writes, indicating a little group in the picture, "forgetful of the occasion, are entirely absorbed in their own argument, while the third, indignantly bracing himself upon outspread feet, gives a vicious bump with his hip (breaking his own obsequious pose for the moment), demanding attention.

"The seated figures are very human in manner and detail. One dignitary gently pokes the friend in front to ask what it is all about. The friend, willing to accommodate, vainly tries to peer over the intervening mass of feathers (the headdress of the man in front of him), bracing himself on his foot, in his effort to see—a taut neckline giving the cue."

From Miss Baker's description it seems that even the old Mayan Indians were acquainted with our own present-day problem of the woman who wears a large hat in the moving picture theater.

"The last man, and the only one whose face was not completely destroyed, has lost interest after a fruitless attempt to hear and his hand was probably dropped from cupping his ear to toying with his ear-plug," Miss Baker writes.

The priceless lintel was chiseled from buff-colored limestone. It is two feet high and a little over four feet long. Modern knowledge of the ancient Mayan civilization profits not only from the demonstrated mannerisms of the characters, but from the clothing and the objects held by the Indians.



Roof Comb of the "House of Pigeons," an Ancient Mayan Ruin at Uxmal, Yucatan.

Replica of Nunnery.

"The original must be seen to be appreciated," Miss Baker writes. It shows in perfect detail even the fingernails on the hand of the chief.

According to Dr. Mason, the clothing is "Greek in quality."

American interest in the ancient Mayan civilization was greatly stimulated in 1933 and 1934, when millions of persons who visited A Century of Progress exposition in Chicago inspected exhibits prepared by Tulane university. Reproduced in exact detail, and beautiful in its brilliant coloring, was an ancient nunnery, remains of which were discovered at Uxmal, in the Mayan country.

Farm Drainage Is a Timely Subject

Properly Maintained System Is Especially Needed, Says an Expert.

By H. D. Fritz, Extension Specialist, University of Illinois. —WNU Service.

Although Illinois farmers have an investment in public drainage systems and private drainage improvements estimated at $150,000,000, this investment in recent years has been taken for granted by the average farmer, and the maintenance of drainage improvements has been neglected.

Proper maintenance of drainage systems is especially urgent now if farmers are to make the most of the soil improvement practices advocated under the new soil conservation program. In the new program legumes occupy an important place, and these crops must have a well drained soil. Application of limestone is another practice recommended in the new plan. To be of maximum benefit in making a good stand of legumes possible, limestone applications must be preceded by good drainage.

Individual farmers can improve and aid in maintaining their farm drainage systems by careful inspection and correction of any defects that may be present. Most damage to crops from lack of drainage will be avoided if the outlet channel into which the drainage system discharges is open, is large enough and has sufficient fall to carry away flood water and surface water.

An inspection of the tile drain outlet will reveal any damage by freezing and thawing, erosion, silting and stoppage by any cause. Surface inlets and catch basins also require periodic inspection. It is recommended that each farmer learn the location of his tile drains, as he is then better able to check for sink holes and wet spots.

Greater productivity from highly fertile lands that previously were thought to be worthless has proved the effectiveness of the drainage systems. Maintaining the drainage systems will aid in maintaining the productivity that has been obtained by drainage.

Strip Crops Hold Soil When Wind Whips Field

Strip cropping, one of the best and most economical methods of checking erosion by water, also is valuable in checking wind erosion.

Whether planted on contour lines or at right angles to prevailing winds, strips of sweet clover, alfalfa, sorghum, sudan grass, or sunflowers not only stop soil that starts to blow, but also break the wind as it sweeps across the field. It is small soil particles carried by a high wind that produce the scouring effect known as wind erosion. Strip cropping stops drifting soil in the same way as fences and weed clumps.

Another advantage of strip cropping is that strips may be shifted from year to year. The top growth and roots are plowed under and add humus to the soil. This is one of the best preventives of "blowing." Soil with a good content of organic matter is much less likely to blow than soil cultivated year after year until most of the humus disappears.

Holding Expenses Down

The good farmer knows how to do the various farm operations with the least expenditure of time, energy, and money, but with effective results. He has a knack, developed in youth or acquired in later life, of doing things well. He strives for perfection in every operation, for he knows that failure to do one operation properly will result in trouble in other operations later. If the ground isn't broken well before the crop is planted, cultivation will be difficult and harvest small. The good farmer has good habits of work.—Hoard's Dairyman.

"His Brother's Wife" An Exceptional Film Treat

It was peculiarly fortunate that when Metro-Goldwyn - Mayer determined to produce the picture called "His Brother's Wife," W. S. Van Dyke was available to direct it.

The picture comes to the Strand Theatre Thursday and Friday with Hollywood's most romantic team, Barbara Stanwyck and Robert Taylor, heading a remarkably fine cast.

Van Dyke, of course, is a veteran not only of the camera but of jungle adventure, and "His Brother's Wife" is a drama of the tropic wilderness. Van Dyke has resorted to his indelible memory of the steaming interior to produce an effect of realism that is truly astounding.

Robert Taylor, right now the screen's most popular young star of the masculine ranks, has a daring role that he portrays with the daring it demands. He appears as a scientific explorer who falls in love with a beautiful red headed girl on his last fling in civilization.

His brother urges the boy to forget the girl and carry on with his expedition. He agrees and in her rebellion the girl marries the brother. Returning from the jungle the fever - haunted explorer finds himself in love with his brother's wife.

It would not be justice to reveal the climax but you may be assured that Taylor takes the girl back into the jungle with him. And there, in a desperate struggle against the mysterious forces of nature, he saves her life and wins her love. Barbara Stanwyck gives a delightful performance. Jean Hersholt, as the veteran adventurer, is essentially himself, and another outstanding portrayal of villain is offered by the suave Joseph Calleia.

Engineer Jack Burleson, of the State Highway Department, has been transferred from the bridge job in Montevallo to a road project at Sylacauga.

Graves Treats 'Political Prophets' Shabbily On Extra Session Rumor

Unless Gov. Graves acts pretty soon about an extra session of the Legislature, all the wise prophets will be thrown into dungeons for keeps because that was the way they did in the days of Babylon when a prophet failed to connect.

The writer has been tempted many times to predict a date for a legislative session and became so hot on the trail not long ago that Gov. Graves was called on the phone. And in that famous telephone conversation the writer got the worst of it because Gov. Graves rather unchivalrously, and abruptly we thought, called our attention to our own written prophecies during his election campaign in which we said he would be defeated. That cured the writer of calling a special session of the Legislature without the consent of the Governor.

However, the rebuff that the political writer of The Advertiser received in his ill advised attempt to call a special session of the Legislature, did not deter other and younger newspaper prophets from crystal gazing and consequent deductions and they seem to be off to the dungeon as false prophets.

It seems, however, that there is a leaven working among the masses of the people. That leaven was started from germs from the educational laboratory and it seems to be re-celling in school homes in every county of the State. Perhaps, and we wouldn't put it past him, Gov. Graves had that leaven in mind when he told us to mind our own business and not prophesy unless we intended to duplicate our erroneous prophecy about his election. In other words, it is possible that Gov. Graves is waiting for the leaven to work from the bottom.

You can't budge a politician until the people budge him. A successful politician, and legislators are successful politicians or they wouldn't be in the Legislature, always waits to see which way the people are already going. Some legislators, mistaking the rear ranks of the people in retreat, head that end of it, but if they don't get defeated in the meantime they soon return to the front, if they can find the front.

The writer has long since reached the conclusion that Gov. Graves is not going to be caught in a jam of politicians without the backing of the people. He was caught in that jam in the last extra session and they made jelly out of the jam. It's easy to make jelly out of jam if you will add a little jello and the politicians added that in the last special session.

An extra session of the Legislature, the writer believes, in a certainty. It would have been called long ago, the writer believes, if it had not been for the liquor taxation issue. But liquor is sold and must be taxed. Gov. Graves will call the Legislature, we believe, when the people from down yonder place the legislators on a hot skillet and refuse to remove the skillet from the coals.—By Atticus Mullin in The Montgomery Advertiser.

"Sing, Baby, Sing," New Triumph From Twentieth Hit Mint

With Alice Faye swinging torchy new tunes and romancing with Michael Whalen, Adolphe Menjou going daffy and roaming around in his nightie, Gregory Ratoff, the demon dialectician, mangling the English language, the king and queen of comedy, Ted Healey and Patsy Kelly, smashing all laugh records, and the Ritz Brothers bringing a new kind of musical clowning to the screen, "Sing, Baby Sing" comes to the Strand Theatre Saturday.

Fresh from the hit mint of Twentieth Century-Fox, the picture is said to top their previous triumph, "Thanks A Million," in a million ways.

A laugh-jammed, song-crammed scramboree of stars, songs and show-stoppers, "Sing, Baby, Sing" starts crowding the laughs in the opening scenes and only the sizzling songs and romantic love-making provide interludes from the side-splitting mirth.

Gregory Ratoff, a theatrical agent, aided by his secretary, Patsy Kelly, and his stooge, Ted Healey, is vainly trying to get a new job for Alice Fay, who has been fired from the night club in which she has been singing.

On Alice's closing night at the cafe, Adolphe Menjou, a famous celebrity on a spree, disrupts her performance by insisting on doing the balcony scene from "Romeo and Juliet."

Ratoff instantly visualizes a sensational chance for publicity and calls in the newspaper reporters, headed by Michael Whalen.

Menjou finally winds up in an alcoholic hospital where no one can see him. Ratoff manages to crash the gate by convincing the hospital attaches that Ted Healey is Menjou's personal physician.

Menjou is ready to promise anything for a drink, but the only beverage Ratoff can find is bay rum, which he tells Menjou is "South American brandy." Menjou develops a terrific yearning for the fiery beverage, and as Ratoff and Healey are the only ones who know what it really is, he sticks by their side.

Whalen, who has fallen in love with Alice Fay, believes she is just another gold digger and writes a scathing story about her and Menjou that brings Menjou's manager speedily from the coast.

In the meantime, Ratoff has obtained a contract for Alice Fay on a coast-to-coast network, providing Menjou appears on the opening program.

Menjou's managers kidnap him and start to Hollywood. Ratoff, Healey and Miss Faye charter a plane and engage in a cross-country pursuitt of the fleeing star that the newspapers feature heavily.

One Millionth Ford V-8 Produced

Dearborn, Mich., Aug. 21.—The 1,000,000th Ford V-8 1936 car was produced Thursday it was announced today at the Ford home offices.

At the conclusion of the day's work yesterday total production of the 1936 Ford V-8 series had reached 1,000,131 units, it was said.

Ford production is now running at the rate of 4,500 cars daily, manufacture having resumed last Monday after a week's vacation shutdown at the Rouge plant.

Dearborn, Mich. Aug. 6—For fourth consecutive month domestic sales of Ford V-8 cars and trucks totalled more than 100,000 units, it was reported today at the home offices of the Ford Motor Company. This continuation of the high volume of sales into midseason represents a surprising reversal of the trend of forfer years.

The demand for Ford V-8 units has been so well maintained into the late summer, it was explained, as to make necessary the abandonment of plans for a general vacation shut down of the Rouge plant during the current week. The plant will be partially closed during next week, it was said. Production of current models will be continued when the plant resumes full operations.

The unusual volume of July business can be partly attributed to the recent announcement of new Ford V-8 passenger car interiors and the addition of de lure equipment for Ford V-8 trucks, it was said.

Ford production in July in the United States and Canada totalled 115,137 units.

Mrs. J. W. Cahoon and daughter, Pearl, visited in Bessemer Sunday.

Miss Ina Mae Grady entertained approximately forty friends with a lawn party recently. After many interesting games refreshments were served. Everyone reported a very delightful time.

Mrs. Hicks, Mrs. Horn, Misses Marjorie Langston and Ideller Baker, Mr. Roy Lucas and Mr. Leon Perry and several other friends enjoyed a picnic at Big Springs Friday night.

Mr. Herbert Grady, student and assistant bookkeeping instructor in the advanced commercial department of Chillicothe Business College, returned to Missouri Wednesday.

More Reductions In Long Distance Rates

For the seventh time in the past ten years, long distance rates have again been voluntarily reduced.

Effective September 1, the rates for both person-to-person and station-to-station inter-state long distance calls were reduced to points 235 miles or more distant. The amount of the saving on calls ranges from five cents to $1.50 depending upon the distance.

Also on inter-state person-to-person calls the charges for overtime after six minutes of conversation are reduced. (Overtime charges begin after three minutes conversation.)

It is estimated that these reductions will save Bell telephone users $7,350,000 annually.

Montgomery, Ala. — Rules and regulations to curb livestock rustling in Alabama and for licensing all those engaged in the buying, transporting and slaughtering of cattle, hogs, sheep and goats in the state have been adopted by the Alabama State Board of Agriculture.

After setting up forms for livestock buyers, transporters and processors to use in applying for licenses under the Hare anti-rustling law, the regulations provide that "if one person shall engage in all the businesses described in said act, only one license shall be required."

Other regulations follow:

Such bills of sale at all times shall be subject to inspection by constituted authorities.

"All persons buying, transporting, reselling and or slaughtering such animals shall keep a record of the same, which shall show the name of person selling, transporting, and or slaugtering the same; the address of each; the number and kind of animals; their breed, color, approximate weight, and the brands or marks thereon; and the license number of the vehicle transporting same.

"If any such animal or animals shall bear a brand or mark on the hide or ears thereof such hide, including the marked ears, shall be retained by the slaughterer for ten days before disposal, and the same shall be subject to official inspection.

"If the operator of a vehicle shall transport live animals for hire he shall have in his possession and subject to inspection a way-bill containing the name and address of the owner, the number and kind of animals, their breed, color and approximate weight, and their brands or marks, and the point to which they are being transported.

"Persons who shall be found transporting their own animals in their own vehicles or driving the same along the public roads shall furnish to proper officials the number, description, brands or marks. Such information shall be forwarded to the Commissioner of Agriculture. Brilliant New Astaire-Rogers Show Comes To Strand In 'Swing-Time'

FRED ASTAIRE

A sensational solo dance in blackface by Astaire, the presentation of the newest ballroom rage, the Swing Waltz, some of the most goregous settings ever shown on the screen, a star-spangled supporting cast and a brand-new type of story for Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers, plus six of the catchiest melodies of Jerome Kern's career, are among the attraction elements of the hilarious musical romance, "Swing Time."

Sparkling with scores of novel features that make it one of the most entertaining flimusicals of recent years, "Swing Time," coming to the Strand Theatre Thursday and Friday of this week, marks the newest co-starring triumph of the famous dancing comedy stars.

Love affairs and complications feature the story plot, with Astaire endeavoring to rid himself of a haughty fiancee, Betty Furness, so that he can marry Miss Rogers, at the same time trying to discourage a glamourous orchestra leader George, Metaxa, who also has matrimonial designs on Ginger.

Victor Moore and Helen Broderick, teamed together as one of the funniest troupers ever to reach the screen, head the supporting cast as a pair of well-meaning but often emberassing matchmakers, who innocently provide many of the complications, and much of the comedy, of the film. Eric Blore, the convulsing butler of former Astaire-Rogers filmusicals, also has a prominent role in the picture.

A glittering aerial night-club of mirrors and chromium, moored to the tower of Manhattan's tallest skyscraper, forms one of the breath-taking settings of the production. In this unique background, designed by John Harkrider of "The Great Ziegfeld" fame, Astaire and a host of dancing girls put on the spectacular "Bojangles of Harlem" number, with Astaire, in blackface, doing a tap dance with his hands as well as his feet.

Another unusual night-club setting, an arresting expanse of the snow-clad Adirondacks in midwinter, a theatre, a modernistic dancing academy and several apartments and hotel suites comprise the rest of the backgrounds in which the fast and tuneful action of the picture takes place.

'The Waltz in Swing Time," said to be the smartest innovation in waltzing since its inception, is performed as one of several dancing numbers of Astaire and Miss Rogers. Jerome Kern, who wrote "Roberta," "Showboat" and many other musical hits, and his lyricist, Dorothy Fields, turned out the songs of the picture, with "Pick Yourself Up," "Never Gonna Dance," "The Way You Look Tonight" and "A Fine Romance" already soaring to popularity with music lovers.

Teachers' Ages In Alabama Schools

INTERESTING STUDY MADE BY COMMITTEE OF A. E. A.

Montgomery, Sept. 11—According to a recent study made by the Committee on Teacher Retirement of the Alabama Education Association, W M. Jackson, Selma, chairman, there was in Alabama in 1934-1935 a high school principal 80 years old, who had been in active service 61 years. There was, also, an elementary woman teacher 79 years old, who had been teaching 52 years. The "average" teacher that year was 28.9 years old. He had taught 8.4 years and received an anual salary of $672.

The study also indicates that 25 per cent of the teachers in Alabama were 37.1 years of age, or older. They received annual salaries of $918, or more, for services based on a teaching experience of 14.5 years and more.

At the other end of the scale 25 per cent of Alabama's public school teachers in 1934-1935 were 24 years of age, or younger, had taught 4 years, or less, and received an annual salary of $481, or less.

Since the study referred to above was based upon data contained in questionnaires received from 55 per cent of the 13,321 white teachers employed in 1934-1935, it is belieed that it represents a fairly accurate picture of the distribution of the age, salary, and years in teaching experience of the white teachers in the state. The study does not include superintendents and supervisors.

Copies of the report of the Committee on Teacher Retirement, including the study referred to, will be distributed to the teachers of the state within the next few weeks it is announced.

The report contains many interesting facts bearing upon the problem of teacher retirement. For example, it shows that in 1934-1935, of the 7,388 teachers and principals included in the study, 51 were 65 years, or older. Of this number 55 teachers had been in service 40 or more years.

In the distribution of salaries the data included in this report show that only 40 of the teachers and principals received salaries in excess of $,000 and only 3 of these were paid $2,700 or more.

In commenting on the report Mr. Jackson said: "Our study clearly indicates that some plan of teacher retirement must be developed in Alabama to save the childhood of the state from the handicap of having as their teachers those who are forced to continue in classroom work beyond the limit of their most efficient service because of low salaries received throughout their productive years."

Clanton Furniture Executive Here Monday

Mr. Tom Tiffin, of The Tiffin Furniture Co., of Clanton, was a business visitor in Montevallo Monday. He was here in the interest of promoting the special September Furniture Sale which is now being successfully conducted by his firm.

In order to bring this sale to the attention of the people of this section, Mr. Tiffin placed a large advertisement in The Times, which appears this week. He said:

"We believe we have in our September Sale an array of furniture bargains heretofore unequaled by any concern in Central Alabama. We have made no restrictions as to our offerings, and we are advertising this sale widely in a number of counties. We want the people of Montevallo territory to read about it, and if you find in our September Sale anything which you recognize as an attractive bargain, we invite you to come to see us.

"Our stock of furniture and house furnishings is the largest you will find outside the big cities. Our terms are made so any responsible buyer may avail himself of our easy payment plan. If you do not find elsewhere the quality, price and terms to suit you, come to see us and let us show you what we can do."

General Offices Moved To Aldrich

MONTEVALLO COAL MINING CO. EXPANDING LOCAL OPERATIONS

The general offices of the Montevallo Coal Mining Company have beeen moved to Aldrich, the seat of the company's operations, near here. This move, recently made, includes transfer from Birmingham of the offices of Mr. D. A. Thomas, president of the company, and the bookkeeping department, which is in charge of Mr. E. E. Craig.

The sales office of the company will remain in Birmingham.

In an interview granteed The Times Tuesday, presidentt Thomas said:

"Our new mine, the Mary Elizabetth, recently opened, is increasing in production steadily. We are now employing about 160 men, and this number will be augmented as our present plans of development are further perfected.

"We are going ahead as rapidly as possible with our plans for installing a new tipple and preparation plant, which we have purchased from the Jeffrey Manufacturing Company, of Columbus, O.

"This plant will be of 800 to 1,000 ton capacity, and will be among the finest and most efficient to be found in the coal mining industry in Alabama. Excavations are already made for installation of the machinery just as quickly as it arrives on the property."

The old Aldrich mine, which has been in operation for many years, was closed some months ago. Many thousands of dollars have been spent by the company during the past few months preparatory to getting the new mine under operation for the production of normal capacity.

Optimism is felt in business circles here due to the removal of the general offices of the company to this district. Operation ~~of Ald~~rich mines is a most vital factor in the business pulse of Montevallo, and surrounding territory. It is encouraging and reassuring to have the word of president Thomas saying that the immediate future holds plans for increased volume of employment and production, together with added improvements at Aldrich mines.

Hitler Demands Return of German Colonies—American Fleet to Maneuver in North Pacific—Discord in World Power Conference.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union.

HUNDREDS of thousands of Nazis, attending the party convention in Nuremburg, were roused to great enthusiasm by a proclamation from Reichsfuehrer Hitler to the effect that Germany, having rearmed and scrapped most of the Versailles treaty, was ready to press its demand for restoration of its pre-war colonies. This, he asserted, was necessary to the economic independence of Germany and would be achieved within the next four years. Said the chancellor:

Adolf Hitler

"It is regrettable that the rest of the world fails to understand the nature and greatness of our task. If a certain British politician declares Germany needs no colonies as she may buy her raw materials, then this remark is about as bright as that of the Bourbon princess who, when she saw a mob crying for bread, wondered why—if the people had no bread—they did not eat cake.

"If Germany had not, for fifteen years, been squeezed dry and cheated of her entire international savings; if she had not lost her entire foreign holdings; if, above all, she still possessed her colonies, we could much more easily master the difficulties."

Then, addressing the convention directly, the fuehrer launched a new campaign against bolshevism and the Jews.

"Bolshevism seeks to exterminate governments based on a community of race and blood and replace them by non-Aryan Jewish element of no race," Hitler warned. "Sooner or later sovietistic authority states will end in anarchy, since Jewish elements possess only despotic faculties, never organizing reconstructive ones.

"The rock of foundation of the state is an authoritarian will. Unlimited individual liberty leads to anarchy. All states have experienced the destructive effect of democracy."

FOLLOWING closely upon the visit to France of Gen. Rydz-Smigly of Poland, France and Poland signed a military treaty of friendship. It was reported, too, that France had agreed to lend 600.000,000 francs for completion of Poland's new railroad linking the Silesian coal fields with the port of Gdynia, rival of the Free City of Danzig.

Josef Beck, Polish foreign minister, told Berlin the Franco-Polish accord would have no effect on friendly relations with Germany; but nevertheless there was considerable anxiety in Warsaw concerning Germany's reaction.

BACK at his desk after an illness of six months, Secretary of the Navy Claude A. Swanson immediately made an announcement that will be of deep interest to Japan. The annual fleet maneuvers, which last May were shifted to the Canal Zone as a conciliatory gesture to Japan, will be held next year in North Pacific and Hawaiian waters, and probably the Tokio press will yelp again.

Sec. Swanson

With the announcement Secretary Swanson asserted Japanese plans to retain overage submarines and destroyers involve a "violation" of the London and Washington naval treaties, which are to expire December 31 by Japanese abrogation. He followed up his charge with the statement that the United States has completed plans for two new battleships and is prepared to begin construction "at a moment's notice."

The fleet maneuvers, officially designated as "fleet problem No. 18," will be held during late May and early June. The area of operations, it was indicated, will be the triangle between the Aleutian Islands, Hawaii, and Seattle, where the fleet problem of 1935 was conducted. Vessels and planes probably will work as far west as the Wake Islands.

Armament of the new battleships is at present limited to 14 inch guns, but Admiral William H. Standley, chief of naval operations, said frankly that if Japan does not agree to this limitation by next April, "the sky is the limit."

AMERICAN dairymen are protesting vainly to Secretary of State Hull against the reciprocal trade treaty with Brazil which, they assert, is seriously injuring the industry by encouragement of the manufacture of imitation butter. Under the treaty Brazilian babassu oil, unknown in United States markets prior to 1935, now is being used at the rate of more than a million pounds a month for manufacture of a butter substitute.

Mr. Hull referred the protests to Assistant Secretary Sayre, who pointed out that the provision for free importation of the nut and oil was authorized by congress in the trade agreement act of 1934. He added that the success of the program was of vital interest to the American dairy farmer, "who has more to gain from the re-establishment of prosperous domestic markets for his products through the restoration of an abundant foreign trade than by a policy of excluding even the most remotely competitive products."

THERE was glee in government circles when it was announced that the United States treasury offering of $914,000,000 in 20 to 23 year two and three-fourths per cent bonds dated September 15 was oversubscribed nine times. Of course those who are informed know that the reason is the banks, insurance companies and other investment institutions are glutted with money for which they have been seeking profitable employment.

Of the treasury's latest offering $400,000,000 of bonds is to raise new cash and $514,000,000 is to provide for the exchange of 1.5 per cent notes maturing September 15.

HUNDREDS of delegates, from many nations, were present when the third World Power conference opened in Washington, with President Julius Dorpmueller in the chair. Prospects were good for a useful discussion of the problems connected with the industry, but discord crept in early in the proceedings. At a round table debate on public regulation and ownership of utilities, M. P. Davidson, representing Mayor Fiorello La Guardia of New York, said the only way to reduce electric rates is by threatening public ownership. Three prominent private utility men promptly "took a walk," and John C. Dalton, manager of the County of London Electric Supply, criticized Davidson's talk as a "tirade."

Julius Dorpmueller

The discussion started in connection with a paper by John E. Zimmerman, president of the United Gas Improvement company, who held that power "yardsticks" such as the TVA and Boulder Dam cannot be compared with private utilities unless operating conditions are similar. Such yardsticks, he said, will lead to competitive methods already proved "wasteful and unsatisfactory."

In papers taking the opposite view, Prof. William E. Mosher of Syracuse university, and James C. Bonright of the New York State Power Authority, held that public competition with private companies is "indisputable evidence" of declining faith in regulation.

ACCORDING to the New York Times, whose dispatches from Washington are usually most reliable, President Roosevelt is considering for submission to congress, in event of his re-election, a far-reaching plan of governmental reorganization. The plan possibly would involve, the Times stated, the consolidation or abolition of some of the major departments and bureaus.

"Whatever the President finally proposes," the Times said, "one may hear in informed quarters now that the regular cabinet posts might be decreased . . ."

A possibility, the Times stated, would be consolidation of the army navy and air corps in a department of national defense.

"The administration proposes to follow a definite policy of curtailing or dismantling emergency units that have outrun their usefulness," the paper continued.

FRANCE'S government has decided that conditions in Europe are so threatening that it must spend a huge sum for national defense. So it adopted a program for increasing the efficiency of the army which will cost $930,000,000 in the next four years. The proposal was made by Edouard Daladier, minister of defense. The first installment of $280,000,000 will be disbursed in 1937.

The program calls for an intensive increase of mechanized units and also for rearmament. Furthermore, it provides an increase in the size of the professional army and the creation of a specialized group of long service noncommissioned officers such as already exist in the French navy.

The program also provides for strengthening the frontier fortifications. But the chief improvement will be made in the air force which will be increased by 2,000 planes.

FIERCE attacks by the Spanish rebels resulted in the capture of Irun, on the French border, and the defenders were mercilessly slaughtered save for those who were able to take refuge in France. The town was reduced to smoking ruins, and the victors promptly started an advance westward against San Sebastian, their main objective in the north. Recognizing the fact that this large resort city could not long be defended, the government administration there offered to surrender the place if full amnesty were promised; but declared if this were refused the city would be burned to the ground and the 625 fascist prisoners held there would be shot. There was great discord among the defenders, the anarchists insisting on destroying the city anyhow.

Then the Basque nationals took a hand, assuming control of the city and sending a lot of the anarchists to Bilbao. This move resulted in a virtual armistice while negotiations for surrender of the city went forward.

Later it was reported that the rebel forces had rejected the terms of surrender, and shelling of the city began. The civilian inhabitants were fleeing in panic.

South of Madrid the government forces were said to have made progress and there were claims that Talavera had been taken and that the Alcazar in Toledo was practically battered to pieces by loyalist artillery. The rebels' advance on Madrid from the south and west was supposed to have been halted.

The Madrid government was reorganized and Francisco Largo Caballero, left wing Socialist, was made premier.

French workers in Paris in a great demonstration insisted that the government abandon its nonintervention policy and give active aid to the Spanish government. Premier Blum, while not concealing his sympathy with the Madrid crowd, declared that if France dropped neutrality, Italy and Germany would be able to give the Spanish rebels much speedier and more effective aid than the French could give to the loyalists.

Representatives of twenty-four powers were scheduled to confer in London on plans for the establishment of a nonintervention control committee. Portugal, however, was still holding out.

CREWS of two Portuguese warships mutinied and decided to take the vessels to the aid of the Spanish government forces at Malaga or Valencia. As the ships started to leave their buoys the shore batteries opened fire. Twelve of the mutineers were killed and twenty wounded, and the others speedily gave in. The Lisbon government said the men were under the influence of communist propaganda.

SENATOR GEORGE W. NORRIS of Nebraska, Republican, who said he wished to retire from public life, is a candidate for re-election in spite of himself. A petition placing him on the ticket was filed by more than forty thousand of his friends, and only one thousand signatures were necessary. Mr. Norris is seventy-five years old. Chairman Farley of the Democratic party said the filing of the Norris petition made him "very happy."

Gov. Eugene Talmadge of Georgia, severe critic of the New Deal, was defeated for nomination as United States senator by the present incumbent, Richard B. Russell. In Washington state Gov. Clarence D. Martin was renominated by the Democrats and former Gov. R. H. Hartley was named by the Republicans. Gov. Ed C. Johnson of Colorado captured the Democratic nomination for senator and will be opposed by R. L. Sauter, Republican. Arizona Democrats refused renomination to Gov. B. B. Moeur, selecting instead R. C. Stanford of Phoenix. In Connecticut the Republicans nominated Arthur M. Brown for governor.

HEROIC actions and dramatic rescues marked the collision of the excursion steamer Romance and the steamship New York in a dense fog ten miles off Boston, Mass. The Romance sank in twenty minutes, but every passenger and member of the crew was taken safely aboard the New York. The rescued numbered 268, most of the passengers being women and children from Greater Boston. The New York then turned back into Boston harbor with a twelve foot hole in her bow. There was no panic aboard the Romance, and the officers and crews of both vessels displayed discipline and bravery that elicited high praise.

JULIANA, crown princess of the Netherlands, has found her future husband in a German prince, Bernhard zur Lippe-Biesterfeld. The announcement of their betrothal was hailed in the Hague with utmost joy. Juliana, who is twenty-seven, is beloved for her jollity and good humor, and also she has been carefully trained for the throne. Prince Bernhard, twenty-five years old, has been working for the German dye trust. No date has been set for the wedding.

MRS. BERYL MARKHAM of England put her name on the roll of fame as the first woman to make a solo flight across the north Atlantic from east to west. She started from London for New York, but her fuel gave out and she was forced to land her small monoplane at Baleine cove near Louisberg, Nova Scotia.

Our Huge Gold Pile

The great fighters in Asia and Europe in the days of Frederick the Great and Napoleon had little idea of war's future. But marvelous things, some of the greatest, Napoleon especially, might have done with today's inventions.

Arthur Brisbane

Frederick the Great's father selected the tallest men he could find for his guard, probably kept them away from the firing line. In battle they would have been killed first, hit by the bullets that go over the heads of shorter men.

The wholesale killers of the old days prepared their killings by marching men up and down, drilling them, encouraging them with titles, brass bands to lead them, fancy uniforms. All that means little now.

About 100 miles from Berlin there is a station called Leuna. There most useful work is done, in theory and through study of the manufacture of synthetic petroleum; and there most important, learned men with big heads, spectacles and an amount of education that would make you dizzy if you could imagine it, concentrate their brains on the preparation of better, more efficient poison gases and high explosives.

Every country has its similar death laboratory; men perhaps as efficient as those of Germany, though Germany is the kingdom of chemistry, the teacher of other nations.

Henry Irving, on the stage of his theater in London, prepared an impressive presentation of the witches in "Macbeth," old, toothless hags, preparing their hell-broth, with power to summon spirits from the dead and make them foretell the future.

Far more efficient are those solemn German chemists, physicists and other professors, preparing the real hell-broth of poison gas, upon which the future of civilization and the domination of the earth may depend for many centuries.

We had our periods of universal barbarism and cannibalism, our ages of flint, bronze and iron, our many interesting forms of rulership, planned to give one or a few control over all the others. We had the age of military feudalism, and many think that we are now seeing the end of "industrial feudalism." There may be in the centuries ahead of us a period of airplane-poison gas rule, which will make the peoples of the world as completely subject to a single dictatorship as were the ancient galley-slaves, swinging their oars under the lash.

There are a good many things we haven't seen and many to which we devote too little thought, including perhaps the fact that it is dangerous to be too rich if you are not prepared to defend yourself against burglars.

Those thousands of millions in gold that we are hiding away in a hole in the ground, as ingeniously as any squirrel hiding his hickory nuts, may bring us trouble some day.

The thought of those ten thousand millions' worth of gold bars and dollars, hidden not very far below the surface, might cause some ingenious Asiatic or European to say to himself:

"For one or two billions I could prepare the necessary machinery, flying ships and poison gas included, to conquer the necessary areas of the United States and frighten the others into submission. Having laid down my layer of gas, I would descend and take the ten thousand millions and go home with a clean profit of eight billions in gold."

Mussolini races his big Italian built automobile, the engine burning alcohol, made of Italian farm products—no gasoline. Some lawmakers in America suggest compelling the use of 10 per cent alcohol in all fuel for American automobiles. Fuel alcohol can be made from corn, and the law, it is said, would give work to 2,000,000 men on 30,000,000 acres of farm land.

It seems impossible to believe the hideous accounts of the maltreatment and cruel deaths inflicted upon women in the civil war now raging in Spain.

That men should fight and murder each other is to be expected, since they are at best "half tiger, half monkey," and often the monkey gives way to the tiger. But that they should inflict shameful ill treatment and hideous death on defenseless women seems utterly unbelievable, even when you know what men are, in a mob.

NATIONAL PRESS BLDG. WASHINGTON, D. C.

True Picture

Washington.—The Department of Commerce has lately released its annual "World Economic Review," and again has painted officially a picture of general conditions that I believe to be the most accurate obtainable under present chaotic conditions. I might add that it is one of the few official analyses coming out from the government these days that is not colored in any manner or form.

The reason this review is so interesting is because it points out what can be expected to happen by a disclosure in detail of what has happened in commerce and industry. To that extent it delivers a rather definite body blow at some New Deal policies affecting business. Since it does this sort of thing, the review is entitled to more faith and credit than usually is accorded government publications, whether compiled by the Roosevelt administration or those before it. Political leaders always want to put their best foot forward and the New Deal under Mr. Roosevelt has not failed to carry on this tradition to the fullest possible extent.

The section of the "World Economic Review" that was most interesting to me contained this statement:

"Deficits of great magnitude created yearly during the depression to meet payments of wages, salaries, interest and dividends sapped the vitality of the entire business structure and could not have been sustained indefinitely."

Here then is an official declaration from that agency of the government most concerned with commerce and industry which says that corporations and employers of labor maintained as far as they were able the payrolls and interest payments during the depression. It says likewise that had corporations failed to do this, our unemployment problem would have been much greater, the income of those who hold securities, whether in large or small amount, would not have received dividends on their stocks or interest on the bonds and, as a result, it is obvious the buying power of the country as a whole would have been sharply reduced. That is to say, had these payments both to labor and capital, been curtailed there would have been even a lower level of retail business than obtained during the depression. It ought to be added as well that had a lower level of business resulted, the manufacturing industries from which the retail stores buy their supplies would have closed down their plants in even greater number than they did.

As we look back over the last five or six years it is easy to see how things could have been very much worse. It is easy to recognize that the strength that comes from amassing capital in corporation form has developed in this country one of the greatest shock absorbers that any people may have when those corporations, those businesses, are permitted to develop under sound management and with as little governmental interference as the general public welfare will permit.

Now, as to the reason why these businesses were able to accomplish the things they did: The answer is simple. Managements of businesses must follow the same practices in guiding the financial affairs of those businesses as you or I do in the management of our personal affairs.

* * *

Rainy Day Fund

This brings us to a point of current interest. In preparing for the rainy day, all business, whether great or small, lays aside a certain percentage of its profits. This is called a surplus. The surplus is invested. It is made to yield a return in the form of interest or dividends. It is seldom touched. It is treated just as you and I would treat our savings accounts—just as we deal with our Christmas savings account.

Thus, the arrival of slack times, dull business, no profits, the arrival of the time when we must live on our own fat so to speak, does not find us without a reserve because that is what a surplus is.

The records of the savings bank and of the life insurance companies through the last six years show definitely how many hundreds of thousands of people had to draw on that surplus just as the Department of Commerce statement now reveals how many corporations drew upon their supluses in order to maintain their organizations, pay the workers and be honest by paying the interest on their debts. All of this sounds like a chautauqua lecture on savings. But however it may sound, it links in directly to legislation that was enacted in the last session of Congress, a law driven through under the lash of President Roosevelt after it was conceived by a bunch of radicals who constitute the majority of the so-called brain trust at Washington.

That law levies a new tax on corporations. It does not touch us as individuals except indirectly. The tax applies to surplus, to the savings of business, a savings designed to meet just such conditions as those through which we have gone and which business was able to meet because heretofore it had been permitted to pile up reserves to carry it through the rainy day.

Official figures from the Department of Commerce show that the payments for wages, salaries, interest and dividends from 1930 to 1934 amounted to $21.288,000,000. In 1935, according to incomplete figures business paid out $1,500,000,000 for these same purposes, thus making the total for five years approximately $23,000,000,000.

Now, in normal times these figures would not prove exciting. Under present circumstances and those through which we have been passing, they border on the sensational. This is true because these payments have been made, not from the earnings of the businesses during the years in which they were paid, but from earnings of earlier good years when a part of the profits were laid aside as a protection.

It would seem therefore that since business has performed a social service of this kind under its own management that it ought to be allowed to continue. I am convinced that it is a much safer method than to have the federal government mess around through laws such as the tax on surpluses, for it must be remembered that under the law which I have criticized, no corporation can build up again such surplus as has happened in the past.

I might mention further that the effect of this law is going to be to prevent small corporations from ever growing large. I mean by that, if a corporation, through careful management and frugal savings, was able to expand its plant facilities, increase its production and thereby increase the number of workers it employs, it will be unable to do so. It will be unable to accomplish this for the reason that the operation of this tax law prevents it from storing its savings. The law takes such a heavy toll of any stored-up earnings that no corporation can afford to store them up. They must be passed out in dividends during the year they are earned or else the government puts its tax hand into the business treasury.

One might say that such a distribution is helpful and undoubtedly in the cases of some owners of securities it is helpful. But questions of this kind must be treated in the whole and not on the basis of isolated cases. Consequently, it takes no stretch of the imagination to see how a business is forced to distribute its earnings, to distribute them in good times when a comparatively small number of its security owners need the funds—and the result is obviously a shortage of reserve for that rainy day. In other words, a corporation is compelled to be a spendthrift or else pay a tax that is designed as a punishment.

* * *

Show Upturn

There is another phase of these payments by businesses that deserves attention. The dividend payments, in fact, many of the earnings reports of business lately have shown a decided up-turn. This circumstance has prompted Democratic Chairman Farley and Attorney General Cummings to enthuse somewhat about business recovery. Each of them insist in recent political statements that prosperity actually is here; that it is not "just around the corner," as Mr. Hoover once predicted while he was president.

But there should be some attention paid to the meaning of the dividend payments and increased earnings. They should be analyzed.

It is true that some industries, like the automobile industry, for example, have increased production beyond the hope of any students of economics and that they have restored to their payrolls a considerable percentage of the workers they once employed. Some other industries likewise have moved forward and promise to get on their feet again in sound fashion. Yet I find a number of authorities in the business world who continue to be doubtful. They fear that the foundation is not sound.

These facts have not deterred Mr. Farley and Mr. Cummings from shouting from the house-tops that this is prosperity, resulting from Roosevelt policies. Their declarations, however, are just as fallacious, just as political as some political pronouncements that I have heard from the Republican side to the effect that business is picking up because of prospects of electing Governor Landon as President. All of these statements in my opinion are pure hokum for the reason that the facts generally speaking do not bear out any of them.

STAR DUST

Movie • Radio

By VIRGINIA VALE

AT THE time when this is being written no general announcement has been made by Warner Brothers about Doris Wester, but watch for a flood of stories about her. She, you'll recall, is the Major Bowes amateur who made good.

When she sang on his program months and months ago somebody of importance heard her, and first thing she knew she was signed up for the Rainbow Room in Rockefeller Center—one of the nicest and smartest of New York's night clubs.

She went right on from there. Recently she was tested for the movies, and it was said to be one of the most successful ever made. So she, like many others, will switch from radio to the movies.

When Ginger Rogers went east on a vacation recently she made it very clear to RKO's publicity department that she was going for fun, not to spend all her time being interviewed and posing for photographs. Her last trip east was that kind of trip.

Ginger Rogers

So this time she has been having fun, going to theaters and dancing (wouldn't you think she'd have had enough dancing to hold her for a while, when she got through with "Swing Time" with Fred Astaire?)

Joan Fontaine, Olivia de Haviland's younger sister, is headed for success. Jesse Lasky has signed her, and she will make her first picture in England, unless plans are changed.

You girls who want to go into pictures might take a lesson from Olivia, by the way. Although she grew up in California, not so awfully far from Hollywood, she did not tackle the movie studios. She stayed home and went to high school and worked hard with the school dramatic club—and it was as a result of that dramatic club and its performances that she broke into the movies without the slightest difficulty.

Do see "To Mary—with Love," especially if you like Myrna Loy and Warner Baxter, the team that made such a success of "Broadway Bill." This is quite a different sort of picture, one of those young-married ones where disaster threatens the course of true love. It is very well done.

It's a great relief to everybody that Jeanette MacDonald and Gene Raymond have announced their engagement. For years and years people have expected her to marry her manager, Bob Ritchie, who has certainly guided her affairs very well. They say the blond Mr. Raymond looks like a young man with whom she was in love when she was on the stage, before she gave the movies a thought.

When you see "Reunion," the second feature picture made by the famous quintuplets, you'll also hear them talking. It's being made now, with some of the same actors who appeared in "The Country Doctor."

And did you see that delightful news reel of the babies, "All Walking"? There has never been a more delightful scene than the one in which four of them dance, while the fifth persistently tries to stand on her head.

By the time you read this the wedding bells may have rung for Joan Blondell and Dick Powell, though she is denying, just now, that she is going to marry him. But — he has reserved rooms on a boat sailing for New York, under the names of "Mr. and Mrs. Dick Powell." Her divorce becomes final before then. And she has been making plans to go to New York. For some reason or other Hollywoodites like to deny that they're going to be married right up to the very instant when the ceremony takes place.

ODDS AND ENDS . . . Mae Clark, who has appeared in too few pictures lately, replaces Dorothy Wilson as leading lady in "Wild Brian Kont" . . . Ann Sothern's grandmother, who is eighty-three, had her first permanent wave the other day; Ann had a studio hairdresser do it, and supervised the operation . . . Charlie Ruggles is going to play a straight dramatic role in "Exclusive," and Mary Boland is going to do on in "A Son Comes Home," and then they'll join forces again and do comedy . . . Josephine Hutchinson is spending her vacation at her home in Connecticut, far from the excitement of Hollywood . . . Dolores Del Rio, Richard Dix and Chester Morris will be co-starred in Columbia's "Depths Below."

Gunlock Ranch

By FRANK H. SPEARMAN

COPYRIGHT FRANK H. SPEARMAN W.N.U. SERVICE

—8—

In the nearer distance lay Denison's buildings. Between the two points a second fire burned, curving like a great scimitar along the cut-over lands surrounding the ranch.

"Bull!" she called fearfully to her nearest cowboy. "What does it all mean—is there anything that can be saved?'

"Why, I can see where they've been back-firin'. Can't tell much about it till we get closer. Come on, boys! Push 'em over the hill. If this is too fast for you, miss," he yelled, "follow us!'

But nothing was too fast for Jane. The city girl was always on their heels.

With the ponies in a lather, the Gunlock crew pulled up short before the ranch-house corral, where a party of fire fighters just from town were starting for the front. Henry Sawdy, smoked and scorched, was guiding them out. Bill Pardaloe headed the town men. In the bunch were the evangelist preacher, Big Bill Hayes, alias Panama; the liveryman, McAlpin; Spotts, the bald-headed and profane barber; Selwood, the cattleman, with half a dozen of his men; Jim Laramie, from away up in the Crazy Woman country, with a bunch of his cowboys.

Jane saw a man riding up from the creek, but it did not look to her like Bill Denison. Not until he drew near and lifted his hat hastily to her as he rode over to talk to Pardaloe, did she realize it was he.

As rapidly as possible he greeted the newcomers, told them where they were most needed, pointed and started them on their way, and turned to Jane.

"Oh, Bill!" exclaimed Jane, as Denison rode up. "I'm so sorry."

"I hope I didn't stir things up over there, by sending that message. [illegible] have done it, only—I promised," he said in a dry, cracked voice.

"Don't think about the small things, Bill. You should have sent long ago. I brought all the men I could."

"McCrossen refused to come?"

"He was kind of mean—so I came myself—I hope I'll do for a substitute?"

His answering smile was joyful. "It was too good of you to come, Jane. But now I've got to ride right out again. Would you step into the cabin and rest up before you ride back?"

"Ride back? Yes, but who's going to cook for all these men? I'm going back to get Quong and bring him over."

Noon passed before Jane got back to Denison's and installed herself with Quong in the kitchen.

One man, severely burned, came in from the front toward dark. Carpy could not be reached till morning. Jane bandaged the man's arms and fed him. Denison rode in late, smoked and scorched anew, but tireless.

"Bill," she asked, sitting down opposite him, "tell me honestly: are you holding it?"

"Jane, to tell the truth, I don't know. Sometimes I think we are—sometimes it looks bad. In a forest fire, every hour must tell its own story; that's about the size of it."

It was late when they walked out of doors together. The southern sky was angry red. "It'll be a hard day tomorrow, Bill," said Jane. "There's nothing more I can do here, tonight. I'm going home. I'll be back by daylight in the morning. You go to bed. You must be dead."

"I'll ride over along with you, Jane."

"No, you will not."

"But Jane, you're not going to deprive me of riding home with you?"

"Yes, I am."

"Oh, please!" He pleaded with her like a boy. "I've been counting on it all day—"

"I thought you'd been fire-fighting all day."

"Fighting fire and thinking about you and saying, 'Tonight I'll ride home with Jane.'"

"Bill Denison, you're silly. You ought to be willing to call it a day."

"After I take you home, Jane!"

"What a tease! Well, then, come along!"

They did not ride fast. There was so much to talk over. Both were serious. Denison knew better than Jane how grave the danger was both to himself and to her. But he had his hour with the woman he loved, and for that hour what else in the world mattered?

"Oh, Bill," protested Jane, faintly, sick at heart with the happiness of listening to his words. "Don't! You mustn't say such things. I won't listen to you, Bill. I'm nothing but a girl, and you're making me a goddess or a fairy—stop such nonsense. Not one word more, Bill Denison. If you keep on, I'll break out crying. Here's the house, anyway. Good night."

Every available man was out on the front lines when Jane reached the threatened ranch after daybreak. Quong kept the little stove in the kitchen hot, and Jane, busy about the cabin and looking after the boy burned the day before, did not realize how fast the morning was going, until Carpy arrived from town to dress the lad's burns. He greeted Jane and, with her to help, went to work on his patient.

Afterward he sat down beside Jane on the bench outside the door.

"So," said he, "you're playing good Samaritan. How are you holding out over at Gunlock?"

"All right; the danger is all from this way. If we can hold the fire over here, it's not likely to bother us. Oh, doctor," exclaimed Jane, springing to her feet, "what does that mean?"

Riding out of the woods south of the ranch house, she saw a party of men slowly advancing.

Riding between two men, supporting him on his pony, a third man riding behind the trio, Carpy saw the injured man, hatless and coatless, and heard him suppress an occasional groan. Carpy walked forward to greet the party. "Well, boys," he asked, "who is it this time?"

Jim Laramie answered. "Why, Doc, it's Jake Spotts. There's been a bad accident. Jake and Panama got cut off up by the pass. Stayed too long. I'm glad you're here, Doc; he's hurt pretty bad."

"No!" screamed Spotts, so blackened and burned as to be unrecognizable, and writhing in pain, "it ain't me, Doc; it's Panama! Damn it—go back, boys, and get Panama. I tell you, go back!"

"Denison has gone to get him, Doc," explained Laramie. "Keep quiet, Jake, you only make your leg worse. It's his leg, Doc."

Carpy motioned. "Bring him into the cabin."

The unfortunate barber, eased, with many groans, off the pony, was laid on the dinner table, asking for water and half deliriously calling for Panama. Carpy examined Spotts. He found to his relief that the man was not seriously burned.

"It's his left leg," explained Carpy a little later to the group; "broke down near the ankle."

Keeping up a rapid fire of talk, Carpy opened his bag, set out his needed appliances and his bottle of chloroform, gradually subdued the man, got him, with Jane's help, under the anesthetic, and working in his shirt sleeves and in the intense heat at a breath-taking speed, finished the operation, sat down, drew a cigar from his waistcoat pocket and lighted it.

"Jane," he said, "I suppose this is your first surgical case?"

"Yes, Doctor."

"You'd make a good nurse, girl."

"Doctor, what do you suppose he meant calling so for Panama?"

Carpy explained. "Today," he continued, "Panama was his partner on the line: the men work in pairs generally."

"I hope they'll find him all right."

"I hope," observed Carpy thoughtfully, "he'll be all right when they do find him."

"There come some of the boys. Denison is with them," Carpy said suddenly, pointing to the edge of the woods. "They're halting. They've got something slung across the back of a pony. I'll walk over."

CHAPTER VII

DR. CARPY walked hurriedly to the edge of the woods where the men gathered closely around him.

"Best thing to do is to take off that old bunkhouse door, Bill," said Carpy, when he saw whom they were carrying. "We can lay him on that and carry him over here to the shed."

They had brought Panama out of the burned timber where Denison and Bull Page had found him. They had taken in a pony, bareback, to where he lay, slung the big fellow across it, and thus carried him through the woods.

Panama was lifted from the pony and laid on the door. A colored neckerchief was laid over his face, and with stumbling steps he was carried back of the bunkhouse. Two sawhorses had been set to support the door, and on it Panama lay at rest. His companions made ready to start back for the fire lines.

"Now, boys, watch out," said Denison gravely. "We can't afford any more mistakes like this. If Jake and Panama had listened to me they wouldn't have got cut off. Bull," he added, speaking to Page, "get up a pair of ponies, if you can find 'em, and hitch 'em to the light wagon. Carpy wants Panama taken right in town."

The injured barber was coming to. He had been carried to the bunkhouse and was propped up on a bench outside the doorway. He looked at Carpy wistfully. "Tell me, Doc," he begged "have they found Panama yet?"

"They have, Jake. And he was hurt. I did what little I could do for him here. But I've not got what's needed here for treatment. Panama's got to go to town. They're hitching up the wagon."

Spotts started up, on fire. "Then I've got to see him before he goes. Don't let 'em start till I see him, Doc. Where is he?"

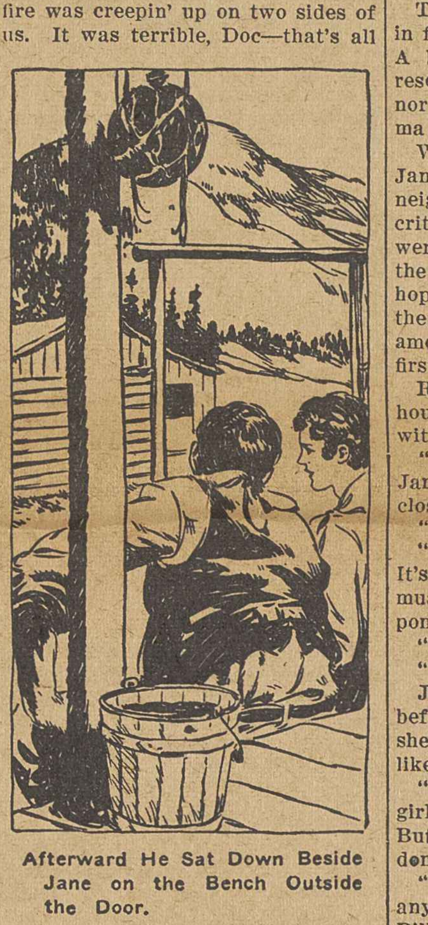
Carpy tried in vain to quiet his patient. "You mustn't have any excitement tonight. I've done my best for you. Now, damn it, dry up: I tell you you can't see him."

A dreadful light dawned on the barber. His gaunt jaw dropped, his hollow eyes flames. "Doc!" he cried out. "Panama's dead!"

The word rang in Carpy's ears for many a day. "Jake," he said brusquely, "I've tried to soften things for you—doesn't seem to be no use. They pulled him out of the woods after the fire passed a grove back of Gunlock Knob."

"That's where we got caught—right there," cried the barber. "We got back to the ponies an' had to cut across a piece of burned timber to get out. A dead limb from one of the trees fell on me. I went down with the pony. When I kicked loose, the pony bolted, an' when I tried to get up, my leg was broke.

"There we was, Doc. Panama's pony couldn't carry double. The fire was creepin' up on two sides of us. It was terrible, Doc—that's all a man can say, just terrible. We couldn't hardly hear us talk. Panama picked me up to set me on his pony. 'No!' I yells. 'It won't do, Panama, an' you know it. I'm done, Panama. Save yourself. You ain't got a minute to lose. Get back on your horse and run for it.'



Afterward He Sat Down Beside Jane on the Bench Outside the Door.

"'Shut up, Jake,' Panama yells. 'Get up on that pony!' I tried to fight it out with him—but I was crazy with pain 'n' couldn't handle myself, neither. He lifted me on his pony, stuck the lines in my hands. 'Beat it,' he yelled. "What'll you do?' says I. 'I've got good legs, I'll run,' he says."

A melancholy procession took the desert road that night for Sleepy Cat. In the wagon lay Panama; beside him lay his injured friend, Spotts—Jake would have it no other way.

In town, next day, the boys tried vainly to figure out some sort of a decent burial service for Panama.

"I've got it," exclaimed Jeff Sollers, who was sitting near Carpy. He slapped the doctor's knee. "We'll have the old Doc himself make a few remarks over Panama."

"No."

"Yes."

"Hell, no! I won't do it," growled Carpy.

"But why won't you?"

"Well, I'll tell you. I'm just another bum, like poor Panama—that's all. You needn't yell—I know. The way I look at it is this: Nothing in Panama's life became him like the leaving of it. Surely no man could die a nobler death than Panama's. Now I want to see a man who lives a life like Panama's death say a few words over Panama, and I'm going to try to get him to do it. Who? The old padre over on the Reservation."

"But he won't do it. Panama didn't belong to his church!"

"That doesn't make a damned bit of difference, boys. The padre knew Panama. He knows me. He will do it—if we're lucky enough to catch him."

Dr. Carpy called up the padre and was lucky. At least the padre was at home. As to his coming—that was something else again. Carpy held him long on the wire; he pleaded earnestly. At last he agreed to come.

At eight o'clock, the welcome splutter of the dilapidated engine was heard outside. The padre, a Gunlock buck chauffeur, and a little Indian boy of ten or twelve disembarked, and the reception committee welcomed the guest of honor to the hotel office—long well filled. And headed by the clergyman and the little fellow, the growing crowd straggled down the street to Harry Tenison's, where poor Panama lay in state.

Padre Cataldo, laying aside his hat and his overcoat of many patches, made the sign of the cross, knelt a moment in silent prayer, and, standing behind the pool table on which Panama lay in his coffin, spoke clearly and simply.

"Boys," said the old priest, "this looks like a queer place for a padre; perhaps a queer job. But I've known Bill Hayes a good many years. I knew him in his wildest days. And I've known him for the last three years, since he turned over a new leaf.

"Bill used to visit me and talk with me. It was something I said to him once, so he told me, that started him thinking. "What's all this about—this greedy, rotten old world?' he asked himself.

"Bill was not a follower of my faith—you know that. But he believed Jesus Christ to be the Son of God, and for three years he has tried the best he could to keep his commandments.

"Naturally, I never heard Bill preach. But I have been told what eloquent and sincere sermons he did preach. But out there in those forgotten hills, facing—no, not facing but embracing—a dreadful death, Bill preached a deathless sermon, for he took his text from the lips of God himself. And wherever you bury him, boys, let the words of that text be graven on his tomb:

"'Greater love than this no man hath, that a man lay down his life for his friends.'"

The lull in the fire threat issued in fresh dangers to the hill ranches. A blaze starting up anew on the reservation cut-over lands crept north on the very night that Panama was buried.

With what aid she could bring, Jane rode next morning over to her neighbor's only to find the situation critical. By noon the fire fighters were being driven back all along the line. But, loath to abandon hope of saving the ranch buildings, the men fought till Denison, riding among them, warned them to look first to their own safety.

Riding then fast to the ranch house, he found Jane consulting with Quong in the kitchen.

"I must think of your safety, Jane," he said. "It is getting too close to danger here."

"Bill, is it that bad?"

"We might as well face the truth. It's not safe here for you. You must go, and quickly. Are your ponies saddled?"

"They are."

"Then take Quong and mount up."

Janes eyes softened. They fell before his. "I just hate to go, Bill," she pouted, tantalizingly. "It seems like deserting a friend."

"It isn't Jane. You may imagine, girl, how I hate to send you away. But you know who I'm thinking of, don't you?"

"You mustn't think too much of anybody but yourself just now, Bill," she murmured. "I do some thinking myself these days."

Quong had been called. Always forehanded, without any words he was winking and blinking in his saddle.

Denison handed Jane her lines. She leaned toward him and spoke low: "Bill, will you promise me, solemnly, one thing?"

"Promise you anything, girl."

"Solemnly, Bill?"

"Solemnly. What is it?"

"That you'll think first for your own safety. Now promise!"

"I promise, Jane."

"For my sake, Bill?"

"Do you mean that?"

"I do mean it."

"God bless you. If the buildings go, I'll ride over to report tomorrow."

Jane slept so well that she opened her eyes in the heavy air of daybreak, conscience-stricken at having rested peacefully during the hours in which her neighbor might have been burned out.

She dressed, ate Quong's hurried breakfast, saddled her pony, and set out for Denison's, directing Quong to follow as soon as he could. The smoke grew more dense as she neared the ridge, and she reluctantly turned about for home and told Quong of her failure and that she would ride up into the high hills to see what was going on.

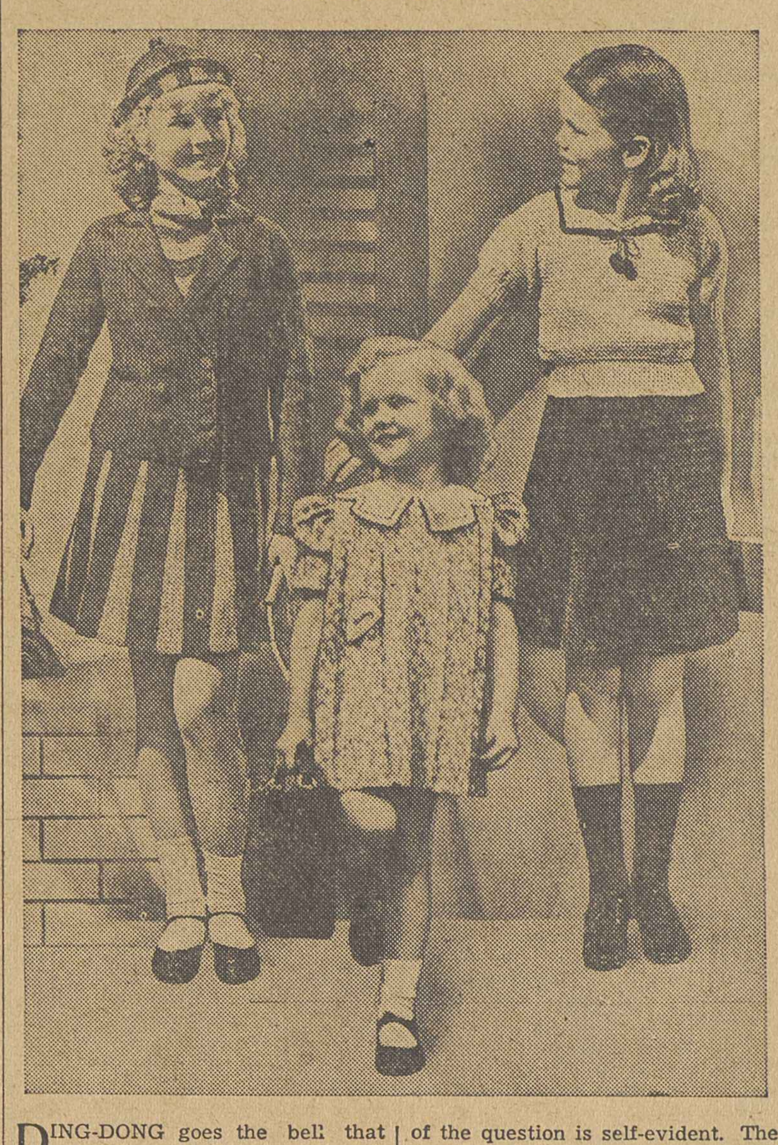
Use Many Fans in China

In China, where there is a fan for every purpose and every occasion, the tea fan is a part of the ceremony of tea-drinking. As soon as the tea is drunk, the host takes his fan and says, "I invite you to fan." Not to be equipped with a fan, or to refrain from using it when asked, is a serious breach of etiquette. In Burma, monastic novices use a large fan to screen them from the sight of woman. In Colombia, South America, every kitchen is furnished with a cabbage palm fan for starting fires. The Japanese youth is given a fan when he attains his majority. In tropical countries they are used to temper the heat and dispel insects.

"Go-to-School" Knits and Prints

By CHERIE NICHOLAS



DING-DONG goes the bell that sounds the knell of vacation as it rings in "first day of school." And again doting mothers are confronted with the problem of planning practical and as attractive as practical school wardrobes for the children of the household, for as every mother knows much of the poise and happiness of little girls in the classroom depends upon the feeling of self confidence which a pretty frock inspires.

To help in this matter of apparelling little daughter to a nicety here are two suggestions we have to offer—knits and prints. Perhaps it would be more accurate to say crochets as well as knits for as much crocheting is being done these days as knitting. Simply a matter of choice. To emphasize the vogue for crochets and prints we are showing three as cunning classroom outfits as ever a fond mother might hope to include in a little girl's clothes collection.

See little Miss Twelve posing to the left in the picture arrayed in an ensemble that couldn't be prettier if it tried. It is crocheted in two shades of blue knit-cro-sheen. For the encouragement of would-be crocheters who feel the urge to copy this most attractive outfit we are telling you that the stitch is very simple and goes like lightning when once you get started. The skirt has gores of the lighter blue and the blouse hidden by the scarf is in matching light blue. It has a stylish high neck that closes with a drawstring. There are crochet buttons to add glamor to the occasion. The cutey-cute bag, the scarf and the hat are crocheted to match.

In a many-piece crocheted outfit as just described, the practical side of the question is self-evident. The blouse, the skirt and the jacket may be worn separately, which means that any number of changes are possible, being just what is a most needful virtue for school togs.

The simplicity and practicality of the blouse-and-skirt two-piece to the left is a big argument in its favor. This crocheted suit for the grammar school Miss is a real find when it comes to appropriate dress for play or for classroom. The blouse contrasts the dark skirt which is in keeping with the pres-style trend to bring out striking color effects. The wide sailor collar provides a nautical touch. The gay tassel tie gives a final flourish to this most attractive back-to-school dress which is so easily crocheted of mercerized knitting and crochet cotton. We most forgot to mention the crowning glory of these crocheted garments — they wash perfectly and with as little trouble as a gingham, a pique or any wash fabric.

Picture for yourself little daughter clad in a cunning print such as the little girl centered in the picture is wearing. The grand thing about dresses made of the new prints this season is that it is perfectly safe to buy the correct size for no longer does one have to allow for shrinkage. That is, if the fabric is one of the newer prints that are sanforized shrunk. It means a great deal to know that little daughter's gay print frock will not shrink out of fit in tubbing.

In the washgoods sections one finds the cunningest classroom prints imaginable such as fashions the little girl's dress which is pictured above.

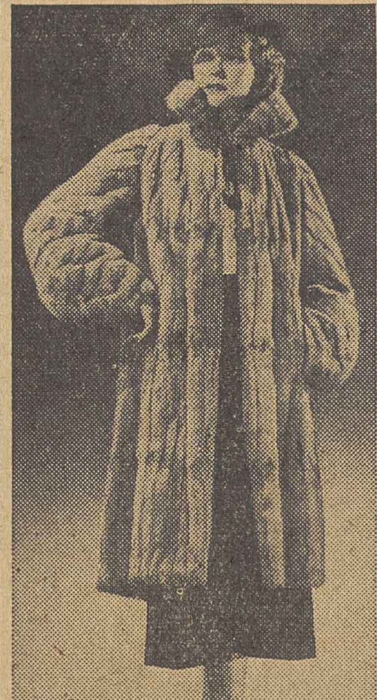
SQUIRREL IN VOGUE

By CHERIE NICHOLAS



A pleasing topic of conversation among fur stylists and one that is creating no-end enthusiasm, is in regard to the revival of the ever beloved youthful-looking and wonderfully flattering gray squirrel. When you go fur-coat shopping keep this in mind and look for the charming squirrel models that are making so welcome a re-appearance. Perfect for sports and for more formal wear also, is the stunning double-duty coat pictured. It brings back squirrel worked in the striking new split skin fashion.

ALIX SCULPTURES CLOTHES TO FIGURE

Outstanding among silhouettes for fall are those drawn by Alix. Her dresses are fashioned to display every curve of a rounded, feminine form through masterly manipulation and drapery of soft, clinging fabric. This season, as last, her favorite is jersey, both silk and rayon.

Some of her skirts are so full and flaring that they resemble lampshades or parachutes, while others are caught under the hem like Turkish trousers. Fall coats are cut with a swirling flare.

Evening clothes, particularly, would delight an ancient Greek sculptor. Fullness is concentrated in groups of folds or gathers directly in front or back, not obscuring, but, rather emphasizing, lovely curving outlines.

Borders of four or five bright colors emphasize the flare at the hem of many evening dresses.

Luxury and Elegance to Dominate Fall Costumes

Elegance and luxury will dominate the mode this autumn if the costumes already appearing are any criterion. Magnificent fabrics, beautifully cut on exquisite lines, is the recipe for late afternoon and informal and formal evening clothes. Typical of this trend is a white dinner ensemble with a long slim skirt of white and silver blistered crepe and a simple surplice bodice of plain silver metal cloth. The shoulders, with double puffs and the tailored lapel collar, are smart notes on the short jacket that is fitted in back and open in front.

Motorist's Buttons

Among the novelty buttons that have made their appearance are those that carry the various road signs for motorists.

Women Smoked Before

The common practice of smoking among women of today, instead of being an innovation, is merely the revival of an old custom. In Ohio history there is plenty of evidence of women of the early days smoking pipes and cigars and even chewing tobacco and snuff.

The Montevallo Times

PUBLISHED ON THURSDAY

W. M. WYATT, Publisher

Subscription - - - - $1.00

Published weekly in the Masonic Building on Main Street. "Entered as second-class matter, April 1, 1933, at the Post Office at Montevallo, Ala., under the Act of Congress, March 3, 1879."

OUR APOLOGIES AND A CORRECTION

In last week's issue of The Montevallo Times in the Ebenezer News it was stated by the correspondent that "Mr. Jack Holcombe and Miss Cora Lee Harris, of Underwood were married last Saturday night;" also that "we wish to announce the wedding of Miss Mary Sue Holcombe to Mr. Grady Scott, of Siluria, on Saturday afternoon, Sept. 12."

The Times is informed by the parents of Mr. Jack Holcombe and Miss Mary Sue Holcombe that the foregoing statements appearing in Ebenezer News last week are not true and were not authorized by the parties concerned nor by anyone in authority acting for them.

Therefore, in compliance with the request of Mr. and Mrs. Holcombe, and in our desire to hold to the truth in all things, the publisher of The Times is glad to take advantage of this first opportunity to make correction of the statements published in Ebenezer News of last week relative to Mr. Jack Holcombe and Miss Mary Sue Holcombe.

We apologize to these parties, and retract said statements so far as The Montevallo Times is concerned. Further, we offer our assurance to the Holcombe family that we had no knowledge or intentions of making any embarrassing or damaging statements or any misrepresentations about them.

It appears that The Times, in publishing the erroneous statements of last week, was led into error by a correspondent who was either uninformed as to the true facts, or else who sought to play a joke in a matter that is enttirely to sacred and serious for jesting, especially in the public print.

We hope Mr. and Mrs. Holcombe and their son and daughter will consider the matter in its true light on the part of The Times, and believe us when we say we regret the error, and tha[illegible] had no idea of the fa[illegible] of [illegible]ructive [illegible]ents — and that we wo[illegible] have hurt them with this misrepresentation, had we but known of the error in time to have avoided it.

FARM COOPERATIVES AND NATIONAL AFFAIRS

"Agricultural cooperatives can render valuable service in the development of national affairs," said Dr. E. W. Gaumnitz, recently. "National policies are not just pulled out of the air. They are formulated in large part by those groups largely producer groups, that are interested in the welfare of agriculture. Cooperatives . . . . .can also render salutary service in proper methods of administration of agricultural programs".

In past years, the leaders of the great agricultural selling cooperatives have taken a steadily increasing interest in national issues and legislation. They have conferred with high government officials, from presidents down, and their advice has been sought and often accepted. This has been responsible for a large measure of the progress the co-ops have made in bettering farm management in bad times as well as good.

Cooperative heads may be called upon to aid to a still greater extent in formulating policies in the future. And they can be of benefit not only to their members, but to the nation's consumers, if they are wise and clear-sighted.

SPECIAL SESSION

Montgomery—Predictions by educational leaders and political observers that Governor Graves would break his silence about the anticipated special session of the legislature this week as schools thruout the State opened their doors were knocked into a cocked hat. However, the school heads are still hopeful that the lawmakers will be summoned by mid-November.

"Satisfy the wolf and save the sheep," was the laconic reply of Representative Harry Hodges, of Fayette, when asked last week if he could offer a solution of the State's school plight.

"I do not think a one per cent gross receipts tax would be felt by the people of Alabama," he explained. "Such a tax, coupled with a measure to legalize and tax alcoholic beverages would bring in sufficient additional revenue to keep the schools open and permit the comptroller to pay 100 cents on the dollar on appropriations to the other state departments.

"I repeat—if we are called back in special session to consider new revenue measures, I believe this plan would be acceptable to a majority of my colleagues in the House," he added. "And so, we'd satisfy the wolf and save the sheep."

Hodges, who is a Fayette merchant, who might be considered the least likely to favor a gross receipts levy, was named chairman of a special House committee during the 1936 session to draft a "compromise" revenue bill after several selective or modified sales tax bills were discarded.

He said he had not seen Governor Graves for more than three months and knew nothing of his plans for another extra session of the lawmakers.

"Thus," he added, "my remarks should not be construed as reflecting the views of the Governor because he has not acquainted me with his views."

Hodges said he felt sure that unless the bruited special session is called before the end of the calendar year the legislature will be unable to forestall the collapse of the 1936-37 school term. He pointed out that many counties would be forced to close their school doors before January 1 unless additional funds are provided.

PUBLIC HEALTH

Another vexatious problem the legislature must face, if and when it meets this year, is the health department's sorry financial condition. From a peak appropriation of $686,000 in 1930, the department was cut to $400,000 in 1933—a decrease of 42 per cent. Worse, the Fletccher budget act this year lopped off $150,000 from that amount, reducing the appropriation to $250,000.

However, no effort will be made by the department to hike its appropriation, despite the heavy drain on its resources during the current infantile paralysis epidemic, declared Dr. J. N. Baker, state health officer.

"We are primarily concerned with the stabilization of our appropriation," Dr. Baker explained. "Though strict economy must be exercised, we believe we can carry on effectively if our $400,000 annual appropriation is paid in full. For some inscrutable reason a portion of the department's activities is not embraced in the legal interpretation of 'essential functions of government' exempt from proration.

"The budget act's paring knife reduced our funds $150,000 for the present fiscal year," he added. "Nevertheless, the department has been able to maintain the 57 county health units largely through the assistance of the WPA during the 'polio' epidemic. If our appropriation is stabilized, assuring full payment, the department can use all or part of its 'recovered' revenue to match available federal subsidies."

Dr. Baker said he was hopeful that funds would be provided to put into effect the 1935 act appropriating $75,000 for the establishment and maintenance of tuberculosis sanatoriums. The act which was unopposed on its passage during the regular session stipulated that release of the money was contingent upon the financial well-being of the State on approval of the Governor.

HIGHWAY PATROL

Collections from automobile drivers' licenses for the fiscal year ending Sept. 30 will be approximattely $240,00,0, though the legislature anticipated receipts of only $180,000.

No department of the State has received more praise than the highway patrol which is supported entirely by fees from motorists licenses. Chief Walter K. McAdory said his department has already paid for the fleet of new automobiles and motorcycles, uniforms, and other equipment, and indicated the force of 90 officers may be increased greatly next year.

CONTRACTORS BOARD

Another new state department—the Licensing Board for General Contractors, created to regulate contractors and weed out fly-by-night building "promoters" — will show a net profit over operating expenses of $15,000 to $20,000 according to a pre-audit estimate.

Actual expenses of the Board will be less than $5,000. Ed Pettus, of Montgomery, is chairman of the Board.

FREEING BRIDGES

It is a safe bet that Alabama's 15 toll bridges will be freed about the first of Octoer, despite desperate efforts by a small group of bondholders to thwart Governor Graves' refunding plan by which the Highway Department will "rent" the spans at $300,000 a year, the rental to be used to retire the bonds of the Bridge Corporation.

Lawrence Lee, the Governor's legal adviser announced this week that owners of bonds aggregating $2,850,000 of the $3,780,000 outstanding issue had approved the plan. Only about $30,000 of the bonds remain to be pledged to make the plan legally airtightt. The Supreme Court held that owners of 76 per cent of the bonds must approve the refinancing, by which the State, in effect, assumes the debt, while at the same time reducing the interest rate from 6 to 4 per cent.

Alabama's state bonds have proved a rich investment even during the lean years of the depression, an examination of prices reveals.

W. W. Brooks, the Governor's financial adviser, said that Class A renewal bonds at present are priced at about $107.50, though three years ago they could be purchased at $70 to $80.

The 4½ per cent highway bond issue purchased at $72 for the sinking fund in 1932 are now selling at $112 to $115.

Warrant refunding bonds, secured by income tax receipts, with the unusually low interest rate of 3.80 per cent also are selling well over par, Brooks said.

Gov. Bibb Graves last week received the resignation of Sheriff M. C. Waites, of Coosa county, who explained that ill health prevented his continuance in office. L. D. Crew, chief deputy, has been apointed to fill the vacancy.

Lawrence B. Tipton, of Selma, Alabama's first safety director, tendered his resignation last week effective Sept. 15, to assume the directorship of the traffic safety institute of the Automotive Manufacturers Association at an annual salary of $6,600. His offices will be located at Northwestern University, Evanstton, Ill. The Governor said he had no immediate plans to fill the vacancy.

A total of $73,132,031 was allocated in Alabama under the emergency relief acts of 1935 and 1936, according to Ray Crowe, state administrator.

Of that amount, $65,859,232 has been obligatted, and $51,205,536 actually spent. The WPA alone accounted for $21,205,536 of the total, of which $19,198,026 had been obligated and $16,478,826 expended.

Crow said 55,056 persons were employed in Alabama by relief agencies during the period. Of those, 30,941 were from the WPA rolls, 8,044 on emergency conservation projects, and 16,081 employed by other agencies. The figures were taken from the week of July 25.

The State Armory Commission has authorized Adj. Gen. John C. Coleman of the Alabama National Guard to borrow $10,000 from private sources for use in the current armory construction program.

The money will be borrowed on the armory buildings now under construction and where additional financing is required.

Charles R. Robinson, of Ashville (St. Clair County) has qualified with Secretary of State, Howell Turner, as Republican candidate for Congress from the fourth district, opposing Congressman Sam Hobbs, of Selma, Democratic incumbent.

Efficiency

A man got a job polishing motor-car bodies. During the first week he was taught to polish with the right hand only. The second week he was made to use the left hand only. Next week he had to use both hands simultaneously

At the end of the third week the foreman said to him, "Easy, isn't it?"

"Yes," said the man with a tired grin, "and if you'll just fix a broom to my pants I'll sweep the floor at the same time."—Tit-Bits Magasine.

How It Happened

Blinks looked a wreck. His face was covered with sticking-plaster; both eyes were black; and his left arm was in a sling.

"What happened?" a friend asked. "A motor accident?"

"No; a loose floorboard."

"Tripped over it?"

"No; trod on it, as I was sneaking in the other night and woke the missus up."

Cards Tumble Sign Possibly Gang Has Underrated Rivals

HAS the same sad fate which overtook our own Polo Grounds front runners for a pair of seasons caught up with the once proud Gas House Gangsters?

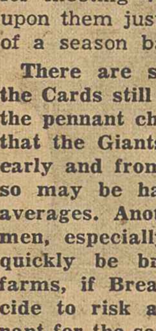
Definitely—for all that they were well aware of their pitching frailties—the Cards all along have been vocally confident they were the class of the circuit. When, now and then, they labored through an unfortunate series it did not seem to distress them. They merely shouted that this could be charged up to what Dizzy Dean terms "sperimentin'" and then moved on to the next address.

In quieter moments all of them—manager and batboy—confided that they looked forward to the waning days of the season. Then, when experimenting had gone quite far enough, they expected to turn on so much heat that even Manhattan clients would be panicked into grudging applause.

They spoke with such great—and apparently quite honest—unconcern about the future that there is little wonder even the Giants believed them early in July. Even now—as one who picked them at the start and has abode with them in happy confidence ever since—I cannot believe they were up to some of their old sly tricks on a faithful follower.

Now that they have undoubtedly fulfilled the letter of their prophecies by turning on the heat and causing previously timid men and maids of Manhattan to indulge in ecstatic patty-cakings, I cannot believe that such miracle - working mortals were guilty of double-talking all the while.

So far as I am concerned they could scarcely have known that their boisterous antics would so sorely enrage the Boston and Pittsburgh peasants that the heat would come from such directions. Neither could they have had any inkling that the Manhattan merriment could be partly occasioned by the support they recently have been giving to one of the most amazing teams of recent seasons.



Frank Frisch

Instead, it seems that Frankie Frisch and his followers under-rated their adversaries. In spite of the fact that several St. Louis pennants have been won by mad drives down the home stretch, they seemed to feel that they never could be so sadly overtaken, as were the Giants and Cubs of other too recent seasons. So they were caught improperly arrayed for meeting visitors who sneaked upon them just as upon the Giants of a season back.

There are several reasons why the Cards still may be fortunate in the pennant chase. One of them is that the Giants started their spurt early and from very far back and so may be halted by the law of averages. Another is that there are men, especially pitchers, who can quickly be brought in from the farms, if Breadon and Rickey decide to risk a minor league pennant for the sake of a big-time success. The third, and probably best, reason is that the Cards are a set of husky, hard-bitten athletes. Only the Yankees, formed out of a very similar mold, have previously seemed able to recover as quickly from adversity. That ability to rise above defeat is more important in a flag chase. In fact, no team without this quality ever won a pennant.

Success in baseball often is almost entirely a matter of spirit. When the Braves came from the bottom to accomplish their 1914 miracle, they scarcely believed what was happening until almost at the finish. Then, when the going might have been tough, they were sustained by the conviction that, no matter how good opponents might seem to be, their own luck was considerably better. So they felt they had nothing to worry about and devoted their best efforts to playing baseball.

Somewhat the same thing happened to the Cubs last fall and to the Cards in 1934, although in both cases the short space of remaining time and utter collapse of a rival had much to do with the result. Indeed, several Cub stars quite frankly admitted that all along they felt it merely was a beautiful dream and only woke up when they found the Tigers whaling the merry blue blazes out of them in the World Series.

When It Is the Other Fellow

Have you ever noticed that when the other fellow is set in his way, he's obstinate; when you are, it's just firmness? When the other fellow doesn't like your friends, he's prejudiced; when you don't like him, you are a good judge of human nature?

When the other fellow tries to treat someone especially well, he's toadying; when you try the same game, you are using tact?

When the other fellow picks flaws in things, he's cranky; when you do, you are discriminating?

When the other fellow says what he thinks, he's spiteful; when you do, you are frank?

Defects of Success

He that has never known Adversity is but half acquainted with others, or with himself. Constant success shows us but one side of the world. For, as it surrounds us with Friends, who will tell us only our merits, so it silences those Enemies from whom alone we can learn our defects.—Colton.

"More Babies!" Europe's Dictators Cry

Soviet Russia, Germany and Italy Embark on Programs Designed to Increase Marriages and Step Up Birth Rate.

By WILLIAM C. UTLEY

MORE marriages! More babies! More people!

That is the formula of the three great European dictatorships for more power in the future. Drastic laws have been ordered to check declines in birth rates, as well as to whittle down the death rates in Russia, Germany and Italy.

In Germany and Italy, the measures taken produced a brief flurry of success, but this success appears now to be on the wane; indeed, present indications are that the birth rates in these two nations are fast slipping back to levels as low as before the program began.

Only in Russia is the program succeeding, and there it is going over with a bang. But the Soviet measures are those of a completely communistic society, and most of them would be direct offenses to the morals of a Christian country with the type of society that we know. Further, the Russians are of a stock more suited to increasing the population than the other two nations.

Multiple Marriage at Berlin in 1933.

The Soviet Russians are multiplying more rapidly today than any other people of the world. By the time the eighth Five-Year Plan ends in 1967, it is expected the nation's population will reach 300,000,000. It is 173,000,000 now, including a net increase of births over deaths equaling 4,000,000 in 1935.

Room for Expansion.

Sociological experts believe that the Soviet birth rate will continue to increase. Taken by and large, the Reds are just coming out of a primitive period and are naturally prolific.

There is plenty of space in Russian territory for any population expansion of which the Reds are capable, and there will be plenty of food for everybody. Famines in past days destroyed millions of Russians in a year, but there will be no more of those. Irrigation projects are quenching the thirst of the drouth regions. Collective farming has been stabilized. Most important of all, agriculture has been spread over many areas, far apart, so that a drouth in one area would affect only a comparatively small portion of the crop.

Soviet laws encourage the marriage of persons we would hardly consider of the marrying age. They also permit relations between men and women which allow women to have children under conditions which would bring them shame in western countries. It is not considered a disgrace for a single woman to have a child. An unmarried father who disappears is disgraced, though. Many unmarried girls in Russia have children just because they want them.

Care of Expectant Mothers.

A state of legal marriage exists in Soviet Russia simply if a man and woman are living together. Civil registration offices—the Zags—will perform a simple ceremony for those of formal preferences, although there is no sentiment connected with it. The registration gives the girl some added protection and increases her chances for alimony if her husband leaves her.

Communistic nurseries aid working women to care for their children. When they are with child they are permitted to leave their positions for awhile, but their pay goes on.

As a result of these policies the U. S. S. R. in five years showed an increase of 11,500,000 persons, as compared with 850,000 for England, 1,300,000 for Germany and 650,000 for France. While the death rate is declining the birth rate is estimated at between 35 and 50 per thousand.

The program undertaken by the Hitler government in Germany is intended to control marriages and births. Definitely fixed classes suffering from hereditary diseases are sterilized. To insure the quality of its population, Germany requires persons intending to marry to go to the bureau for heredity and race supervision for a marriage-health certificate. They are forbidden to marry Jews.

Tough on Bachelors.

Every encouragement is offered to stimulate marriages. Couples are given government certificates, called "marriage aid" loans, with which they may buy household goods. These are repaid in small installments, but each of the first four children born reduces the loan by 25 per cent.

If the government is easy on married couples, it strikes a balance in its attitude toward bachelors. Their taxes were boosted 100 to 150 per cent.

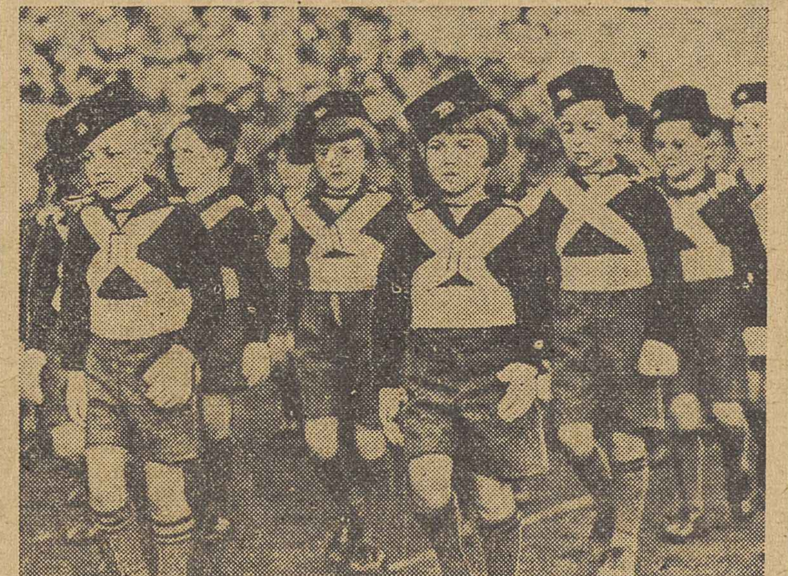
Some cities (and occasionally the Reich, if the case is very urgent) pay premiums in the form of merchandise certificates for children. They amount to 100 marks for each child, with a maximum of 1,000 marks for one family. Some municipalities give financial aid amounting to 20 or 30 marks a month for a child until it reaches fourteen. Families with children are given preference in the distribution of jobs and in housing.

The Nazi Mother and Child organization gives advice and money and provides recreation and vacations for poor mothers.

Vast Propaganda Mill.

While the married couples are given every advantage, the government deliberately attempts to make life more or less difficult for the unmarried. Married men get jobs first. And often an unmarried man under 25 years of age is forced to "exchange jobs" with a married man. This simply means that the married man gets the job and the bachelor is sent into the labor service or "Land Help." Large families get first call on homes and benefit from greatly reduced railroad fares.

Germany is in the throes of a mild "back to the land" movement at present. Thousands of persons are being removed from "white collar" jobs and placed in manual labor. Manual laborers generally have larger families.



More Youngsters Like These Is Mussolini's Aim.

By no means least important of all the measures Hitler is using to build up Germany's population is the vast propaganda mill of the Nazi government. It is at work night and day to shape the public mind toward the favor of large families.

Hitler's program started well, but shows definite indications of failing to attain its goal. Germany had 516,973 marriages, or 7.9 per thousand population in 1932; these figures grew to 739,449 or 11.1 per thousand in two years.

There were 971,174 births, or 14.7 per thousand in 1933. These were increased to 1,261,273 or 18.9 per thousand in 1935. The growth of population in 1933 was 233,297, or 3.5 per thousand, and in 1934 was 472,074, or 7 per thousand.

Italy's Program.

And then something began to slip. There were only 650,851 marriages or 9.7 per thousand in 1935. According to estimates of conditions in the larger cities, the marriage rate has slipped back to below the 1932 level this year.

The birth rate, which rose .9 per thousand last year, is running below the levels of 1933 and 1934. The death rate is on the increase, and the growth of population, computed by subtracting the number of deaths from the number of births, has slowed up to below the 1934 point.

For nine years now, Italy has pursued a program which it hopes will make the nation's population 60,000,000 by 1950, with questionable success, at least.

For a short while in 1930, signs were encouraging to Mussolini, but with the exception of that period, the birth rate has been steadily falling for fourteen years.

Death Rate Well Reduced.

The marriage rate also is believed to be declining. The growth of population is proceeding at a slower pace than at any time within the last fifty years, with the exception of the years between 1916 and 1920 when it was affected by the World war. Yet the Fascist dicatorship is trying steadily to improve the situation, chiefly by using methods similar to those of Germany.

While the campaign to increase the birth rate has fallen far short of its mark, Mussolini's efforts to cut down the death rate have been better rewarded. The death rate stands now at the lowest point within the scope of Italian historians. This is so far offset by the falling birth rate, however, that the population of the country has remained about the same for some years.

Vast propaganda measures have been supplemented by measures of reward for the prolific and penalty for the unprolific, much as they have in Germany. There is a tax on bachelors, who can never say in Italy that "they know when they are well off." This not only makes marrying more attractive to them, but the revenue from the tax is used to give assistance to poor mothers.

Prizes for Triplets.

Parents of children are everywhere given privileges. Honeymoons to Rome are paid for by the government. Persons of small means contemplating matrimony are offered "nuptial prizes" which range from $125 to $400. Birth prizes are given on a scale which increases with the number of children from $30 for the first child to $250 for the sixth and each succeeding one. There are special prizes for twins and triplets. An Italian Papa Dionne would be as lucky as a winner of the Irish sweepstakes.

Married men, of course, always get the best government jobs first, and single men have little license to expect promotion.

The decline in the death rate, which might ordinarily have been expected to occur with the strides made in medical science during the last few years, has been expedited by government measures.

Much credit is due the National Institution for the Protection of Motherhood and Infanthood, which is endowed and operated by the government. Its recently - built maternity hospitals, expertly staffed and equipped with the most modern devices, are to be found throughout the nation. Early Duels

During the last century in many countries, a man who killed another in a duel was tried for murder and there were several executions. Among the early Germans the contrary practice prevailed. If the man vanquished in a duel survived his wounds, he was hanged! As early as 501, the German King Gundebald decreed the duel as a proper method of settling disputes, and when a bishop remonstrated, he pointed out that the duel had its religious connotations because God would be on the side of the right in the contest.

Save Grass Seed, Expert's Advice

Red Clover, Alfalfa, Will Be in Great Demand, Growers Are Told.

Supplied by the United States Department of Agriculture.—WNU Service.

Pointing to the prospect of reduced supplies of grass seed this season, Dr. A. G. Black, chief of the bureau of agricultural economics, recommends that farmers make every effort to save all possible red clover and alfalfa seed.

Farmers in many of the principal seed-producing regions will harvest a little less than half as much grass seed this year as last, he said. The timothy seed crop is less than one-third as large as last year's crop of 128,223,000 pounds, while redtop appears to be around 40 per cent of last year's production of 9,750,000 pounds.

There is a relatively large carry-over of timothy and redtop, a fair sized carry-over of blue grass seed, and much above normal stocks of sudan grass seed.

Dr. Black said that the situation as to legume seeds is not definitely known because most of the clover seeds are harvested later than the grasses, but present conditions are unfavorable. The crimson clover seed crop of approximately 1,000,000 pounds, is about one - third smaller this year than last. White clover is a substantially larger crop than last season, although the 1935 crop of 450,000 pounds was much below normal. The carry-over of clover seed is unusually small.

The harvest of the red clover and alfalfa crops, two groups of seeds that will be needed most next spring, will not be completed until later. There is, therefore, still time for growers of these legumes to make a special effort to save the seed where they are not forced to cut the crops for hay, Dr. Black said.

Drouth Silage Problem Faced by Many Farmers

What is the feeding value of fodder or silage made from drouth-damaged corn? How much feed will such corn yield per acre?

The yield of feed per acre depends so much upon the amount of growth attained before cutting that it is impossible to generalize on the probable production in any one case. Tests at the Indiana station, however, indicate that corn cut just after it has completed the pollination stage will produce about one-half as much dry matter per acre as when it is cut at the hard kernel stage — the point most favored for normal silo filling. In the Indiana experiment, corn cut at four feet in height produced less than one-tenth as much dry matter per acre as when it was permitted to stand until the hard kernel stage.

As for differences in feeding value, the limited information available indicates that fodder or silage made from drouth damaged corn will probably run a little higher in protein, pound for pound, than ordinary fodder or silage. On the other hand, it runs lower in sugar and starch and does not keep as well. Thus, drouth damaged corn may not make silage of as high quality as normal corn, but it will be good feed, nevertheless. — Wallaces' Farmer.

Rye for Live Stock

Rye, sometimes used for live stock, is not a very satisfactory feeding material. If limited to 20 per cent of the ration in dry lot feeding of hogs, however, rye may be 90 per cent as valuable as corn, pound for pound, says a writer in Wallaces' Farmer. When ground or cracked, it also compares fairly well with corn as a feed for beef cattle. Rye is liked least by horses and best by sheep. In the case of horses it should be coarsely ground or crushed and fed only as part of the ration. Sheep, on the other hand, will handle unground rye as well as the same amount of barley. Rye used as a live stock feed should contain very little, if any, ergot. The presence of ergot is indicated by purplish, abnormal kernels. In particular, ergoty kernels should be kept away from pregnant animals.

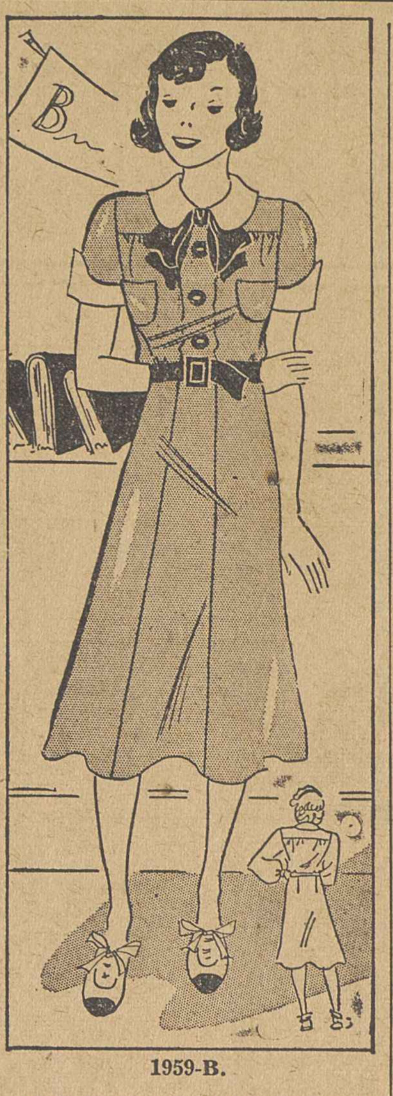
Dairy Cows to Be Listed

Every animal enrolled in dairy improvement associations will be listed as to identity and production by the U. S. Bureau of Dairy Industry at Washington. There are 405,000 cows with production records and 17,000 herd sires enrolled in 900 cow testing units in the country. Less than 75,000 cows in the associations are identified by pure-bred registrations, and the new plan will identify the other cows not listed in the breed club records.

Prolificacy

Prolificacy should be just as much a goal toward which breeders strive as the type and breed characteristics which appear so important today, says the Indiana Farmer's Guide. The overhead of keeping the breeding stock is indirectly proportional to the number of offspring. Latest scientific evidence indicates that prolificacy is found in strains of every class of animal, and it is best to propagate such strains.

Shirtwaister for School Girl



1959-B.

Here is the frock for juniors to make for school days. A combination of rhythm in its hemline, rhyme in its color scheme and racy in its style. For late summer wear, try tub silk, linen, cotton or shantung with long or short sleeves. For autumn and winter —"tweedy" silk crepe or broadcloth.

The waist, gathered slightly to the shoulder yoke front and back, has a center pleat and pockets for trimming. Buttons—a matter of choice. A small collar, tie, and belt complete this most effective frock. By way of suggestion, make the collar and cuffs in contrast, and detachable to be readily removed for laundering.

Barbara Bell Pattern No. 1959-B is available for sizes 8, 10, 12, 14 and 16. Size 12 requires two and three-eighths yards of 35-inch material with one-third yard of 35-inch contrasting material and one yard of ribbon for bow. With long sleeves it requires two and five-eighths yards.

Send for the Barbara Bell Fall Pattern Book containing 100 well-planned, easy-to-make patterns. Exclusive fashions for children, young women, and matrons. Send 15 cents for your copy.

ECONOMIC HIGHLIGHTS

At least one American industry has grown from childhood to maturity during the depression—commercial air transport. An interesting survey of this industry, which is assuming increasing economic significance, appears in a recent issue of the United States News.

At the present time, air passenger traffic in this country is about six times as large as it was in 1929, and the volume has doubled in the last two years. Where less than 462,000 passengers rode the airways in 1934, almost 747,000 left terra firma in 1935. Estimates say that about 900,000 people will board the transports this year. In 1926, when passenger transport was inaugurated on a few scattered lines, only 5,700 people bought tickets.

Startling fact is that while there are established air systems in all modern countries, American air lines carry more passengers than are carried in all the rest of the world combined, along with two-thirds of the world's total of air-borne mail and express.

As everyone knows, air transportation has grown cheaper thru the years—early rates were virtually prohibitive. It has, likewise, grown more comfortable, due to developments in sound-proof cabins, cutting motor vibration, making planes more stable in wind currents, etc. Speed has been markedly increased—modern carriers average 200 miles an hour, where best lines in 1930 averaged little more than 100. And travel has been made safer—last year there was but one passenger fatality for every 24 thousand passenger miles covered.

According to the Department of Commerce, nearly half the population of the country is now served by air-lines, and there are 109 companies in operation with routes totaling a little over 52,000 miles. This coverage is of course not comparable to that offered by railroads and buses, but is increasing gradually.

In spite of industrys' greatly increased volume of business, all has not been cheery in the matter of making profits. Most air-lines live on mail contracts, can't pay expenses on passenger business. So, the government's cancellation of all mail contracts two years ago hit operators hard. The contracts have been resumed, but in many cases the rates paid for mail carrying have been slashed.

Furthermore, the ukeep of airplanes is terrifically expensive. Motors have a relatively short life, as they must have absolutely perfect condition to receive the Department of Commerce okay. And new developments are constantly adding heavily to the obsolescence item on the operator's books. For instance, people marveled not so long ago at the appearance of air planes carrying 10 or 15 people. Latest planned air liners will have four motors and accommodations for 40 passengers besides mail, express and a sizable crew.

As for the future of air transport, it is still in the speculative stage. General transoceanic passenger service is envisioned for the reasonably near future—the giant flying "clippers" traveling from California to the Phillippines and China will soon take passengers. And there is much talk of stratosphere flying, which would vastly increase plane speeds—a ship capable of 200 at 5,000 feet will double that speed as it reaches rarified heights. But the toughest kind of technical problems are involved and it will be years before the dream can be realized, according to even the most optimistic designers and air theorists.

In the meantime, it seems certain that the industry will continue to progress in such matters as plane speed, passengers carried, coverage of the country, etc. There are no signs that it will in any way supplant other media of transport, such as the railroads, trucks and buses, but it offers a very valuable supplementary service. And it is naturally becoming a bigger economic factor as it employs more workers and buys more materials.

It is reliably rumored that those who expected withering campaign blasts from the White House are going to be disappointed. President Roosevelt's strategy — which, of course, can be quickly changed should conditions warrant it — is said to call for non-combative, constructive talks and speeches, such as Mr. Roosevelt's report on his trip through the drought country, made over both big broadcasting chains on Septelber 6.

In the Republican camp, a more aggressive stand will be taken—an incumbent can point to his past record, discuss future policies in general terms and let it go at that, but a contender must denounce. Colonel Knox will be the chief "denouncer", as early speeeches prove. But there will be no "dirty politics" unless all signs fail.

That hitherto unfailing arbiter of coming campaigns, the Literary Digest poll, is on again. Keep your eye on it before placing your bets. If this election is close, it will be interesting to see how near such a poll can come to anticipating the outcome and the victor's majority.

Chain Store, Asset To The Community

Some outstanding country newspaper editors, asked for their opinion on the chain store question, state that when chain stores first started in their towns, they feared the consequences. The editors felt that the chains might be the ruination of independent stores, to the detriment of the community. But after the chain stores had operated for some time, it was found that they were a beneficial influence.

The reason is simple. Progressive chains have aided farmers by broadening markets They have patronized local newspapers. They hae tended to improve local merchandising practices and lower prices to consumers. It has been found that the independents, when efficiently managed, have been able to compete on equal terms with their chain competitors, and have shared in increased business resulting from chain advertising and "pulling power" bringing in residents of outlaying areas to shop in the local market.

As a matter of fact, it is this healthy competition between the chains and independents that has been largely responsible for giving the American people the finest distribution system in the world. Chains have taught independents lessons in efficient selling—and the independents have turned around and taught the chains in individualized service. Both have to keep up with the times—each is continually trying to outdo the other in standards of service, quality and price. The upshot is that both groups go ahead and prosper—while the consumer gets more for his money, the farmer gains a steadily improving market for his produce, and the community progresses.

Hepburn and March In Epic "Mary Of Scotland"

"Mary of Scotland," spectacular photoplay dramatizing Mary Stuart, whose glamorous and tragic career is one of the richest chapters in the turbulent 16th century, will show at the Strand Theatre Sunday and Monday as the product of an unusual array of talent.

Katherine Hepburn and Frederic March co-star as the hapless Scottish beauty and her lover, Earl of Bothwell — roles that give full scope to the brilliance which won for them Academy awards in respectively "Morning Glory" and "Dr. Jekyl and Mr. Hyde."

Nor are the stars of this production alone in having had the highest critical recognition of their brilliance. The story is drawn from the stage hit by Maxwell Anderson. It was directed by John Ford and adapted to the screen by Dudley Nichols.

The film treats of the later years of Mary's life which were made as dramatic and thrilling as any fiction by the intrigues of Elizabeth of England, the murderous treachery of her own nobles, and denunciations by Scotland's fiery religious zealot, John Knox.

It builds to its climax as Mary, proving more a woman than a queen, gives these ruthless enemies the opening they need to blast her from her throne by losing her sense of statecraft in her reckless romance with Bothwell.

Florence Eldridge appears as Elizabeth; Moroni Olsen as Knox; Douglas Walton as Mary's second policy spouse, Lord Darnley; Ian Keith as her power-greedy half-brother, Moray; John Carradine as the Italian adviser, Rizzio, whose fantastic murder turned her distaste for Darnley to hate; and Alan Mobray as Elizabeth's ambassador, Throckmorton; they head the notable cast of forty principals.

Among the many historic places reproduced are Elizabeth's palaces at Whitehall and Fotheringay, and Scottish Holyrood, Dunbar, and Lochleven castles.

Plans For Red Cross Roll Call

WILL BE ANNOUNCED BY MISS BROOKE ABOUT OCTOBER FIRST

Mrs. Beatrice Vines, representing American National Red Cross, was in Montevallo Tuesday, for the purpose of discussing and advising with local chapter officials, plans for the approaching Red Cross Roll Call, which will be scheduled at the usual time in November.

After a consultation with Miss Myrtle Brooke, f the Alabama College faculty, who is chairman of the Shelby County Chapter, Mrs. Vines stated that definite plans will be announced by Miss Brooke about the first of October, when a roll call chairman and other officials will be named to direct the Roll Call membership drive.

Besides Miss Myrtle Brooke, chairman, the other Red Cross officials for Shelby County are:

Mrs. Walter Merrill, Columbiana, vice chairman; Walter M. Shaw, Montevallo, secretary and home service chairman; Harry Gordon, Columbiana, disaster relief chairman; Mrs. Cecil Cowart, Calera, local relief chairman.

It was stated by Mrs. Vines, from records in her files, that Shelby County last year exceeded its quota of 300 members by three, giving the county a rating of 1.46 per cent, which is higher than the state average of 1.21 per cent.

Elections Called For Legislative Vacancies

A call has been issued by Gov. Graves for a special election, to be held the same day as the general election, Nov. 3, for the filling of five existing vacancies in the State Legislature. There are two seats to be filled in the Senate, those of the late Senators John A. Rogers, of Gainesville, and Shelby S. Fletcher, of Huntsville. In the House vacancies have been created by the resignation of former Representative Clint Harrison of Marengo, who resigned to accept appointment as associate member of the Public Service Commission—and R. A. Reid, who resigned to become Postmaster at Montevallo.

Another vacancy occurred upon the death of Representative J. A. Hollingsworth of Chambers County.

Reid tendered his resignation to Gov. Graves Monday, as representative in the Legislature for Shelby County. Mr. Reid will take over his duties as postmaster on November 1.

Women's Club Met Last Monday

The Business and Professional Women's Club of Montevallo held its first meeting of the Fall on Monday evening this week at the St. George Hotel.

The chairman of the program committee presented plans for the year's activities, which were discussed by the club members.

The members of the club extended their heartiest congratulations to Dr. Hallie Farmer, who was made a member of the Town Council in Monday's municipal election. She is the first woman to be elected to a public office in Montevallo. Dr. Farmer, in turn, expressed her appreciation to the club for its loyal support.

It is felt by each club member, as a result of Dr. Farmer's victory, that the women of our community are beginning to be recognized for their full value in their relationships and active participation in civic interests.

DR. O. C. CARMICHAEL, FORMER PRESIDENT, WILL BE SPEAKER

Exercises in observance of the 40th anniversary of Alabama College's founding will begin at 10:30 p.m. Saturday, October 10, with an address in Palmer Hall by Dr O. C. Carmichael, vice-chancellor of Vanderbilt University, and president of Alabama College from 1926 to 1935. The anniversary celebration also will be occasion for the annual Alabama College homecoming, according to announcement by Prof. Eloise Meroney, chairman of the alumnae-faculty committee on homecoming.

After Dr. Carmichael's address, the large number of visiting alumnae and other friends of the college attending the college exercises will be entertained by a luncheon in the college dining room. The Alabama College Student Senate will be host at the luncheon, and senators will sit at the head of each table for guests.

The college theater at 2 p.m. will present a play dramatizing five periods in the life of Alabama College, represented by the years 1896, 1906, 1916, 1926 and 1936. The play will be directed by its author, Mrs. Willilee R. Trumbauer, of the class of 1925, who will be assisted by Prof. W. H. Trumbauer, director of the college theatre.

Saturday the class of 1937 will be host to alumnae and visitors at a reception and dance given in the parlors of main dormitory.

As an added feature of the occasion a display of relics from the early days of Alabama College will be arranged in the lobby of Palmer Hall.

Members of the alumnae-faculty committee on homecoming, all of Montevallo, are Miss Eloise Meroney, chairman; Miss Mary McWilliams, Miss Melba Griffin, Miss Lenice Vaughan and Miss Eleanor Rennie.

Cooperating with this committee in making plans for the occasion are officers of the State Alabama College Alumnae Association. These are Mrs. Frank Chappelle, Birmingham, president; Mrs. Charlotte Peterson, vice-president; Miss Ethel Harris, treasurer, and Miss Martha Allen, secretary, all of Montevallo.

Exchange Students At Alabama College

Two Alabama College students of last year are sailing this month for Europe, where they will continue their studies in a French and a Swiss University.

Miss Anne Ebrard, whose home is in Paris, France, came to Alabama College last year as an exchange student, and sails from Mobile September 30 for France. After a visit to her home she will go to Geneva, Switzerland, where she plans to continue her studies in international law.

Miss Georgia Vincent, of Coosada, Ala,, was to sail September 23 from New York on the S. S. La-Fayette. Miss Vincent has spent two years at Alabama College, and will take her unior year's work as an exchange student at the University of Paris. Miss Vincent is a friend of Miss Ebrard, and plans have been made for Miss Ebrard's mother to meet Miss Vincent in Paris, and assist her in making comfortable living arrangements in the strange city.

Upon successful completion of her year's study abroad, Miss Vincent will return to Alabama College next fall as a senior, and be graduated with her class.

Mr. G. T. Towery was in Columbiana Wednesday on business at the courthouse.

Reid To Become Postmaster Nov. 1

HAS SENT IN HIS RESIGNATION AS COUNTY REPRESENTATIVE

Mr. R. A. Reid of Montevallo, representative of Shelby County in the legislature of Alabama, forwarded to Governor Graves on September 21, his resignation as a member of the lower house.

This action of Mr. Reid was occasioned by the fact that he has received his commission from president Roosevelt as Postmaster of Montevallo, which office he will assume on the first of November.

In the postoffice Mr. Reid will succeed Mrs. Scears Lee, who has served as acting postmaster since the resignation of Dr. P. C. Wilson.

Mr. Reid sent a copy of his resignation to the Shelby County Democratic Executive Committee, and it is understood that the committee will be called innto session immediately, perhaps this week, to make nomination of a successor to Mr. Reid as County Representative.

According to the best information obtainable in local circles Wednesday, it appears that Hon. L. H. Ellis, of Columbiana, will be the nominee for Representative. It was stated that Dr. E. G. Givhan, of Monttevallo, had expressed his intentions of being an applicant for the place, but has withdrawn.

Mr. Ellis represented Shelby, Chilton and Autauga Counties in the State Senate during the first Graves term, in which he gained wide prominence for his leadership of the adminstration forces on the floor of the upper House.

His election to succeed Mr. Reid would send him to Montgomery with a background of experience and acquaintance with State affairs which would put him automatically in the forefront of the big and vital issues that will face the lawmakers when they assemble again.

Reorganization of the University health service has been effected. Dr. Stuart Graves, dean of the Medical School, stated. Dr. J. P. Collyier and Dr. R. H. Cochrane, Tuscaloosa, replace Dr. Kennedy, who is away because of ill health.

Additions to the engineering faculty have been made. William Miller and Otto Lunde have joined the staff, it was announced.

Reception Given For Students

Concluding the events for Orientation week, the annual reception of the Student Government Association was held at eight o'clock Saturday evening, September 19, in Main Assembly Hall. Sara Kyser, President of the Student Body, introduced the students to Dr. and Mrs. T. H. Napier, first in the receiving line. The Freshman class entered first, followed by the Seniors. Class presidents, Jane Fowler, Senior Class; Alvis Neville, Junior Class, and Doris Condon, the Sophomore Class, preceded their classes.

Mrs. Louise Coleman and Mrs. Mary Harris, house matrons, served in the parlors. Mrs. Nora Reynolds, matron of Main Dormitory, acted as hostess. As the guests assembled, music was furnished by Jerry Camp, Kathleen Williams, violin, and Ruth Scheussler, piano. As chief feature of the program "The Legend of Fujiyama", the Purple Impersonation of 1936, was reproduced, using the speech chorus to carry the thread of the story. The landing of the broad stairs in Main Assembly was used as the stage for the Japanese setting of the play. A Japanese motif was carried out in the decorations and refreshments.

A special glee club arrangement of "Calm as the Night" was presented by the Purple Glee Club of 1936.—The Alabamian.

Progress Made On New Post Office

CORNER STONE LAID MONDAY, SEPTEMBER, 21 AT NINE A.M.

Construction work on the new postoffice at Montevallo has progressed to the ground floor level, which includes the laying of the reinforced steel-concrete floor.

The ground floor border of white marble has been set in place. A part of this marble trim is the corner stone of the building, which was set Monday, September 21, at nine a.m., by Arnold Bearden, foreman of brick laying and marble setting, assisted by Clarence Hughes, bricklayer.

The cornestone contains the following inscription: "Henry Morgenthau, Jr., Secretary of the Treasury; James A. Farley, Postmaster General; Louis A. Simon, Supervising Architect; Neal A. Melick, Supervising Engineer; 1936."

The supervising architect's office is a branch of the procurement division of the Treasury Department which draws plans and specifications, and carries public building projects up to letting of the contracts for construction.

Construction is entirely through the office of the Supervising Engineer, which has charge of all field forces.

Mr. Ricardo F. Wallace, construtionn engineer for the Montevallo building, will make his progress report on the 25th, from which he will release for publication next week some interesting facts about the work thus far accomplished.

"Say, mister," said the little fresh air cihld, as she watched the cattle enjoying their cud, "do you have to buy gum for all them cows to chew?"

Senator Couzens Defeated in Michigan Primaries—Maine Recaptured by Republicans—Notable Gathering of Savants at Harvard Tercentenary.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union.

Sen. Couzens

REPUBLICANS were highly gratified by the results of the Michigan primary election for two reasons: First, because three out of five persons who went to the polls asked for Republican ballots; second, because Senator James Couzens, a Republican who has openly declared that he is supporting President Roosevelt for re-election, lost his fight for renomination. Couzens, one of the wealthiest members of the senate, was badly defeated by former Gov. Wilbur M. Brucker, and there is more than a suspicion that he knew his fate beforehand. Brucker, who is only forty-two years old, has been in public life for almost twenty years. The Republicans re-nominated Frank D. Fitzgerald for the governorship.

On the Democratic side Representative Prentiss M. Brown won the senatorial nomination against Louis B. Ward who was supported by Father Coughlin. For governor they chose Frank Murphy, high commissioner to the Philippines and former mayor of Detroit. Both Murphy and his defeated opponent, George Welsh, campaigned as Roosevelt supporters.

In the New Hampshire primaries Gov. H. Styles Bridges won the Republican senatorial nomination, ending the effort of former Senator George H. Moses to stage a comeback. The Democrats put up Representative William N. Rogers. Nominees for governor are Maj. Francis P. Murphy, Republican, and Amos N. Blandin, Democrat.

Massachusetts will have for senator either Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr., Republican, or James M. Curley, now governor, Democrat. John W. Haigis, Republican, and Charles F. Hurley, Democrat, were nominated for the governorship.

The gubernatorial nominees in Wisconsin are: Gov. Philip La Follette, Progressive; Alexander Wiley, Republican, and Arthur W. Lueck, Democrat.

MAINE, the "barometer" state, is back in the Republican column at least so far as its state ticket is concerned. The G. O. P. captured the United States senatorship, the governorship and three congressional seats. Senator Wallace H. White, Republican, defeated Gov. Louis J. Brann, who sought to unseat him. Lewis O. Barrows, Republican, won the governorship by a substantial majority over F. Harold Dubord, Democrat.

The vote cast broke all records for size and interest in the election was intense. The state had been visited by both President Roosevelt, as he returned from his vacation cruise, and Gov. Alf M. Landon, the Republican Presidential nominee, who made speeches there only a few days ago. Colonel Knox, vice presidential candidate on the Republican ticket, also had canvassed the state. Brann, who was elected governor in 1932 and re-elected two years later, was the first Democrat to hold that office in Maine and was personally popular. White was elected senator in 1930 after ten years in the house of representatives.

SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE WALLACE has approved the new $10,000,000 seed corn loan program of the AAA. The government will advance farmers two types of loans on seed corn stored on the farm. Advances of $1.75 a bushel will be made to farmers on 1,000,000 bushels of selected corn. The government will have the option of buying this corn at $3.50 a bushel up to April 1, 1937.

The second type of loan permits advances of 55 cents a bushel on "good quality and properly stored cribbed corn which can be sorted for seed at a later date." On the latter type of loan the government retains the right to purchase the collateral at $1.50 a bushel until April 1 next.

It is understood the Reconstruction Finance corporation has agreed to advance up to $10,000,000 under the loan program. The loans will be made to farmers through the Commodity Credit corporation.

The interest rate on the new loans will be 4 per cent, the same as was in effect under the old corn loan program.

FEDERAL government help in controlling their business has been asked by two large sections of the tobacco industry.

The Retail Tobacco Dealers of America, Inc., representing about 300,000 retailers of tobacco products, requested the federal trade commission to authorize a trade practice conference with a view for formulating rules for the elimination of unfair methods of competition and trade abuses.

Representatives from nine tobacco producing states wound up a two-day conference in Washington with a request addressed to the agricultural adjustment administration to draft a model production control bill.

TO THE sixty-sixth annual congress of the American Prison association, held in Chicago, was presented a report from the committee on crime prevention in which it was stated that the tactics of a certain class of lawyers, in defending persons charged with crime have the effect of encouraging criminals to repeat their offenses. The committee declared that 75 per cent of the prisoners now in penal institutions in this country had been "literally faced about into a career of crime" by their experiences with defense attorneys.

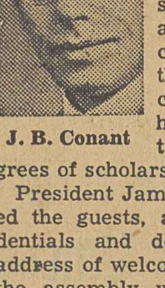
The coaching of the attorney tended to help the defendant find an alibi for his misdeeds and a sedative for his conscience, according to the report, when public welfare should have guided the lawyer to conduct "which would quicken the sensibilities of the prisoner and awaken him to his own misdeeds."

The committee recommended more scientific methods in preventing and combating crime and it estimated that the country's annual crime cost is $15,000,000,000—"one-fourth of the national income; half of the war debt."

FOR the first time in seven years the United States is to have a squadron in European Atlantic waters. It is known as "Squadron 40-temporary" and Rear Admiral Arthur P. Fairfield was named as its commander. Admiral Fairfield hoisted his flag aboard the light cruiser Raleigh at the Norfolk navy yard and sailed for Gibraltar. At first the squadron will consist of the flagship Raleigh, the destroyers Kane and Hatfield and the coast guard cutter Cayuga, but navy officials expected its strength would be increased soon.

The Hatfield, Kane and Cayuga had been on emergency duty in Spanish waters since the outbreak of the Spanish revolt until they were withdrawn to nearby neutral ports following the attempted bombing of the Kane by an unknown plane off Cadiz last August 30.

IT IS pleasant to turn from war and politics and read of the doings at Cambridge, Mass., where Harvard university is celebrating the tercentenary of its founding. In Sanders theater was held the academic reception for 554 colleges and learned societies in every state of the union and in forty foreign countries, and all of them wearing the caps, gowns and hoods signifying their various degrees of scholarship.



J. B. Conant

President James B. Conant greeted the guests, accepted their credentials and delivered a simple address of welcome. He noted that the assembly was an impressive demonstration of the solidarity of the academic world, and saw in the greetings of the delegates "the continued aspiration of mankind toward a universal fellowship based on human reason."

Responding on behalf of the delegates, Prof. Elie Cartan of the University of Paris paid tribute to Harvard's contributions to education and declared that "no barrier, political, religious or social, should be erected to stop the search for truth."

When the delegates were called up in the order of the age of the institutions they represented, first to respond was Prof. Saleh Hashem Attia of Al-Azhar university of Cairo, founded in 790. Then came the next oldest, the Regia university, Neglie Stuni Bologna, founded in the Tenth century, and represented by Prof. Carrado Gini. Third was the University of Paris, founded in the Eleventh century, whose representative was Dr. Cartan. Oxford, Cambridge and all the others followed, down to the youngest represented, the Academia Sinica of Nanking, China.

World famous educators, scientists and men of letters, including ten Nobel prize winners, were among those who attended the reception.

FRANCE'S famous polar explorer, Dr. Jean Charcot, and 59 of the crew of 60 aboard the exploration ship Pourquoi Pas were drowned when the vessel foundered in a gale off the Iceland coast. One petty officer swam ashore and told of the tragedy. Charcot led two expeditions to the Antarctic and a region there is named for him, Charcotland. In 1925, when one of Roald Amundsen's north polar expeditions was missing, Charcot searched the east coast of Greenland in the Pourquoi Pas.

Pope Pius XI

POPE PIUS XI may be physically weak, as recent reports say, but age and illness have not lessened the vigor of his opinions and his way of expressing them. In greeting and blessing some five hundred Spanish refugees who were received at Castel Gandolfo, the holy father took occasion to denounce strongly the "mad" forces of Communism which, he declared, menaced, in Spain and elsewhere, "the very foundations of all order, all culture and all civilization." He urged the constituted authorities of all nations to oppose "these great evils with every remedy and barrier that is possible" and prophesied that there will be utter chaos if "those who have a duty in the matter do not hasten to repair the breach—if, indeed, it is not already too late."

The pope spoke especially of the situation in Spain, but said the crisis there is "a school in which the most serious lesson is being taught to Europe and to the whole world—to a world now at last wholly steeped, ensnared and threatened by subversive propaganda, and more especially to a Europe battered and shaken to its very foundation."

For forty minutes the pontiff spoke passionately, his voice at times broken with emotion, and his address was transmitted by radio to all the civilized world.

Reichsfuehrer Hitler, too, took another hard whack at the Communists at a ceremonial tribute to the World war dead in Nuremberg. Before 120,000 uniformed Nazis and 50,000 others he boasted of Germany's armed strength and shouted:

"Our old enemy, bolshevism, is vanquished within Germany, but still active around her borders. But let no one be deceived. We are ready at any hour. We all have one wish—to maintain peace — but with it goes one firm decision: Never to surrender Germany to that enemy we have come to know so well."

If Hitler, as some think, tries to lead the coming five-power Locarno conference into forming an anti-Soviet alliance, he will be firmly opposed by France. Foreign Minister Yvon Delbos says so, and declares France will under no circumstances abandon her military pact with Soviet Russia.

According to Pravda, authoritative newspaper of Moscow, Hitler plans to attack and partition Czechoslovakia before he embarks on a war against the Soviet union.

Benito Mussolini and his cabinet appropriated large sums to build up Italy's army, navy and air forces to greater strength and planned to carry on vigorously the campaign for self-sufficiency in raw materials.

It looked as if the dove of peace was preparing to leave Europe, and as relations between Japan and China grew more strained every day, she probably will have to take refuge on the western continent.

THE Spanish rebels scored their greatest victory to date when they captured San Sebastian, capital of Guipuzcoa province and famous Bay of Biscay resort. Santa Barbara fort, dominating the city, was first taken and the city's war council then decided to abandon the place, despite the opposition of the anarchists. The more conservative Basque nationals prevented the reds from burning the city, only a paper factory and two residences being destroyed, and the defending forces retreated toward Bilbao, accompanied by thousands of civilians and foreigners. Insurgent troops, commanded by Col. Jose Beorlegui, marched in and were ceremoniously reviewed, and the bishop of Pamplona officiated at a thanksgiving service.

The municipal governor, Antonio Ortega, and his staff boarded a yacht to go to new headquarters at Zumaya, about 15 miles west of San Sebastian. The new line of defense was established at Orio, about halfway to Zumaya.

Government spokesmen claimed considerable victories in the Talavera sector southwest of Madrid and not far from the Portuguese border.

OUR navy's intelligence department has discovered that a recent small fire on the cruiser Indianapolis while she was being overhauled in the New York navy yard was caused by the driving of phonograph needles and nails into an electric cable; and other suspected sabotage on war vessels is being investigated. The work on the cruiser was being done by civilian employees and Capt. Charles A. Dunn, industrial manager of the yard, said the placing of the nails in the cables was "undoubtedly" a deliberate attempt to damage the cruiser.

SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE WALLACE is arranging a series of community meetings of farmers for the purpose of laying out the "agricultural conservation program" for next year. He said the AAA planned the meetings in the farm areas in order to discuss crop insurance and possible maximum limits of benefit payments to each farm. He explained the program aimed at providing "greater abundance for the average American home," and should "help to check soil erosion, improve fertility, encourage better land use and maintain farm income."

BRISBANE
THIS WEEK

For the Pacific States
A Good Example
It Sold for $700

The Pacific states should interest themselves in air defense, apart from the national government.

Arthur Brisbane

When a committee of rich men from New York called on Abraham Lincoln, told him how much money they had, and urged that he send a good battleship to do nothing but protect New York city, his reply was that if he had as much money as they said they had, he would build a battleship for himself.

The west coast states, California, Oregon, Washington, co-operating perhaps with their vigorous neighbors of Vancouver, and other points above the Canadian border, might well have a few flying ships of their own, a sort of air militia.

San Francisco, where they combine patriotism with plenty of money, and great civic pride and energy, might well start the idea of a Pacific coast flying force. That need not be very expensive. A hundred machines to begin with, a hundred plucky young fliers, practicing the gentle art of flying at night, and dropping bombs, practicing especially mimic warfare against other flying machines, would constitute an admirable object lesson to the rest of the country.

And if California, in San Francisco for instance, should start a little flock of one hundred machines, Los Angeles could be relied upon to hurry in with two hundred, Seattle and other coast cities also.

Such machines need not be a total loss.

In the first place, many young gentlemen with rich fathers, not knowing exactly what to do with themselves, extremely anxious to find work worth while, and preferably dangerous, would delight in each equipping his individual machine, for the service of the Pacific coast and of Uncle Sam, as the nobles in the old days delighted in equipping each his regiment, or his fighting ship, for the service of the king.

Two hundred or three hundred high - powered, swift flying machines, directed by quick and courageous American brains, would be worth more to the safety of the Pacific coast than a hundred battleships. For the fighters that come, if they do come, will fly miles above the battleships.

They would come less gaily, less confidently, if they knew that trained fliers awaited them.

Hideyo Noguchi, who gave his life to fight yellow fever in Africa, will inspire many men. He was born of a proud, warlike race, intensely self-centered, for 2,000 years a hermit people. The loyalty of a Japanese was to family, clan, above all to the emperor representing his race. The rest of the world was nothing to him.

Born one generation after Japan opened her doors to the world, Noguchi felt the new spirit of the times. He was loyal to family, clan, emperor, race; but he was devoted chiefly to all human kind.

From boyhood to the last, through poverty and many perils, he studied how to wipe out disease. He discovered the germ of yellow fever, developed serums to prevent the fever or cure it, led in the work that has driven it out of America and will soon put an end to it throughout the world.

Yellow fever killed countless millions of all peoples. Noguchi's skill and devotion have saved the lives of millions, too many to estimate, most of them foreigners to whom his forefathers would have paid no attention, calling them hei-min, or no-folks.

Noguchi's self-sacrifice to human welfare sets an example that is sure to be followed. Perhaps, in time, most men will see that it is better to help one another than to kill or even rob one another.

It is said the Hackensack Indians sold to the white men for so many bars of lead, and some finery, worth altogether $700, land on which now stands the entire city of Newark, N. J., and a great deal of land beyond.

The poor Hackensack chief, with his $700, couldn't buy today enough land or a tight grave at the corner of Broad and Market streets in Newark. Land goes up wonderfully.

Doctors at Kansas City report that birth control information so much discussed does little good to the poor, and has caused an "alarming slump in child bearing among educated families."

That is how reform works, usually. But since 90 per cent of human beings worth while come from poor families, providence may be working in its usual mysterious way.

National Topics Interpreted
by William Bruckart

National Press Building Washington, D. C.

Washington. — As the campaign gets more heated it becomes increasingly evident that the political battle this year will result more times in a spade being called a spade—men being named names—than has happened in a good many previous years. When this stage is reached it invariably means that party workers as well as party leaders are thoroughly imbued with the sense of battle and it means further that no phase of either party policy or personal affairs of the candidates themselves escapes the attention of the opposition.

Call Spade a Spade

That probably is the reason why Mr. Roosevelt lately has found himself being "kidded" to a greater extent than usually occurs about his "non-political" visits to various sections of the country. The opportunity has not yet come for Governor Landon, the Republican nominee, to be made the butt of such jokes or the subject of such personal attacks, but undoubtedly it will arrive long before November 3.

To refer again to the President's "non-political" trips, the correspondents here have been having a great deal of fun about the President's determination to learn first-hand about the flood areas of Pennsylvania and New England and the drouth areas of the middle western plains.

This is significant. It shows an important change of attitude on the part of the Washington observers who seldom find themselves in a position where they can tell everything they know. It is significant also from this standpoint that it shows Mr. Roosevelt to have lost the loyalty of a great number of those writers. Time was when 95 per cent of the Washington correspondents were with Mr. Roosevelt on everything he said or did and when they found vulnerable spots or weaknesses in his statements or actions they were inclined to overlook them. Such is not the case now, however, and I think it may be added with candor that the President's programs and policies, his speeches and statements in press conferences are examined with utmost scrutiny.

From the Democratic standpoint, this is distressing. From the Republican standpoint, it is a highly valuable change in circumstance. The reason is that as long as the President had a completely "friendly press" he did not need to be so careful nor did he ever need to fear that interpretations would be placed upon his statements or his actions, other than the interpretation which he desired. It takes no stretch of the imagination to realize forthwith that any time he says or does anything to which exception can be taken, some of those correspondents will point out the other possibilities.

I find, generally speaking, that the writing corps doubted that the President's Pennsylvania and New England visits were based solely on his desire to know what the federal government should do to prevent floods. One correspondent was so extremely frank as to write in his metropolitan newspaper that Mr. Roosevelt foresaw not a flood of water but a flood of Republican votes. Of course, this is an exaggerated position for any unbiased writer to take, but there were any number of those correspondents who laughingly inquired why it was so urgently necessary for the President to visit the flood areas at this time—considering that there was no congress in session and no definite provision for the framing of flood relief plans.

* * *

Now as to the President's visit to the drouth stricken area: The drouth was present in the "dust bowl" as the brilliant young strategists of the New Deal organization have named the middle western plains. There can be no doubt, likewise, that relief was needed and that a thorough-going understanding of the situation by those responsible in Washington should be obtained. Yet, I believe it was the consensus of the writers accompanying the President on that whirlwind tour of the dust storms that Mr. Roosevelt personally gained no knowledge of conditions that was not already available to him in reports from his subordinates. Indeed, I am told on very good authority that relief representatives who had gone into the drouth area already had written their reports to the President and made their recommendations concerning policies to deal with that relief situation before he left Washington on that trip.

Learned Little

It must be quite obvious, however, that Mr. Roosevelt desired to see conditions about which so much was being written in the newspapers. I think he cannot be blamed for desiring the opportunity to witness things as they actually were before the rains came; but some of his speeches from the rear end of his special train evidenced something more than a hint that he desired to see not only the drouth stricken area but the voters who live there.

More recently the President has made a non-political trip into certain areas of the southland where it is suspected by Chairman Farley's representatives that a goodly number of Republican votes exist. In fairness to the President it must be said with respect to his southern trip, however, that he did little actual speech-making. It is true that he gave the pump-handle handshake wherever people desired to greet him but his campaigning was much less evident in the minds of the reporters than obtained in his visit to the north and to the central west.

* * *

And referring to his trip to the central west, I am reminded of the hysteria that has arisen over soil erosion. Undoubtedly, soil erosion is a problem worthy of general attention but the thing that disturbs me as a Washington observer is that soil erosion, like a lot of other problems, suddenly has become mixed up in politics when it is not a political question.

Soil Erosion

The conservation of soil of natural resources, has been a matter to which farmers of the nation have addressed themselves for more than a hundred years. Who is it among farming community that has not attempted at one time or another to stop "washes" or who has not planted some willow trees or some kinds of bush to prevent ditches being cut through the middle of fertile and arable land? And may I ask further, what farmer is there who has not given consideration to crop rotation, to the planting of types of clover or hay or grasses that would of themselves enrich the soil?

All of these things are commonplace. All of them have been done from the time to which the memory runneth not to the contrary. But now we find a perfect hullabaloo—a hysteria—as I said at the beginning about a thing with which farmers long have been familiar.

It comes almost into the category of nonsense. One needs only to visit the oldest communities in the nation to find soils that have been producing for two centuries and that have continued to show increased production through all of that time. The reason is that those farmers knew about soil erosion and they sought to prevent it. Those farmers and nearly all farmers recognize that soil must be fertilized; that it cannot be planted to the same crop eternally without destroying its fertility and they know the necessity and the method for solving the problem. They have acted on that necessity and knowledge.

Notwithstanding all of these facts we are due to see in the next session of congress and probably for a considerable number of sessions thereafter a bunch of politicians who will be prating about soil conservation long after the farmers have become thoroughly sick at the stomach about the idea. It is just another one of those things upon which hungry political demagogues will leap and continue to use as a vehicle on which to ride into office.

I was born on a farm and grew up there. I know the problem inside out because the farm upon which I was born was susceptible to erosion—"washing" as my father called it—to a greater extent than is usual in farm lands. It is no particular credit to any one to boast about preventing soil erosion because it is a thing that any farmer will want to do if he wants to continue to make his farm pay him a return. It is just as much a part of farm management as it is to see that the work stock does not develop sore shoulders.

But the point of all of this as far as I am concerned is that political capital is being made out of a condition with which politicians ought not to be concerned at all. Some may accuse me of ignoring the drouth condition. I do not do so. We have had several years of bad drouth conditions. I find it difficult to associate political control over the weather, however, because the claims of politicians have yet to reach very far above their heads.

* * *

Announcement is made at last that former President Herbert Hoover is going to take the stump in behalf of Governor Landon and the Republican ticket. Though it was long delayed, it probably has come before the country became convinced that an irreparable breach existed between Governor Landon and Mr. Hoover. Rumors were just beginning to fly and gossip tongues were just beginning to wag that Mr. Hoover would remain out of the Republican picture this year so it is extremely fortunate that he and Governor Landon at last have been brought together, as far as Republicans are concerned.

Hoover to Speak

I am not informed as to the reasons for this delay. It is evident that somebody slipped because it is unnatural for politicians to deliberately decline to take advantage of strength when it is proffered them.

Clear Skin
You must be free from constipation to have a good, clear complexion. If not eliminated, the wastes of digestion produce poisons and the skin must do more than its share in helping to get rid of them.
So for a clear, healthy skin, remember the importance of bowel regularity. At the first sign of constipation, take Black-Draught—the purely vegetable laxative. It brings such refreshing relief, and tends to leave the bowels acting regularly until some future disturbance interferes.

Brothers Were Strangers

The recent death of an aged man in a little one-room cabin near Canisteo, New York, disclosed the fact that he and his brother had lived there together as strangers—divided by a chalk line and silence pact—for the past 62 years. During all this time neither had ever crossed the line or spoken a word to the other.—Collier's Weekly.

Gunlock Ranch

—9—

She remounted and rode up the Divide trail. The smoke was so dense that it cut off hope of seeing the valley, and, spurred by the determination to see by riding higher, she rode on and on till she found herself at the foot of Gunlock Knob. Jane headed the pony up the mountain. The summit had never seemed so hard to reach but, panting and exhausted, the pony carried Jane to the summit, and she rode out on the table to look. The scene below was terrifying. Huge clouds of smoke billowed and spread, only to boil up anew and race on the wind. It seemed as if the whole country were in flames. Here and there tongues of fire shot from the rolling smoke.

Weary, at length, and depressed, Jane turned her pony's head to ride home. Gunlock itself might be in danger.

Even the pony took the downward trail reluctantly. Jane could not tell why until, rounding a shoulder of the Knob, she saw below her a fire sweeping across the trail she was following. Worse than that, the fire was spurting through the brush, up the mountain, in front of her. The pony balked. Thoroughly frightened, Jane turned him up the narrow trail and headed for the summit.

Even the few moments she had been away from the top had changed the scene. Overwhelmed with consternation, she began to think anew of her own safety. She urged the pony swiftly down the trail again, hoping faintly to find some hidden by-pass. Her path was blocked. The hot air of the fire below was catching at her throat; gusts of smoke burned into her eyes. She reined about to return, despairing, to the summit.

Once again the level rock afforded her temporary refuge. She dismounted. The pony was growing unmanageable. He snorted, stamped, flung his head up and down and chewed frantically at his bit. Hope deserted her. She sank to her knees and fell forward, covering her face with her arms.

For a moment her mind was a blank. She heard nothing of a frantic calling of her name, when a singed and blackened horseman spurred and lashed his pony toward her, sprang from the saddle, and caught her up in his arms.

"Jane!" he cried, as he looked into her face and shook her in his effort to restore consciousness. "Jane! Open your eyes! Speak to me! It's Bill, Jane, Bill! Can't you hear me? Speak!" Her eyes opened; she looked in a daze at him. "It's Bill, Jane!"

She threw her arms convulsively around his neck. "Oh, Bill, Bill! What can we do? Must we die, Bill, in this horror?"

"No!" he exclaimed. "We can get through. But we mustn't lose a minute, not a second. Come!"

He half carried her to an edge of the summit, where a rock crevice gave a slight footing a few feet below. Into this he lowered himself and raised his arms to Jane.

"But the horses, Bill?" she cried.

"Leave them," he called back. "They may escape. There's no footing for horses where we're going. Quick, Jane! Jump!" He caught her in his arms, steadied her, showed her how to secure herself in the precarious footing, and lowered himself to another slender ledge to brace himself, bade her spring, and caught her again in his arms.

Her heart beat so violently, he seemed to feel it as she hugged close to him. There was barely room for the two to stand. "Keep cool, Jane. We can make it, but be very, very careful of your footing, darling Jane. The fire hasn't touched this side of the mountain yet, but if you fell it would be a hundred feet."

Spurned to superhuman effort, Denison achieved the almost impossible, and by sliding, clinging with fingers, hands and arms, and by carefully using his lariat, he managed to bring Jane down unharmed to the foot of the precipitous wall that had given him the bare chance to save her life. He held out his arms to catch her for the final jump. "Bill!" she exclaimed, breathing hard and looking up in sheer amazement at the precipice down which he had brought her. "How did we ever get down there alive?"

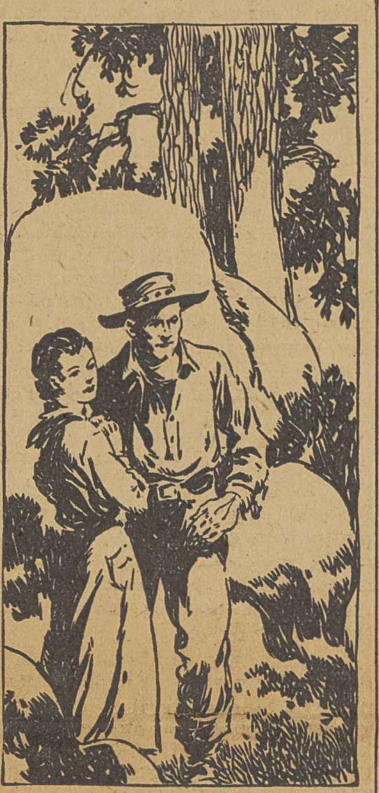
He was still very anxious—the wrinkled veins of his smoked forehead plainly mirrored that. She waited for orders. "We must run through that grove of quaking asp and try to get away from the Knob. This will all be burning in a few minutes. Are you able to run?"

"I'll bet I can run faster than you, Bill." The laughing tone of her words thrilled and cheered him. He knew better than she what still lay between them and safety. They hastened on through the light timber; then, running a broad shoulder, they saw a vast panorama of smoke, lighted in places by flames.

Denison hurried on, Jane briskly keeping pace with him. But when they neared the smoking pine, she felt dismayed.

"Bill, it's all on fire, yet—look at the little blazes. See the ground pine, and the trees are smoking and burning yet. Bill! See the deer running, too—why, every animal you can think of—"

"They'd better run," said Denison grimly. "We must do some more running ourselves, Jane. There's very little danger crossing this strip. But I want to get across it quick."



"We Must Do Some More Running Ourselves, Jane."

They dashed into the fire area together. Little tongues of flame darted from the still burning ground, but nothing to threaten Jane's stout laced boots or leather trousers.

They crossed the burned strip and broke together down a long slope that bordered another forest of pine.

Denison paused and looked anxiously at Jane. "How are you standing it, girl?"

She was panting, but game. Her high-colored cheeks, the flashing brightness of her eyes, her parted eager lips, made her a picture.

"Fine, Bill. Are we out of danger?"

They were standing together in the wind and smoke that swirled and eddied up the mountain. His hand was at her back as she leaned on his arm. Perhaps overwhelmed by the thought of what he must say, he hugged her close and, drawing her unresisting lips to his own, held them in a long kiss. "I wish we were, Jane. We're going only now into danger—I wish it weren't so, Jane."

"Oh, Bill!" said Jane. "Don't think of me—do just as if I were not here." She threw her own arms around his neck, and their lips met again in passionate appeal.

"Then come, Jane. We must dash through this pine before that fire you hear roaring catches up to us."

"Is that awful roar from a fire, Bill?"

"It is. It's our worst danger. Let's go, Jane."

To cross the wide belt of pine their course lay obliquely downhill. If anything were needed to spur them on, the thunder of the fire sweeping down the forest behind served as a dread warning that they had only minutes left to escape disaster.

Halfway down the ridge, Denison paused to rest Jane in his arms. She was panting like an antelope.

"Brave girl!" he murmured. "Not a sob—not a tear—"

"But we must hurry, Bill," she panted.

"Get a little breath for the next run."

"Can we make it, Bill, dear?"

"We've got to make it," he muttered. "I'll save you, Jane, if it's the last thing I do in life."

"Don't save me unless you save yourself—remember that!"

"Come! We must make the spring—the spring!"

The timber was thinning, the ground growing rougher. The frontiersman and cowman who had gone through every adventure that befalls a man in a life of danger and escape made little of finding safe footing from rock to rock.

He himself saw, before Jane realized it, that the end of her strength was at hand. Striving vainly to keep up she stumbled and with a little moan fell forward on the ground. Denison picked her up in his arms. She could not speak; only panted.

"Put me down, Bill! Put me down!" she sobbed when she could breathe and form the words. "You must save yourself! Is the spring far, now?"

"Not far. Clasp your arms tight around my neck," was all he said, leaping along.

"You can't save us both; save yourself. You are dearer to me than my life, Bill."

"So are you to me. Hang on," he panted. "I'll never put you down!"

After another run he paused. "Bill, I can run a little now. Let me try it. Please, dear! Let me try!"

He shook his head and struggled on. The fire was only minutes behind him, its roar deafening.

A cry roused Jane in his arms.

"The spring!"

She cried to him in happy answer.

There was not an instant to spare. He slid down the steep side of the hollow that enclosed the spring. Jane, still in his arms, he rolled into the pool and lay panting beside her. The shock of the icy water revived her. He soused her head into the water. The pool was wide enough to submerge Jane, but not himself. He rolled in the shallower edge, wet himself all over and, holding her head just clear of the surface as she sputtered and coughed, gave her orders: "Keep your face down. Don't, don't open your eyes. You're safe if you do exactly as I say."

The heart of the fire was on them. They could no longer hear or think. Flame bellied and danced. Tongues of fire licked at their hiding heads. Denison mechanically dipped water into Jane's hair. Consciousness was nearly gone. Only the effort to live and the fierce instinct to protect animated him.

With their trial of endurance almost at an end, a sudden explosion burst in the air above them. Denison, forgetting his caution, opened his eyes in the fear that a tree was falling. His eyeballs were scorched in a fraction of a second. He dashed his face back into the water; but mischief had been done.

At last the terrific outburst abated. With the hope of life reanimated, the two rose in the pool in their steaming clothing. Darkness fell from the sky above, but the forest was lighted with smoking and burning tree torches, the afterglow of its destruction.

The two who had passed through and escaped a hideous catastrophe stood clasped in each other's arms thanking God and delirous in a new-found, intimate happiness.

"Water!" exclaimed Denison. "I'm perishing, in spite of my cold bath. Aren't you thirsty?"

"Yes, but not suffering. I didn't have to carry you, you know."

Moving a few feet up to the basin of the spring itself, they pushed aside debris from the water's surface, drank from their cupped hands, and dashed water over their faces.

"Jane," said Denison when he rose again, "it was almost worth it for the way it's brought you and me together."

"It was," she whispered. "I've given you my trust."

"For all time, Jane?"

"For all time, Bill. Nothing shall ever part us, now."

CHAPTER VIII

PICKING their way haltingly and cautiously down through smoking pines, dodging burning limbs that snapped and crackled menacingly overhead or crashed to the ground about them, the refugees emerged from the forest and could see that Denison's ranch buildings had escaped the flames.

The instant they reached the ranch house, Denison ran to the well, filled the water bucket, and carried it to Jane. Sitting on the ground, bareheaded, they slaked their thirst out of the dipper together.

Denison turned to the corral. Jane, who had gone into the house, had got the fire going and was slicing bacon when she heard the clatter of hoofs outside, and angry voices.

"Where's my daughter, you damned scoundrel?" were the first words she made out. The sound of the voice that uttered them sent her running, the knife still in her hand, to the door. Amazed to dumbness, she saw her father and McCrossen in the saddle, facing Denison, who stood at the gate of his corral.

"Van Tambel," Denison spoke carefully, "you're too old a man for me to quarrel with. Just remember you're on my property and keep a civil tongue in your head."

"I don't want no truck with you, Denison," shouted Van Tambel, raging. "Where's my girl?"

McCrossen had reined about and was starting for the house. "Swing back here, McCrossen," Denison sang out sharply. "Stop right where you are. My cabin's not open to public inspection!"

"I don't give a damn for your cabin. There's Jane," the foreman shouted, "standing in the doorway."

Jane ran across the yard to the angry men. "Father!" she cried. "What in the world are you doing here? What brought you from the hospital?"

Her father's deep-set, piggy eyes flashed his fury on her. "You wench! Living with this man, are you?"

"Father!" Outraged womanhood never spoke the word more stingingly. "Is it possible you insult me so vilely before you have heard a single word?" she said. "What have I to do with your grudges and quarrels?"

Rigid and erect, storming within and striking with white-hot words at her parent's base intimation, Jane silenced the men about her by her outraged dignity.

"What shameful words have you heard—and from whom"—she barely indicated her father's companion by a lightning flash of her eye—"that put such vile thoughts into your head?" She waited for no answer. "I rode to the peak of Gunlock Knob to see how the fire was heading—it has threatened Gunlock Ranch for two days. When I tried to ride down this afternoon, the fire cut me off. I should have been burned to death where I stood on the peak if Bill Denison hadn't ridden up through another fire to save me. And now after fighting our way for hours through smoke and flame, he brings me down by the only possible way, to hear me foully insulted by my own father. This is too much!"

"Look here, Jane!" bellowed her father in retreat. "You come out here for your health, didn't you?"

"I didn't come out here to be grossly insulted," she retorted.

"Where's your pony?"

"Heavens knows where it is, or where Bill Denison's is. I hope they're not burned up."

"Well, come along home. McCrossen will lend you his horse."

"He needn't. I will walk home just as soon as I have cooked some bacon for Bill Denison."

"Come along now."

"Did you hear me? I'll come home"—each word was defiantly emphasized—"when I have made coffee and cooked bacon for Bill Denison. When you get home, be kind enough to ask Bull Page to saddle a horse for me and bring it over." With this, Jane walked swiftly back to the cabin. Van Tambel, in a muttering rage, followed by McCrossen, started home.

A slender supper was at length got together. Then Jane made Denison lie back in a chair and submit to cold compresses on his eyes.

Waiting for Bull Page proved no hardship, but when the hands of Denison's little alarm lock pointed to midnight it dawned on Jane that her request had been ignored and that her father or McCrossen had meant she should walk home or compromise herself by staying all night at Denison's.

She boiled a bit inside when she realized the situation, but prepared to walk. To this Denison would not listen. He got up two ponies—he had but one extra saddle—and, despite her objections and protests, insisted on riding home with her.

It needed no announcer in the morning to tell Jane that her father had come home. She lay, exhausted and with every bone in her body aching, beyond her usual rising time. But there was an unusual scurrying about outside her room.

Jane came to the table as her father was leaving it. "I want to see you after breakfast," was the gruff greeting he vouchsafed Jane.

She found Van Tambel seated at his desk in his bedroom, looking over bills. Jane went up to him.

"I could hardly believe my eyes when I saw you yesteday, father," she said coldly. "Did the doctor give you permission to come home?"

After a shuffling of papers came the first shot at Jane: "What did you fire McCrossen for?"

"Because he refused to obey orders," she retorted instantly.

"Whose orders?"

"My orders."

"Who owns this ranch?"

"You do. And," she added, keen-eyed, "you made me manager."

"I'll take that job off your shoulders. McCrossen is foreman here now. And I am boss. Now what about this skunk, Denison?"

"What about Mr. Denison, father?"

"He's a crook. And as long as you live, keep away from him."

"What has he ever done to you that's wrong, father?"

"He and his brother's been trying for five years to beat me out of Gunlock Spring and all that ranch land back of it.

Los Remedios Aqueduct

The Los Remedios aqueduct had its source in the town of Los Remedios, in the Federal District of Mexico, and a short distance northwest of Mexico City. It dates from 1620 and was built under the direction of Don Alonso Tello de Guzman. The aqueduct has not been in use for many years. The water was obtained from a strong spring that threw a high stream. Around this stream a tower was built and circular runways provided through which the water passed to a lower level where the aqueduct began. The passing of the water through the runways provided its momentum.

KICKING TEDDY UP-HILL

IT IS certain that Theodore Roosevelt would never have become President in the manner he did if it hadn't been for Sen. Thomas C. Platt, the man who wanted to be rid of him as governor of New York.

Platt was the political boss of New York state. In order to insure the presence of a Republican at Albany, but with inner misgivings which were soon to be realized, he prevailed on the popular Rough Rider to become the gubernatorial candidate, shortly after the Spanish war.

Roosevelt was elected and showed immediately that he could not be controlled by Platt or any boss. Platt's embarrassment was only that of a politician. But the discomfort of his friends, thoroughly disturbed by Teddy's big stick gestures, became a serious problem.

The solution, finally arrived at by a devious route, appeared before the primaries of 1900. The Republican party in New York was to name a candidate for governor—perhaps Roosevelt again—in September. But the Republican party in the United States had to name a running mate for President McKinley, and the latter convention would be held in June!

Platt decided that Teddy would be the vice-presidential candidate. He would kick Roosevelt up-hill, and out of New York state.

If successful, the move meant also that on the strength of the national ticket it should be a comparatively simple matter for Platt to name and elect a more tractable governor.

Roosevelt himself realized the move had been launched to shelve him, for so he regarded the vice-presidency. Moreover, neither Mark Hanna of Ohio, a president-maker in a big way in those days, nor McKinley wanted Roosevelt on the national ticket.

But Platt persisted. He was aided by Roosevelt's growing popularity, particularly in the West, where the vice-presidency was regarded as a well-deserved promotion for the hard-hitting New York governor.

These westerners carried their Roosevelt enthusiasm to the convention with them. The boom reached proportions that Hanna could not ignore and in a conference with Platt the night before the nominations the President-maker capitulated.

Hanna issued a statement advocating Roosevelt for the vice-presidency and told the newspapermen: "Boys, you can't stop it any more than you could stop Niagara."

Soon to become President at the unfortunate death of McKinley, Roosevelt won the election. And when the gleeful Senator Platt was asked if he would attend the inauguration he replied: "Yes, I am going down to see Theodore Roosevelt take the veil."

NOTICE TO A NOMINEE

A LOT of folks today believe that when political parties are convening the favored candidates, wherever they may be, have one ear to a keyhole, a wetted finger uplifted to test direction of the political winds, and have set their radio dials the proper wave length to listen in on convention hall. Maybe they're right.

But it wasn't always like that. We had ten Presidents before the man who was destined to become the eleventh, James K. Polk of Tennessee, was informed of his candidacy by telegraph.

The dots and dashes that spelled out Polk's surprising overthrow of Martin Van Buren in the Democratic convention of 1844 were impulses over a newly-built line of telegraph between Baltimore, scene of the convention, and Washington. Polk, who was waiting in Washington, was the first man who received the news in what is today a commonplace fashion.

Van Buren, seeking to succeed himself, was easily the favorite. But he had steadily lost ground at the Baltimore meeting after being placed "on the spot" by the question of the annexation of Texas. Southern delegates began to forsake his candidacy in large numbers. His managers attempted to change the party's new two-thirds rule to a majority ukase, but were unsuccessful.

A steady drift to Polk began on the ninth ballot of the convention. Strangely enough, a letter from Jackson, Van Buren's mentor, which pleaded for harmony, helped complete the general rout in Polk's favor.

The telegraph wire served for one more purpose on this momentous occasion. Sen. Silas Wright was in Washington and had been tendered second place on the ticket with Polk. He was angry over the shelving of Van Buren, so the dots and dashes which came back over the wire carried his indignant refusal of this chance to become the vice-president of the United States.

CURIOUS DEVICES USED FOR SEEING AFTER DARKNESS

It is presumed that man originally toiled or played only during hours of sunlight. That when darkness came and the eyes could no longer see—he lay himself down to rest. Yet all the while, Nature, through volcanic and meteoric disturbances, through flashes of lightning, was trying to demonstrate to man its power to create light in the midst of darkness.

Fire was discovered, and man found he could prolong the day with the aid of firebrands, camp fires, torches.

The earliest lamps of which we have record were saucer shaped objects with a shallow projecting spout which held the wick. A hole in the center of this disc-like lamp held a small quantity of oil.

So far as is known, there was no radical development toward better lighting until 1783 A. D., when Leger of Paris devised a flat ribbon wick and burner. Not long after, Ami Argand of Paris, perfected a glass chimney which, together with his new improved type of circular wick and burner, produced illumination far superior to anything ever before seen.

Then in 1880, Auer von Welsbach, a German, developed a burner, in which the combination of a mixture of air and gas or vapor, heated to incandescence a mantle, composed of thoria and ceria.

Welsbach's mantle was, of course, crude and inefficient compared to present-day mantles. But to Welsbach, should go much of the credit for making available to us today, the pure white light which is so easily and economically provided in modern pressure mantle lamps using gasoline and kerosene for fuel.

OUR TRAFFIC LIGHT

The installation of a traffic light has been made at the intersection of the two main business streets, at the Wilson Corner.

It is at this point that the entrance to the town over the new bridge intersects Main Street and consequently the point of heaviest traffic.

For some time it has been felt that a stop light at this point was needed as a protection to both motorists and pedestrians.

Aside from the satisfaction we get from the installation of the light as a safety measure, it makes us feel good also as a sign of progress. It is an indicator of more people traveling in and around our town. And more traffic, more people, make for more business—and more business means more progress.

Montevallo is growing. Not booming, of course, but growing steadily. The highway approach now is an inducement to travelers to come here.

When we become more able and better equipped to take care of them when they get here, more of them will stay longer, and some will stay permanently.

THE BREACH SHOULD BE CLOSED

All friends of organized labor deplore the division in its ranks today and hope that some means may be found to close the breach and bring back peace and harmony between the opposing factions.

Possibly there never was a time in the whole history of the movement when a united front was more needed than it is today.

In accordance with the decision taken several weeks ago by the Executive Council the ten unions that are following John L. Lewis and comprise the Committee for Industrial Organization are now suspended from the American Federation of Labor. This suspensi on of those ten unions practically amounts to expulsion.

What the A. F. of L. Convention at Tampa, in November, will do in the matter is problematical, but the best friends of labor sincerely hope that a reasonable and satisfactory settlement of the dispute will be arrived at.

It would be folly for anyone to predict just what the outcome of this "cleavage" will be in the future especially as it regards American labor and industry. It would be very unfortunate — almost disastrous—if it resulted in two great and permanent organizations of unions bidding against each other for the support of the wage-earners.

The final outcome is on the knees of the gods. It may be, unless the breach is closed, that the American Federation of Labor, as we know it now, will not be able to survive after the separation of the powerful and aggressive Lewis group.

On the other hand, the C. I. O. may find it impossible to "carry on" without the support and prestige of the parent organization. Whether craft organization or industrial organization will finally be the choice of the workers remains to be seen.

The Labor Advocate believes that there is plenty of room for both organizations in the American Federation of Labor. With an inspired and intelligent leadership, and a friendly desire on the part of all concerned to do the best thing for the labor movement, there is no good reason why the breach should not be healed. What about a compromise?— Labor Advocate, Birmingham.

SELF-RELIANCE ON THE FARM

American agriculture, like American industry, goes through bad times as well as good and must face plenty of serous problems—but the average farmer is far from the weak sister that some of our professional "farm relievers" seem to think. Self-reliance still is his foremost characteristic.

Proof of that is found in the statistics showing the growth and development of agricultural selling cooperatives. These co-ops were in their infancy fifteen years ago—today they are "big business" and tomorrow they will be bigger business still. They grew rapidly during the depression. They are owned and operated by their members, who appoint excutives precisely as do stockholders of a corporation. And these cooperatives, loyally and enthusiastically backed, are fighting the farmers' battles and getting results.

Fifty years from now, when the history of agriculture in the 'twenties and 'thirties is written, it will probably be the cooperatives, not the farm relief laws, which will be given the main credit for farm achievements of the period.

Economic Highlights

As fall approaches, optimism is still the dominating note in the business reports and forecasts. Many quarters feel certain that during the next few months business will reach the highest level since 1930—and, possibly, since 1929.

Interesting "Scorecard of Fall Prospects" was recently published by Business Week. According to this authority, there are twelve major plus signs now in evidence. These include such factors as the following: Business' inventories are generally low and need replenishing; money is "easy"; much of the bonus money is still in the hands of veterans, will be spent this fall; automobile makers are now at work on new models, which will be introduced beginning in September; stock market activity is up; it is believed that utilities and railroads will soon do heavy buying; building contracts are mounting; in the field of foreign affairs, world trade expansion more than counterbalances the chaotic European situation.

The magazine finds five minus signs to set against its plus signs. First, the drought is causing poor distribution of farm income. Second, the Revenue Act of 1936 may restrict new construction. Third, the employment picture is still dark. Fourth, threats of strikes in major industries are a disturbing factor. Fifth, Presidential campaigns create a "psychological disturbance."

A survey of other business publications finds them in agreement with this, generally speaking. So far as industrial production indices are concerned, there is hardly a gloomy note. Automobile production recently fell off—but that was to be expected, as preparations are made for the new season. Steel ingot production also dropped temporarily—but the mills are well booked with orders at last report. And corporate net profits are rising in every field, a fact which is naturally reflected in better dividend payments.

There are two factors, however, outside the production field, which are highly disturbing. One is wages, which are tending upward, but very slowly, and are not keeping pace with production. The other is that worst bogey of all, unemployment. It is generally believed that the unemployed rolls are declining, but at a conservative estimate, some eight million men are still out of work.

Another interesting aspect of the business situation is covered in a late issue of the scholarly Annalist, in a table comparing consumer expenditures in the six months ended in June, 1936, with the same period in 1935. This table shows that more of the consumers' dollar is being expended for durable gools and less for perishable articles—a trend that is highly important, in that the durable goods industries took the worst lacing during depression and are the biggest element in the nation's set-up. Thus, where in the 1936 period consumers spent 4.6 per cent more for food than in the 1935 period, they spent 22.3 per cent more for cars. Where they spent 9.6 per cent more in restaurants, they spent 24.8 per cent more for lumber, building and hardware. Where they spent 9.6 per cent more on general mercahndise, they spent 19.3 per cent more on furniture and other household equipment.

Consumer expenditures for the 1936 period marked a 12.1 per cent increase over the 1935 period—totaling $17,470,000,000 as against $15,580,000,000.

Even as the opproach of fall stimulates business, it stimulates politic.

Both parties are rearing for the big drive now. The candidates are limbering up—and during September and October will really go through their paces.

First guns from the Landon camp came with his speeches on education and taxation. The Governor denounced the teachers' oath, spoke for free education. He vigorously denounced the Administration's tax and fiscal program and paid special notice to what he termed the "cock-eyed" excess profits tax enacted at the last session of Congress at White House request.

Republican strategy, according to observers, calls for only a few formal speeches by Governor Landon. He will travel about the country and make informal appearances. Many speeches will be made by Colonel Knox, a much more impressive radio speaker.

The Roosevelt campaign has not really gotten underway yet—the President apparently feels that it would be a waste of energy for him to do a great deal before October. His tour of the drought section, however, gave him a chance to be seen and heard. And in the meantime, of course, the Democratic machine is working 24 hours a day, is bending every effort to bring "doubtful" states into the Roosevelt column.

Shelby's Picturesque Personalities

By Miriam Brewer Richardson
in Montgomery Advertiser

Beautiful Shelby County, with its softly wooded hills and romantic background, is a namesake of Col. Isaac Shelby, Revolutionary soldier who served the cause of American independence heroically at the battles of Point Pleasant and hard-fought King's Mountain, and later became the first governor of Kentucky. He was reelected in 1812 and during his second administration left his gubernatorial duties to lead the Kentuckians at the battle of Thames River. It was in this fierce and gory conflict that the Indians lost their great leader Tecumseh. Shelby County was organized by an act of the Legislature passed Feb. 7, 1818, from territory taken from Montgomery, which at one time comprised most of the center of the State. Something of the valor and enterprise of its heroic namesake must have entered into the hearts and minds of Shelby Countians, for this sections has produced some of the finest citizens of the State, many of them having materially aided in the building of Alabama.

During its long political history, Shelby has been preponderantly Democratic, yet at times leaders, who fought under the banners of other parties, have had considerable influence with their Democratic constituency and have represented it in the Legislature. One of these was William M. Kidd, an ardent Whig, who served Shelby in the House of Representatives in 1842, and again in 1844. Mr. Kidd was a leader in the Tippecanoe clubs throughout the State and labored ceaselessly for the election of President William Henry Harrison, who was the beauideal of the Whig party.

James M. Nabors left a pleasant memory and an honored name in his beloved county of Shelby. He was a planter on a large scale, with an education considered liberal at that time. He represented Shelby in the House of Representatives in 1831 and 1833, and served in the Senate in 1834. He was again in the lower branch of the Legislature in 1839, and in 1847 he returned to the Senate from Shelby and Bibb. Mr. Nabors was a strong Democrat and stood so well with his party that he was selected to place in nomination the name of Dixon H. Lewis for the United States senatorship at the joint session of the two houses, which met in convention on Dec. 7, 1844, after the resignation of Senator William R. King. Dixon H. Lewis, Democrat, and Arthur F. Hopkins, Whig, were the nominees, and the vote stood 85 for Lewis and 45 for Hopkins.

Though the name of Leonard Tarrant is closely associated with Talladega, where he resided for many years, yet he was identified with Shelby in the early part of his career. He represented Shelby in the House of Representatives in 1831 and 1832. He was a Democrat at this time, but in 1836 he espoused the Whig cause and soon was in full alliance with this party. At the time of the execution of a treaty with the Creek Indians in Alabama, President Andrew Jackson appointed him agent to superintend the sale of their reservations by the heads of families, and he served in this capacity for two years. In standing between the greedy land-buyers and the ignorant Indians, his integrity and unswerving devotion to duty were fully tested, and President Jackson's confidence in him fully justified. He served as judge of the county court for Shelby and was a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

No history of Shelby would be complete without the name and honorable ercord of Samuel Wright Mardis, who was born at Fayetteville, Tenn., June 12, 1800. When still a young man he accompanied his father, Reuben Mardis, to Shelby County, and with his only education from an "old field school," he studied law anl was admitted to the bar in 1823. He soon indulged in his natural flair for politics and represented Shelby in the Legislature in 1823-1825, 1828, and 1830. He was elected as a Democrat to the Twenty-second and Twenty-third Congresses, serving from March 4, 1831, until March 4, 1835. Later he moved to Mardisville, Talladega County, in 1835 and continued the practice of law until his death at Talladega, Nov. 14, 1836. He was interred in Oak Hill cemetery and sleeps in the breast of the second Alabama County he faithfully served.

Judge George David Shortridge of Shelby was one of the handsomest men of his time, a gentleman of great urbanity of manner who possessed the most attractive social qualities. He was a native of Montgomery County, Ky., where he was born Nov. 10, 1814. He came with his father, Eli Shortridge to Tuscaloosa in 1826, and became a Supreme Court clerk two years later. He was one of the first students to matriculate at University of Alabama, but did not graduate. He read law in his father's office, was admitted to the bar in 1834, elected solicitor about the same time and then removed to Montgomery. In 1836 he represented Montgomery in the Legislature, but ill health caused him to return to his Shelby County plantation. He soon recuperated and resumed the practice of law. In 1846 the Legislature elected him to the bench of the circuit court, and he held this office until he resigned in 1855 to accept the nomination of the American or Know-Nothing party, for governor, in opposition to Governor John A. Winston. The contest was bitter and exciting, the two candidates, both of whom were excellent speakers, addressing multitudes who gathered to hear them. Judge Shortridge's party was in the minority and Governor Winston defeated him by some ten or twelve thousand majority. Later he removed to Selma and practiced law with J. R. John. In 1861 he returned to Shelby and represented it as a member of the State convention which, in January, with his assistance, passed the Ordinance of Secession. He suffered heavily during the War Between the States in property losses, but more particlarly in the loss of his three sons and his only son-in-law. He died in 1870.

Thomas Waverly Palmer was an esteemed adopted son of Shelby. He was born May 19, 1860, at Snow Hill, Wilcox County, near Furman, and attended Howard College in 1877-88 when that institution was still located at Marion. He graduated at the University of Alabama with an A.M. degree in mathematics, and was instructor in mathematics at the University from 1881 through 1882. He was associate professor of this branch of learning in 1882-1883, professor of mathematics from 1883 until 1907 and dean of the Academic Faculty from 1905 to 1907. In May of that year he was elected president of the college at Montevallo, at that time known as "The Alabama Technical Institute for Women." He was chairman of the board of education of Montevallo in 1912, member of the Alabama Textbook Commission in 1915, and from 1898 to 1907 he was secretary of the Alumni Association of the University of Alabama. During his nearly 20 year's residence of Shelby he was an ardent and tireless worker for that county's welfare and progress, particularly along educational lines.

Henry Brazeale Walthall, famous stage and screen actor, and the best interpreter of Confederate roles, is Shelby's most distinguished native son. He is the most distinguished because his face, acting and character have penetrated every nook and corner of the globe and he made the world understand and accept the character of the Confederate soldier and his place in Southern history as a real and vital thing. Mr. Walthall was born at Mallory's Station, March 16, 1878, the son of Junius Leigh and Annie Mallory Wallace Walthall. The father was a native of Virginia, who removed to Alabama, and at the outbreak of the War Between the States enlisted in the Southern Foresters at Mobile and was later promoted to a captaincy. Henry B. Walthall received his early education in his family, being toutored by his two aunts, Miss Miliene Mallory and Mrs. W. W. Wallace. He attended Howard College a year. In September, 1900, he went to New York and after being in the city only three days began working as a super member of the Murray Hill Stock Company. Later he went on the road and played with Henry Miller and Margaret Anglin for four years in "The Great Divide," and "The Faith Healer". When war was declared between the United States and Spain in 1898, he volunteered and served as a private in Company G, First Alabama Volunteers, and when peace was declared he went to England with Mr. Miller in "The Great Divide."

Returning to the United States in 1910, he entered the motion picture field with David Wark Griffith. Among his screen successes are "The Birth of a Nation," in which he played the role of the young Confederate colonel, Ibsen's "Ghosts," Edgar Allan Poe's "Raven," The Avenging Conscience," and "The Scarlet Letter". His most recent success was with the lamented Will Rogers in "Judge Priest," when he played the part of a Confederate chaplain. Mr. Walthall's most arresting role, outside of Confederate portrayals, was that of President Francisco Maredo in "Viva Villa." His last role was in the "China Clipper." He married Mary Charleson, a motion picture actress. He died June 17, 1936, at the Pasteur Sanitarium at Monrovia, near Hollywood, California, and was the oldest actor in pictures in point of service.

Henry B. Walthall's great mission in life was the interpretation of history, particulary Confederate history. His outstanding achievement in this was the "Little Colonel," in "The Birth of a Nation". This is one of the truly great pictures of all time and it is still being shown though produced more than 20 years ago. It has reached the far windy corners of the earth and it has been said that the moon is always shining on a picture theater which is showing this remarkable film. It was a huge success financially and has made over $20,000,000. In portraying the part of the young Confederate colonel, Mr. Walthall displayed moral and physical courage of a high order and a certain wistful cultural charm. The world had become confused in its vision of the Confederate soldier by reason of war and reconstruction propaganda, and Henry Walthall clarified him and made his personality and character one of heroism and romantic beauty. Every country, State and section should not only preserve its history but see that other countries and posterity understand it. In order to do this its history must be interpreted in the terms of understanding of each succeeding generation. Mr. Walthall magnificently interpreted Southern history to at least two generations, and if the South is wise it will not permit his work to fall to the ground.

THE WORD IS "HYPOCRISY"

Under the title "What the Utilities Don't Understand," a recent Business Week Editorial said:: "It is a pity that the public utility companies in the Tennessee Valley don't quite understand what the Tennessee Valley Authority is up to. When they see TVA using its Federal subsidy to undersell them, and giving preferential rates in order to cajole their customers away, and establishing lines that practically parallel their own, what do they do but jump to the conclusion that TVA is in the power business? Yet certainly the truth ought to be plain enough. TVA is not in the power business. It is not trying to destroy the utility companies . . . . The one and only purpose of TVA is to foster navigation.

"That is what TVA told the Supreme Court . . . . If TVA builds power lines that parallel those of the utility companies and prevent the companies from refunding their bonds, it is only because TVA has a little power to sell; and the power is a mere incidental result of the building of dams to help navigation. In this great cause the utilities ought to be willing to sacrifice themselves gladly and patriotically, going broke if need be to forward the day when vast argosies of commerce shall cram every creek in the Tennessee Valley."

Under Business Week's sarcasm, there is an astonishing truth. Technically speaking, TVA's principal purpose is to develop navigation—and, as a result, it may spend as much as it likes on power dams and transmission lines and charge the cost off to navigation, national defense or what have you. The fact that navigation is a very small part of TVA activities, and power development the larger part can thus be legally camouflaged.

There is a word for this sort of thing; Hypocrisy. Just because the hypocrisy may be legal and was authorized by Congress, does not make it any prettier. Nor does it make it any easier on the tax payer who is paying the gigantic bills occasioned. So far as loss to innocent investors is concerned, it is not even considered.

She Wondered

The housewife was showing her prospective new maid over the house. She had been very liberal with her promises of privileges, and it looked as though the two were about to come to a working agreement. Suddenly the girl said:

"By the way, do you do your own stretchin' here, ma'am?"

"I don't understand," said the other, puzzled.

"Well," explained the girl, "do you put all the food on the table at dinner and stretch for it, or do I have to shuffle it round?"

Competition

An enterprising young florist, in order to increase his trade, displayed this sign in his window:

"We give a packet of flower seed with every plant."

His competitor across the street promptly sought to meet the competition by placing in his window the following announcement:

"We give the earth with every plant."

Tipoff on Series Hard to Find, for Even Yanks Hedge

OF COURSE, it is true that certain things still could happen in St. Louis. But, taking it for granted that a divine providence will reward the deserving (and how a Memphis vestryman named Bill Terry probably wishes he had the same sublime faith), I recently have been trying to find out who will win when the Yanks and Giants swap clouts for the gold and glory.

Terry

Strangely enough — aside from gaining support for a firm belief that it is a classic example of understatement to call a million-dollar sports festival a nickel series—I have been able to obtain very little inside information. While countless millions orate upon the topic at every street corner, the gents most intimately concerned refuse to weigh in with their five pennies' worth, no matter how diligently they are pretty pleased.

So it seems that I'll have to be the sucker again and get a mangled neck out on another limb far ahead of time.

During those early months when their hearts were light and gay and they had not yet been driven into the precarious business of defending a 16½-game lead with only 27 games left to play, the Yankees did gab a bit about October. Then it was their impression that the Cards, being two-fisted citizens built along their own sturdy lines, would be the toughest opposition.

The Cubs, they gossiped wistfully, would be the easiest of the National contenders to knock over. That was because they felt the Chicago athletes lacked the power and the pitcher capable of performing such magic feats as an aroused Dizzy Dean.

As for the Giants—Well all this chattering took place in the dim July days when Bill Terry's chin was being battered by numerous fourth-place I-told-you-sos, but even then the Yanks must have had a premonition. They asked questions, compared carefully obtained notes concerning their Polo Grounds neighbors, were reluctant to be pressed into any statement.

When they did crack, though, the Gehrigs, the Dickeys, the Crosettis and the others left little to the imagination. They said Carl Hubbell was one of the game's all-time great pitchers, that the Giants had other breaking stuff hurlers who might be hard to handle in a short series, that, all in all, they could think of far more pleasant ways to spend autumn afternoons.

With all hands—as well as backs, legs and other ailing portions—ready for action the present Yanks are athletes who hit for distance. When Ruffing is pitching, you have nine men who are likely to hit home runs. Playing in such a circumscribed spot as the Polo Grounds, there is more than a chance that pull hitters would even be connecting with outside balls for such pleasing results.

That would mean even such a skilled, smart and game pitcher as Hubbell would have to toss each ball to the exact spot of nine men's weaknesses.

The Giants — even though strange things can happen in a seven game limit affair such as the October classic—are not such a big-inning club. Ott, Leiber and several others might match distances with their opponents, but Terry's real team success has come from a waiting game. The club quite plainly is one that squeezes through the smallest opening in the enemy guard, capitalizes as fully as possible upon such stinted opportunities and then settles back to hold a hard-earned lead.

This—because on paper the Polo Grounds twirlers seem likely to be far superior to their neighbors—might be enough. Yet, since there always is the possibility that Pearson, Gomez, Broaca, Hadley or one of the others might be at top form for a week along with the old reliable Ruffing, it is not the sort of straw to be clutched too determinedly.

Probably the old guess has got to be laid on the line eventually, but, until the proper moment arrives, I'll be darned if I'm going to give those amazing Giants a chance to treat me like they have been treating the National League recently. Maybe both me and the Yankees know something.

Furred Suits "Must" for College

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

START your autumn wardrobe, Miss Collegian, with a fur-trimmed suit if you would underwrite for yourself a guarantee of being smartly and handsomely appareled throughout the coming round of campus and social activities. In fact the verdict handed down from the supreme court of high fashion declares a suit dramatized with lavish fur embellishment becomes an absolute "must have" this season for every woman and most especially for the college girl who would do the correct thing in matter of practical stylish daytime dress.

Since fur-laden costume suits are so outstanding on the current style program we are picturing a trio of last-minute models that simply radiate with style-significant details. These stunning ensembles were recently shown at a fashion revue presented by the style creators of Chicago in the wholesale district—a brilliant affair that intrigued a vast and appreciative audience to a point of high enthusiasm.

In [illegible] fashions three distinct trends are indicated—peplum, tuxedo (with reefer suggestion) and tunic. Generally speaking, the costume suit program for autumn and winter classifies into these silhouette influences.

The daring, flaring youthful peplum effect that distinguishes the colorful trotteur suit to the left carries appeal to the slender figure. This snappy walking suit of imported wool in the new moss green is lavishly bordered with red fox, a color combination that tunes in superbly with a glowing autumn landscape. The blouse is of rich lame. The elegance of the material of which the blouse is made carries an important message in regard to the new fabric collections which foretell the use of most opulent and grandiose weaves for fall and winter fashions. Per example the latest move is to wear a waistcoat of costly brocade with the new suit as a happy diversion from the regulation blouse. As to evening velvets and satins and such they are superbly beautiful and "classy."

A tuscan wine costume of nubby wool is centered in the group. Here we have a jacket with fitted back and a spectacular lynx tuxedo front that dramatizes the picture. The very new and popular fur reefer fronts such as stylize both jackets and long coats are quite similar to the tuxedo treatment. The dress with the "tuxedo" jacket is of matching material. It interprets a new neckline and has a double pearl ornament fastening down the front. Speaking of leading colors the wine shades repeat their triumph with dark rich greens (spruce green's the new theme) contesting for first honor.

The costume to the right is of spruce green wool trimmed in mink-dyed kolinsky. Here we have the more-than-ever popular tunic lines. The tunic suit is a leader among leaders this season. The deep fur bordering is typical of the smartest fur treatments for fall. The matching muff and self-fur collar add a final touch of chic.

SHORT, FULL SKIRT

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

Skirts shorter and fuller is the exciting headline flashed from fashion's realm for fall and winter. Another significant style message is that the new modes reflect a strong British trend influenced by the forthcoming coronation of King Edward VIII. All this as a prologue to the story of the dress here shown made of black spotproof transparent velvet with full circular Victorian skirt and a basque blouse trimmed in royal blue chiffon with metal coin dots — inspired by fashions popular in the days of Queen Victoria. We learn furthermore from the series of fashion revues presented recently by the Style Creators of Chicago in the wholesale outlet that the coronation theme reflects in street outfits as well as in the richly colorful and jeweled evening costumes, also that the red being used is strictly a British wine color and that a typical British tunic and cap influence is evidenced in new stylings.

DECORATIONS FOR HATS FOR AUTUMN

Judging by the forecasts of autumn millinery we are getting back to the days when a hat which wasn't trimmed wasn't considered as worthy of attention.

Autumn hats have all sorts of novel decoration, usually in a shade which contrasts so that there is no chance of overlooking the elaboration of detail. Bonnet-like shapes that look suspiciously like those great-grandmothers once wore are trimmed with pompons and perky ostrich tips. Tassels, silk cords and even spangle arrangements in several different shades trim more sophisticated models.

The alliance of different tones is as significant as the trend toward trimming. Novel fancies of ribbon in two shades of green appear on black felt models and those of very dark red shades. A soft raspberry tone is effective as a contrast for grayish blue.

Tunics Are Now Designed for All Types of Women

The vogue of tunics has reached the state where there are tunics designed for fat women, tunics for thin women, tunics for young and tunics for old. Woe unto the follower of fashion who happens to choose the wrong one.

Those flaring, knee length tunics which start from slender waistlines and shoot out in all directions are intended for the young and willowy creatures. The more they flare and the puffier the sleeves of the accompanying blouse the younger they are. Stylish stouts are permitted to adopt the tunic theme providing they select the straight line version.

Bouffant Effects

At recent Rue de la Paix shows, the silhouette varied from the strictly tailored pencil lines to bouffant effects, more effective perhaps in the full skirts because of the transparent laces which retained the willowy grace of the slim figures as heavier materials could not do.

Accidents Kill More Young Than Three Diseases

Auto Crashes Lead in List of Fatalities

Washington. — More than twice as many children under 15 years are killed by accidents as by three common communicable diseases, measles, scarlet fever and diphtheria.

This fact emerges in a study of fatal childhood accidents which has been undertaken by the U. S. Public Health Service here. First section of the study relating to automobile accidents, has just been reported by William M. Gafafer, senior statistician of the federal health service.

For children under one year of age mechanical suffocation leads the list of fatal accidents. At one and two years burns caused most fatal accidents. Automobile accidents and burns lead at three years.

The Dangerous Age.

At four years and from then up to fifteen years, automobile accidents rank first as cause of accidental deaths and also outnumber deaths from the three diseases, measles, scarlet fever and diphtheria. The study was limited to the year 1930, the most recent year for which accurate population enumerations exist.

Mr. Gafafer divided the country into three geographic regions, Northeastern, North Central, Southeastern and Western, and reviewed the fatality figures region by region.

The Northeastern region had most childhood automobile deaths per hundred thousand children. Next greatest number was found in the Western region. Then followed the North Central and finally the Southeastern with fewest deaths per hundred thousand children.

"Blanks" in Mind Occur Several Times a Minute

Chicago.—Your mind "goes blank" several times every minute. During these blank periods you involuntarily stop work for a couple of seconds. If you are tired, the stops occur oftener—maybe eight or ten times each minute—and they may last twice as long.

This automatic putting on of brakes by the brain was discovered in experiments conducted at the psychology laboratory of the University of Chicago here, under the direction of Prof. Arthur G. Bills.

Mind Stops Work.

The "blocks," as Professor Bills calls these blank periods, are not complete, he explains. The individual does not lose track of what is going on, but he must mentally stop work on the task at hand.

Blocks partly account for the "er-r-r" and "Ah" which public speakers put between words. These blanks are particularly conspicuous when a person is doing rapid calculating. Every so often, he is unable to proceed and stalls. Fatigue increases both the frequency and the duration of the blocks, causing bunching of responses or spurts of work.

How Stutterers React.

Stutterers block about twice as often as normal persons and their blocks last longer, it was found.

"It is safe to assume that there is a common neurological basis between blocking and stuttering," Professor Bills concluded.

Mental blocks are enforced resting periods, he explained. They may account for the fact that continuous mental work does not impair mental efficiency to nearly the same extent that muscular work impairs muscular efficiency.

First "Quake" Recorder Is Placed in Museum

Philadelphia. — The first earthquake recorder in the United States, placed in service at Lick observatory at the University of California in 1886, will soon go on display at the museum of the Franklin institute here.

The Lick observatory instrument was one of the few in California at the time of the disastrous 'quake in San Francisco on April 18, 1906. The observatory is only 45 miles away from San Francisco. The original record of this severe and damaging shock is still preserved and shows that while the vibrations threw the recording mechanism off the tracing paper, the apparatus functioned unharmed.

Electric Waves in Human Brain Are Studied by Science

Currents Vary During Sleep or Wakefulness

IS LIFE electrical?

Through the ages man has tried to discover or to explain that mysterious something which is life—the force that animates a mass of blood, bones and flesh. At one time, when scientists were rapidly learning one fact after another about the composition, structure and function of the human body, optimistic persons were sure that these scientists would finally unravel the wonder of wonders—life, itself.

The idea that scientists might some day use this knowledge to build a robot and then find a way to breathe life into him will apparently never be realized.

Life Is Mystery.

"The miracle of life itself — the fact that to certain material processes consciousness is added — can never be explained," Prof. Hans Berger of the University of Jena, Germany, now declares in a report to Research and Progress.

Professor Berger is the man who started the wave of experiments on what are popularly known as "brain waves." These are the tracings on paper of the electric currents which arise in the brain.

All activities of life are accompanied by electrical impulses, the current thus produced being called bioelectric. The English scientist, Caton, was the first who showed that electric currents arise in the brains of the higher animals, dogs and apes.

Fifty years later, in 1924, Professor Berger showed the existence of these currents in man and devised a method of leading these currents off from the brain so that they can be amplified and charted or recorded, appearing as wavy lines on paper.

Brain Always Active.

Recent study has shown that these waves vary during sleep, consciousness, mental activity, under the influence of anesthetics or sedative drugs, and in certain diseases. Though the waves are different under differing conditions, they are always present, showing that the human brain like the human heart is continually active.

Study of the currents from the brain will, it is hoped, give valuable information about various mental disorders, much as similar studies of the currents from the heart tell certain important things about the condition of that organ. But apparently they will not shed much light on the question of what makes life.

No answer can be given, Professor Berger says, to the question of whether the electric tension that is seen in the main vibrations of the "brain waves" merely accompanies the vital processes or whether it does just the work necessary to produce consciousness.

Automaton Chemist Analyzes Solutions

Vienna.—A chemical "robot" into which one pours an electrolytic solution to be analyzed and then receives a printed answer in a few minutes has been demonstrated before the faculty and chemical students at the university here by Dr. Hans Horn, former Viennese chemist now living in Germany at Cologne-Bayenthal.

Dr. Hohn's chemical analyzer is known as the Polarograph and operates by using the known chemical fact that the electric potential or voltage decreases as a solution is being disassociated during electrolysis.

What really pops out of the small black box, after an unknown electrolyte has been poured in, is the graph showing how electrical potential across the solution varies with time. From such potential curves (Polarograms) the trained chemical operator can quickly calculate the qualitative and quantitative analysis of the investigated material.

Tasteless Quinine Is Developed by Swiss

Washington. — That bitter shudder-creating taste of quinine is claimed not to be present in a new quinine compound for which a United States patent has just been granted here to Max Hoffer, of Basle, Switzerland.

The inventor says that it is not only tasteless, but also that it has no after taste.

The man-made quinine substitute is an entirely new chemical, made by combining quinine with a naphthalene compound. Naphthalene itself is familiar as the common moth balls or moth flakes.

HENRY FONDA'S marriage to Frances Seymour Brokaw will increase the little circle of smart society women who, married to motion picture actors, reside in Hollywood. Richard Barthelmess, Gary Cooper and Fred Astaire all married into the Social Register.

Incidentally, Mrs. Brokaw's life story is rather like that of a movie. Born in a small town in Massachusetts, she was the poor cousin of the wealthy Rogers family. Very pretty, very charming, she had everything but money.

She met George T. Brokaw, who had both wealth and social position, fell in love with him, married him, in 1931. Mr. Brokaw died nearly two years ago, leaving his widow and their small daughter well provided for. She never forgot what it meant not to have plenty of money. She has done notable things in charity work. Henry Fonda, whom she met this summer in Europe, is a fortunate young man.

Bette Davis

Bette Davis may seem to be a temperamental star when it comes to battling over stories and salary, but away from the studio she is most decidedly just another human being.

Not long ago she and her husband were traveling through the Canadian Rockies, on the first part of that vacation trip she's taking. She did rather startle the other guests at the hotel at Lake Louise by wearing a very low-cut evening gown—but she startled them still more by taking the bus to Banff the next day, instead of being exclusive and going in a private car.

Here's a new way to break into the movies. Marjorie Gage, a young society girl, likes to fly. She entered her own plane for the Ruth Chatterton Flying Cup race—and first thing she knew, had been engaged for a picture, "The Flying Hostess".

Simone Simon does so well in "Girls' Dormitory" that she is being pushed right ahead. An American girl who, just for fun, acted in a French film made in Salzburg summer before last, declared when she came back that Simone was the cutest thing she ever saw.

"Her face and her figure are both cute," she announced. "And her mind's cute too." Take that as a compliment or the reverse just as you please. Anyway, Simone will be seen next in "White Hunter," with Warner Baxter.

A short story which has attracted much attention, "Beyond the Sound of a Machine Gun," has been purchased by a leading studio, and in it will appear George Raft, Cary Grant, Randolph Scott and Fred MacMurray.

We're to have still more Dickens on the screen. "Pickwick Papers" will be the next Dickens picture. Paramount intended to make it with W. C. Fields, but that plan has been abandoned, and Metro has taken it on.

Jean Muir

Jean Muir decided recently that she'd like her hair better if it were brown, instead of blonde. Also, she cut off her bangs.

Then she made some tests for Warner Brothers. They objected to the changes. And as a result of a lot of argument, the hair stayed brown but the bangs returned. Some movie fans are betting that eventually Jean will return to blonde hair. They point out that it was as a petite blonde that Jean first attracted attention and that its appeal is one of her big assets.

It Doesn't Pay—

Doing Favors for Others With Thought of Return Disappoints

"THE older I grow the more I am appalled by the ingratitude, the complete lack of a sense of obligation on the part of our fellow human beings.

With me the people who come first are always those to whom I have any obligation whatsoever. Anything that is done for me is constantly on my mind and I am on the lookout to repay. But look about you and you will observe the most inconceivable indifference on the part of most otherwise decent people to what they owe to others. Indeed the code seems to be to cultivate those from whom some advantage may be forthcoming and neglect those to whom we are indebted. The answer to it all is to put yourself out for nobody; it doesn't pay"

The above lament was received by an international writer of note, who answers as follows:

It must have been an unusually unfortunate chain of experiences that gave this woman such an unhappy slant on human nature. But certain it is that favors done with thought of return are bound to bring disappointment. In this busy, hectic world, people are likely to be rather casual about give and take. That does not necessarily mean that they are unappreciative. They are just not punctilious. Frequently a kindness makes its mark but time passes before occasion presents itself to show appreciation, or to reciprocate. After all, if we think enough of people to put ourselves out for them, as our reader says, there must be a certain amount of faith.

If we do things for others only because we want to do them and find a certain satisfaction in it, we have nothing to lose. But the expected reward is something like the watched pot—very disappointing. In fact, it doesn't pay.

"To Mary--With Love" Strikes Deep And Sure At Love Today

A story that strikes deep and sure at love today, comes Thursday and Friday to the Strand Theatre, in the Twentieth Century-Fox picturization of Richard Sherman's sensationally successful novel of modern romance, "To Mary—With Love."

Warner Baxter and Myrna Loy, together for the third time cinematically, are co-starred and their performances opposite each other are said to surpass the heights they reached in "Broadway Bill" and "Penthouse."

Ian Hunter, as Myrna's childhood sweetheart who still loves her and Claire Trevor, as the good-time girl who almost disrupts the romance, are featured in the cast which also includes Jean Dixon.

A love-letter romance, "To Mary—With Love," opens with the marriage of Baxter and Miss Loy. Best man is Ian Hunter who hides his regret with a grin, at seeing Myrna's happiness in Baxter's arms.

Making love lightly, yet loving deeply, they move through their honeymoon and then return to New York where Baxter plunges into the stock market, intent on accumulating a fortune.

So occupied is he that Myrna takes a summer trip to Maine alone. Returning home, earlier than expected, she finds that Baxter hasn't been so lonesome as supposed but, instead, has been entertaining Claire Trevor.

This is the first flaw in their happiness and, although they patch it up, the scars still linger. Baxter returns to his manipulations in finance and, as the market rises, becomes wealthy.

Money doesn't bring happiness to the pair, however, for Myrna finds too much time on her hands and becomes intimate with a group of parasites and questionable friends.

Just as it appears that their marriage must break up, the market crashes and Myrna finds that her husband needs her more than ever.

From their penthouse they go to live in a shabby surburban bungalow. Baxter is unable to comprehend what has happened and Myrna is unable to convince him that he should get a job—any kind of a job.

Hiding their hurts and holding back their tears, Myrna and Baxter rise gallantaly and splendidly from their mifsroe ntdnufadni their misfortune and find a new and greater love to reward them.

Darryl F. Zanuck chieftain of the Twentieth Century-Fox studios, selected John Cromwell to direct "To Mary—With Love," and Kenneth Macgowan associate producer.

War To Be Waged On Organized Crime

Moving against organized crime, Alabama will require every "pistol toter" in the State to obtain a license effective October 1.

The license may be obtained from the probate judge, chief of police or sheriff and will cost 50 cents. It calls for the owner's full name, address, occupations, color, place of birth and the caliber, make, model and manufacturer's number of the pistol.

The license is not required for revolvers and automatics kept at a residence or place of business—only for the privilege of carrying the gun on your person or in your car.

No person who has been convicted of a crime of violence in Alabama or elsewhere shall be given a license, and these persons are specifically forbidden from owning a pistol.

The law, sponsored by Senator James Simpson, of Birmingham, is patterned after the uniform firearms act now in effect in many states.

Persons purchasing pistols after Oct. 1 must give 48-hour written notice to the dealer, who in turn must relay the notice within six hours to the chief of police or sheriff. After the sale is consummated, a copy of the purchase certificate must be sent to the secretary of state.

All dealers in pistols must obtain a special license Oct. 1, to cost 50 cents, in addition to the present license required under the general revenue act.

All receipts go into the state treasury.

Violators of the law may be fined not more than $500 and sentenced to one year in prison.

Senator John Rogers Dies At Gainesville

Gainesville, Ala., Sept. 22.—John Aduston Rogers, leader in State politics for more than 40 years, died of angina pectoris today in his home here.

He was elected to the present State Senate from Sumter and Pickens Counties, but failing health prevented his attendance at sessions of that body, to which he was first named in 1894

Born on his maternal grandfather's plantation in Sumter County in 1861, Mr. Rogers was educated in private schools and at the University of Alabama, being graduated from the latter in 1881.

For several years he was a merchant here, but in 1893 he sold his business to engage in farming and livestock raising.

A lifelong Democrat, he was elected to the State Senate in 1894, and to the House of Representatives in 1915.

During the Brandon Administration, he was chairman of the State Highway Commission, and had served as a member of the board of trustees of both the University of Alabama and Alabama Polytechnic Institute at Auburn.

His political career was punctuated with many bitter verbal fights. That even his political foes never accused him of "straddling" any issue was one of his proudest assertions.

Despite many stands not popular with many voters, he was never defeated for office in his home county of Sumter, and was usually unopposed when he announced his candidacy.

Mr. Rogers married Miss Lula Bradshaw, also of Gainesville, here January 25, 1888. Mrs. Rogers and their five children, John Aduston, Jr., State Senator, C. M. A. Rogers of Mobile, Miss Jane Bradshaw, Miss Elizabeth Roycroft and Albert Gallatin Barnes Rogers survive him.

The funeral will be held here at 10 a.m. Wednesday. Many of the State's highest officials are expected to attend.

Simone Simon In Brilliant Debut Twentieth Century Fox Triumph!

One of the most important cinema events in years will take place Saturday at the Strand Theatre when an exciting personality, Simone Simon (pronounced See-MOAN See-MOAN), makes her debut in the Twentieth Century-Fox production, "Girls' Dormitory".

Warm, young, refreshing and vital, with distinct magnetic appeal and rare, strange beauty, Miss Simon is being acclaimed the most important discovery in recent screen history. Herbert Marshall and Ruth Chatterton are starred with her, in an exceptional cast that features Constance Collier, J. Edward Bromberg, Dixie Dunbar, John Qualen and Shirley Deane.

The film opens in an exclusive boarding school. Herbert Marshall is the director of the school, Ruth Chatterton, Constance Collier, J. Edward Bromberg, are important members of the faculty.

The students are all young girls in their late 'teens, and all are daughters of wealthy families, sent to the school to complete their education.

Beyond walls barred to men, the girls are taught and schooled in everything, except what the rules forbid—life and love.

It is but a short time before graduation. Simone, a remarkably beautiful girl, is about to leave the surroundings she has known for years—and the man she has youthfully loved almost as long, Herbert Marshall.

On a dare, Simone asks Marshall to dance with her at a school social event. He refuses the girl, and ashamed at the rebuff, she runs off, to return just as a searching party is setting out to look for her.

Ruth Chatterton is also in love with Marshall, but she conceals her affection behind an appearance of friendly cooperation.

One of the teachers discovers a romantic love note, evidently written by one of the girls. She brings the note to Marshall demanding that the girls be reprimanded at once. Behind the words of the letter, Marshall sees that the girl was evidently creating a fictitous character in her mind.

Simone is discovered to be the author of the note. Hailed before the faculty, she admits writing it, but denies that the contents of the note are true.

Ruth Chatterton takes her aside, and Simone reveals that she wrote the note, in a girlish mood, to Marshall, and that she is in love with the teacher.

When Marshall is informed of Simone's statement, he realizes that he, too, loves the young girl. In their romance, they find temporary happiness, but Simone overhears a conversation that makes her believe Marshall is really in love with Miss Chatterton.

From this foundation, the film moves swiftly, strongly, to its climax, replete with drama and suspense.

"Girls' Dormitory" was especially chosen for Simone's first Hollywood picture. Irving Cummings directed the production, with Raymond Griffith associate producer.

Rural Lines Ahead Of Previous Schedule

Birmingham, Sept. 21.—Officials of Alabama Power Company stated today that since it began a program for a year of rural line construction on September 4, 1935, it had built 882 miles of lines and had under construction 232 miles. This runs ahead of the planned schedule of 849 miles within that period.

A twelve months summary, on September 16, of the company's rural line construction program shows that the company has completed the construction of 220 rural lines, a total of 882 miles to serve 4,280 rural customers in 52 counties of the State. In the construction of those lines, labor of the local communities has been employed to dig holes, clear the rights-of-way, and for such other labor as does not require skilled workmen. Local electricians in the communities have found employment in wiring the homes and dealers in the towns near those communities have sold the materials for wiring, fixtures and appliances.

The materials for constructing the lines have been purchased from dealers and manufacturers of the State, increasing business for the creosote plants and manufacturers of line materials.

At the present time the company has under construction 41 additional rural lines with a total of 232 miles to serve 963 rural customers. Thus, the company is continuing its policy and effort to expand its electric system to serve additional customers throughout the entire area served by the company.

8,000 Walker Co. Pupils Out Of School

Jasper, Ala., Sept. 22.—Union sources said more than 8,000 of Walker County's 17,000 school children remained away from classrooms today as the "strike" started last week to protest "discrimination against union members" gained force.

G. C. Banks, secretary of the Central Labor Union here, said the walkout came in support of a demand that school authorities allow teachers to join the American Federation of Classroom Teachers, an American Federation of Labor affiliate.

Banks said 150 of the county's 375 teachers were members of the union, and scores of others "want to join but are afraid of their jobs."

Walker County's principal industry, coal mining, is strongly unionized, and children of union members have been kept from classes.

County Superintendent A. S. Scott has declined to "take any position". He said "teachers in our schools are free to join or not, as they see fit."

Union leaders claimed that three instructors were discharged because of union activity. Scott denied the charge.

Schools at Coal Valley, Parrish, Bankhead, Sipsey, Nauvoo, Empire and Sumiton were either closed or operating wits sharply reduced student bodies.

Both school officials and union spokesmen agreed that no salary disagreements were involved in the walkout.

Members of unions affiliated with the Central Labor Union here have been called into a mass meeting Friday, at the same hour the County Board of Education is scheduled to meet.

State Superintendent of Education J. A. Keller has been here conferring with county officials, and State Labor Commissioner Robert R. Moore sent Conciliator M. C. Hughes here in an effort to work out an agreement.

Most of the schools most sharply affected are in coal mining areas.

Jasper's city schools, operated separately, are not affected by the county disagreement.

Great Britain Buys Ford Boats

A fleet of 45-foot high-speed picket boats, each powered with four Ford V-8 engines adapted for marine use, to patrol the coast of Great Britain has been ordered by the British Admiralty from Vosper and Company, Limited, of Portsmouth, England.

On a trial run of 260 nautical miles fr om Portsmouth to Plymouth and return, the first of these craft to be completed averaged 21 knots, running through heavy seas and in a stiff wind.

The engines, as adapted for marine use by Vosper, develop 75 brake horsepower each and are set side by side. They give the boat a maximum speed of 25 knots. The macinery occupies only one-third the space required for machinery in 45-foot steam-driven picket boats now used, and the service speed is approximately three times as great. The boats are fitted for mounting a machine gun forward, with depth bomb dropping gear amidships and mine-sweeping gear aft. Each is capable of carrying more than 100 men in an emergency. They have full fire-fighting equipment and for watertight compartments.

The same company is also delivering seventeen 25-foot flotilla type fast launches, each equipped with a single Vosper-adapted Fard V-8 engine, giving a cruising speed of 18 and a maximum speed of 23 knots. It is expected these boats will be standardized for use in connection with the latest classes of cruisers, destroyers and sloops throughout the British Navy.

"Mother, isn't it nearly time for lunch?" asked little John.

"No, lunch will not be ready for nearly an hour," returned the mother.

"I guess my stomach must be fast," ventured the six-year-old.—Indianapolis News.

Dress Colors Should Match Hue Of Eyes

MYRNA LOY EXPLAINS WHY SHE PREFERS TO WEAR GREEN DRESS

"I think the color of a girl's eyes should be the predominating shade in her dress," states Myrna Loy in response to a query as to why she almost always appeared in green off screen.

Myrna, co-starred with Warner Baxter in "To Mary—With Love," Twentieth Century-Fox picture Thursday and Friday at the Strand freely admits a veritable passion for green.

"When I was sixteen," she continued, "I remember getting a dress that completely changed my life. The combination of the emerald-colored gown and my green eyes changed me from just another girl into someone with a personality.

"Ever since then I've stuck pretty closely to that color, although I change off sometimes to a black."

Miss Loy doesn't insist that her picture clothes be made in her favorite color. Good sense guides her there.

"I generally let the wardrobe department and cameraman decide what color costume I'm to wear. It is their business to know the peculiarities of the camera. It is mine to decide what I am to wear in private.

"However, I don't think any girl can make a mistake in choosing her clothes if she selected dresses to match her eyes, whether they be green, blue brown or hazel."

In "To Mary—With Love", Myrna is co-starred with Warner Baxter. Ian Hunter, Claire Trevor and Jean Dixon are also featured in the production, which was directed by John Cromwell from Richard Sherman's best selling novel of the same title.

Federal Emergency Funds For Alabama

From the Emergency Relief Appropriattion Act of 1935 the allocations by the President to Alabama were $65,820,000, of which $49,803,000 has been expended on the basis of checks issued as of August 31, 1936, according to figures compiled by Judge John D. Petree, State Director of the National Emergency Council for Alabama.

Of these expenditures, $4,696,000 went for roads and grade crossing eliminations; $9,843,000 for Emergency Conservation Work; $10,236,000 to the Federal Emergency Relief Administration; $2,588,000 to the P.W.A. for various public improvements; $4,128,000 to the Resettlement Administration; $15,225,000 to W. P. A.

In addition to the above expenditures and appropriations, $7,512,000 was allocated by the President to Alabama from funds available under the Emergency Relief Appropriations Act of 1936, $4,975,000 of this amount has been obligated and $3,476,000 expended.

Elections Called For Legislative Vacancies

A call has been issued by Gov. Graves for a special election, to be held the same day as the general election, Nov. 3, for the filling of five existing vacancies in the State Legislature. There are two seats to be filled in the Senate, those of the late Senators John A. Rogers, of Gainesville, and Shelby S. Fletcher, of Huntsville. In the House vacancies have been created by the resignation of former Representative Clint Harrison of Marengo, who resigned to accept appointment as associate member of the Public Service Commission—and R. A. Reid, who resigned to become Postmaster at Montevallo.

Another vacancy occurred upon the death of Representative J. A. Hollingsworth of Chambers County.

Reid tendered his resignation to Gov. Graves Monday, as representative in the Legislature for Shelby County. Mr. Reid will take over his duties as postmaster on November 1.

Women's Club Met Last Monday

The Business and Professional Women's Club of Montevallo held its first meeting of the Fall on Monday evening this week at the St. George Hotel.

The chairman of the program committee presented plans for the year's activities, which were discussed by the club members.

The members of the club extended their heartiest congratulations to Dr. Hallie Farmer, who was made a member of the Town Council in Monday's municipal election. She is the first woman to be elected to a public office in Montevallo. Dr. Farmer, in turn, expressed her appreciation to the club for its loyal support.

It is felt by each club member, as a result of Dr. Farmer's victory, that the women of our community are beginning to be recognized for their full value in their relationships and active participation in civic interests.

The Alabama College Student Senate will be host at the luncheon, and senators will sit at the head of each table for guests.

The college theater at 2 p.m. will present a play dramatizing five periods in the life of Alabama College, represented by the years 1896, 1906, 1916, 1926 and 1936. The play will be directed by its author, Mrs. Willilee R. Trumbauer, of the class of 1925, who will be assisted by Prof. W. H. Trumbauer, director of the college theatre.

Saturday the class of 1937 will be host to alumnae and visitors at a reception and dance given in the parlors of main dormitory.

Reid To Become Postmaster Nov. 1

HAS SENT IN HIS RESIGNATION AS COUNTY REPRESENTATIVE

Mr. R. A. Reid of Montevallo, representative of Shelby County in the legislature of Alabama, forwarded to Governor Graves on September 21, his resignation as a member of the lower house.

This action of Mr. Reid was occasioned by the fact that he has received his commission from president Roosevelt as Postmaster of Montevallo, which office he will assume on the first of November.

In the postoffice Mr. Reid will succeed Mrs. Scears Lee, who has served as acting postmaster since the resignation of Dr. P. C. Wilson.

Mr. Reid sent a copy of his resignation to the Shelby County Democratic Executive Committee, and it is understood that the committee will be called innto session immediately, perhaps this week, to make nomination of a successor to Mr. Reid as County Representative.

According to the best information obtainable in local circles Wednesday, it appears that Hon. L. H. Ellis, of Columbiana, will be the nominee for Representative. It was stated that Dr. E. G. Givhan, of Monttevallo, had expressed his intentions of being an applicant for the place, but has withdrawn.

Mr. Ellis represented Shelby, Chilton and Autauga Counties in the State Senate during the first Graves term, in which he gained wide prominence for his leadership of the adminstration forces on the floor of the upper House.

His election to succeed Mr. Reid would send him to Montgomery with a background of experience and acquaintance with State affairs which would put him automatically in the forefront of the big and vital issues that will face the lawmakers when they assemble again.

Construction work on the new postoffice at Montevallo has progressed to the ground floor level, which includes the laying of the reinforced steel-concrete floor.

News Review of Current Events the World Over

Senator Couzens Defeated in Michigan Primaries—Maine Recaptured by Republicans—Notable Gathering of Savants at Harvard Tercentenary.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union.

REPUBLICANS were highly gratified by the results of the Michigan primary election for two reasons: First, because three out of five persons who went to the polls asked for Republican ballots; second, because Senator James Couzens, a Republican who has openly declared that he is supporting President Roosevelt for re-election, lost his fight for renomination. Couzens, one of the wealthiest members of the senate, was badly defeated by former Gov. Wilbur M. Brucker, and there is more than a suspicion that he knew his fate beforehand. Brucker, who is only forty-two years old, has been in public life for almost twenty years. The Republicans re-nominated Frank D. Fitzgerald for the governorship.

Sen. Couzens

On the Democratic side Representative Prentiss M. Brown won the senatorial nomination against Louis B. Ward who was supported by Father Coughlin. For governor they chose Frank Murphy, high commissioner to the Philippines and former mayor of Detroit. Both Murphy and his defeated opponent, George Welsh, campaigned as Roosevelt supporters.

In the New Hampshire primaries Gov. H. Styles Bridges won the Republican senatorial nomination, ending the effort of former Senator George H. Moses to stage a comeback. The Democrats put up Representative William N. Rogers. Nominees for governor are Maj. Francis P. Murphy, Republican, and Amos N. Blandin, Democrat.

Massachusetts will have for senator either Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr., Republican, or James M. Curley, now governor, Democrat. John W. Haigis, Republican, and Charles F. Hurley, Democrat, were nominated for the governorship.

The gubernatorial nominees in Wisconsin are: Gov. Philip La Follette, Progressive; Alexander Wiley, Republican, and Arthur W. Lueck, Democrat.

MAINE, the "barometer" state, is back in the Republican column at least so far as its state ticket is concerned. The G. O. P. captured the United States senatorship, the governorship and three congressional seats. Senator Wallace H. White, Republican, defeated Gov. Louis J. Brann, who sought to unseat him. Lewis O. Barrows, Republican, won the governorship by a substantial majority over F. Harold Dubord, Democrat.

The vote cast broke all records for size and interest in the election was intense. The state had been visited by both President Roosevelt, as he returned from his vacation cruise, and Gov. Alf M. Landon, the Republican Presidential nominee, who made speeches there only a few days ago. Colonel Knox, vice presidential candidate on the Republican ticket, also had canvassed the state. Brann, who was elected governor in 1932 and re-elected two years later, was the first Democrat to hold that office in Maine and was personally popular. White was elected senator in 1930 after ten years in the house of representatives.

SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE WALLACE has approved the new $10,000,000 seed corn loan program of the AAA. The government will advance farmers two types of loans on seed corn stored on the farm. Advances of $1.75 a bushel will be made to farmers on 1,000,000 bushels of selected corn. The government will have the option of buying this corn at $3.50 a bushel up to April 1, 1937.

The second type of loan permits advances of 55 cents a bushel on "good quality and properly stored cribbed corn which can be sorted for seed at a later date." On the latter type of loan the government retains the right to purchase the collateral at $1.50 a bushel until April 1 next.

It is understood the Reconstruction Finance corporation has agreed to advance up to $10,000,000 under the loan program. The loans will be made to farmers through the Commodity Credit corporation.

The interest rate on the new loans will be 4 per cent, the same as was in effect under the old corn loan program.

FEDERAL government help in controlling their business has been asked by two large sections of the tobacco industry.

The Retail Tobacco Dealers of America, Inc., representing about 300,000 retailers of tobacco products, requested the federal trade commission to authorize a trade practice conference with a view for formulating rules for the elimination of unfair methods of competition and trade abuses.

Representatives from nine tobacco producing states wound up a two-day conference in Washington with a request addressed to the agricultural adjustment administration to draft a model production control bill.

TO THE sixty-sixth annual congress of the American Prison association, held in Chicago, was presented a report from the committee on crime prevention in which it was stated that the tactics of a certain class of lawyers, in defending persons charged with crime have the effect of encouraging criminals to repeat their offenses. The committee declared that 75 per cent of the prisoners now in penal institutions in this country had been "literally faced about into a career of crime" by their experiences with defense attorneys.

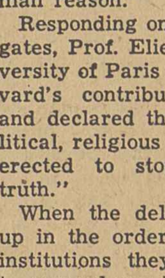
The coaching of the attorney tended to help the defendant find an alibi for his misdeeds and a sedative for his conscience, according to the report, when public welfare should have guided the lawyer to conduct "which would quicken the sensibilities of the prisoner and awaken him to his own misdeeds."

The committee recommended more scientific methods in preventing and combating crime and it estimated that the country's annual crime cost is $15,000,000,000—"one-fourth of the national income; half of the war debt."

FOR the first time in seven years the United States is to have a squadron in European Atlantic waters. It is known as "Squadron 40-temporary" and Rear Admiral Arthur P. Fairfield was named as its commander. Admiral Fairfield hoisted his flag aboard the light cruiser Raleigh at the Norfolk navy yard and sailed for Gibraltar. At first the squadron will consist of the flagship Raleigh, the destroyers Kane and Hatfield and the coast guard cutter Cayuga, but navy officials expected its strength would be increased soon.

The Hatfield, Kane and Cayuga had been on emergency duty in Spanish waters since the outbreak of the Spanish revolt until they were withdrawn to nearby neutral ports following the attempted bombing of the Kane by an unknown plane off Cadiz last August 30.

IT IS pleasant to turn from war and politics and read of the doings at Cambridge, Mass., where Harvard university is celebrating the tercentenary of its founding. In Sanders theater was held the academic reception for 554 colleges and learned societies in every state of the union and in forty foreign countries, and all of them wearing the caps, gowns and hoods signifying their various degrees of scholarship.



J. B. Conant

President James B. Conant greeted the guests, accepted their credentials and delivered a simple address of welcome. He noted that the assembly was an impressive demonstration of the solidarity of the academic world, and saw in the greetings of the delegates "the continued aspiration of mankind toward a universal fellowship based on human reason."

Responding on behalf of the delegates, Prof. Elie Cartan of the University of Paris paid tribute to Harvard's contributions to education and declared that "no barrier, political, religious or social, should be erected to stop the search for truth."

When the delegates were called up in the order of the age of the institutions they represented, first to respond was Prof. Saleh Hashem Attia of Al-Azhar university of Cairo, founded in 790. Then came the next oldest, the Regia university, Neglie Stuni Bologna, founded in the Tenth century, and represented by Prof. Carrado Gini. Third was the University of Paris, founded in the Eleventh century, whose representative was Dr. Cartan. Oxford, Cambridge and all the others followed, down to the youngest represented, the Academia Sinica of Nanking, China.

World famous educators, scientists and men of letters, including ten Nobel prize winners, were among those who attended the reception.

FRANCE'S famous polar explorer, Dr. Jean Charcot, and 59 of the crew of 60 aboard the exploration ship Pourquoi Pas were drowned when the vessel foundered in a gale off the Iceland coast. One petty officer swam ashore and told of the tragedy. Charcot led two expeditions to the Antarctic and a region there is named for him, Charcotland. In 1925, when one of Roald Amundsen's north polar expeditions was missing, Charcot searched the east coast of Greenland in the Pourquoi Pas.

POPE PIUS XI may be physically weak, as recent reports say, but age and illness have not lessened the vigor of his opinions and his way of expressing them. In greeting and blessing some five hundred Spanish refugees who were received at Castel Gandolfo, the holy father took occasion to denounce strongly the "mad" forces of Communism which, he declared, menaced, in Spain and elsewhere, "the very foundations of all order, all culture and all civilization." He urged the constituted authorities of all nations to oppose "these great evils with every remedy and barrier that is possible" and prophesied that there will be utter chaos if "those who have a duty in the matter do not hasten to repair the breach—if, indeed, it is not already too late."

Pope Pius XI

The pope spoke especially of the situation in Spain, but said the crisis there is "a school in which the most serious lesson is being taught to Europe and to the whole world—to a world now at last wholly steeped, ensnared and threatened by subversive propaganda, and more especially to a Europe battered and shaken to its very foundation."

For forty minutes the pontiff spoke passionately, his voice at times broken with emotion, and his address was transmitted by radio to all the civilized world.

Reichsfuehrer Hitler, too, took another hard whack at the Communists at a ceremonial tribute to the World war dead in Nuremberg. Before 120,000 uniformed Nazis and 50,000 others he boasted of Germany's armed strength and shouted:

"Our old enemy, bolshevism, is vanquished within Germany, but still active around her borders. But let no one be deceived. We are ready at any hour. We all have one wish—to maintain peace — but with it goes one firm decision: Never to surrender Germany to that enemy we have come to know so well."

If Hitler, as some think, tries to lead the coming five-power Locarno conference into forming an anti-Soviet alliance, he will be firmly opposed by France. Foreign Minister Yvon Delbos says so, and declares France will under no circumstances abandon her military pact with Soviet Russia.

According to Pravda, authoritative newspaper of Moscow, Hitler plans to attack and partition Czechoslovakia before he embarks on a war against the Soviet union.

Benito Mussolini and his cabinet appropriated large sums to build up Italy's army, navy and air forces to greater strength and planned to carry on vigorously the campaign for self-sufficiency in raw materials.

It looked as if the dove of peace was preparing to leave Europe, and as relations between Japan and China grew more strained every day, she probably will have to take refuge on the western continent.

THE Spanish rebels scored their greatest victory to date when they captured San Sebastian, capital of Guipuzcoa province and famous Bay of Biscay resort. Santa Barabara fort, dominating the city, was first taken and the city's war council then decided to abandon the place, despite the opposition of the anarchists. The more conservative Basque nationals prevented the reds from burning the city, only a paper factory and two residences being destroyed, and the defending forces retreated toward Bilbao, accompanied by thousands of civilians and foreigners. Insurgent troops, commanded by Col. Jose Beorlegui, marched in and were ceremoniously reviewed, and the bishop of Pamplona officiated at a thanksgiving service.

The municipal governor, Antonio Ortega, and his staff boarded a yacht to go to new headquarters at Zumaya, about 15 miles west of San Sebastian. The new line of defense was established at Orio, about halfway to Zumaya.

Government spokesmen claimed considerable victories in the Talavera sector southwest of Madrid and not far from the Portuguese border.

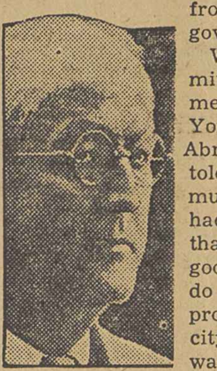
OUR navy's intelligence department has discovered that a recent small fire on the cruiser Indianapolis while she was being overhauled in the New York navy yard was caused by the driving of phonograph needles and nails into an electric cable; and other suspected sabotage on war vessels is being investigated. The work on the cruiser was being done by civilian employees and Capt. Charles A. Dunn, industrial manager of the yard, said the placing of the nails in the cables was "undoubtedly" a deliberate attempt to damage the cruiser.

SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE WALLACE is arranging a series of community meetings of farmers for the purpose of laying out the "agricultural conservation program" for next year. He said the AAA planned the meetings in the farm areas in order to discuss crop insurance and possible maximum limits of benefit payments to each farm. He explained the program aimed at providing "greater abundance for the average American home," and should "help to check soil erosion, improve fertility, encourage better land use and maintain farm income."

BRISBANE
THIS WEEK

For the Pacific States
A Good Example
It Sold for $700

The Pacific states should interest themselves in air defense, apart from the national government.



Arthur Brisbane

When a committee of rich men from New York called on Abraham Lincoln, told him how much money they had, and urged that he send a good battleship to do nothing but protect New York city, his reply was that if he had as much money as they said they had, he would build a battleship for himself.

The west coast states, California, Oregon, Washington, co-operating perhaps with their vigorous neighbors of Vancouver, and other points above the Canadian border, might well have a few flying ships of their own, a sort of air militia.

San Francisco, where they combine patriotism with plenty of money, and great civic pride and energy, might well start the idea of a Pacific coast flying force. That need not be very expensive. A hundred machines to begin with, a hundred plucky young fliers, practicing the gentle art of flying at night, and dropping bombs, practicing especially mimic warfare against other flying machines, would constitute an admirable object lesson to the rest of the country.

And if California, in San Francisco for instance, should start a little flock of one hundred machines, Los Angeles could be relied upon to hurry in with two hundred, Seattle and other coast cities also.

Such machines need not be a total loss.

In the first place, many young gentlemen with rich fathers, not knowing exactly what to do with themselves, extremely anxious to find work worth while, and preferably dangerous, would delight in each equipping his individual machine, for the service of the Pacific coast and of Uncle Sam, as the nobles in the old days delighted in equipping each his regiment, or his fighting ship, for the service of the king.

Two hundred or three hundred high - powered, swift flying machines, directed by quick and courageous American brains, would be worth more to the safety of the Pacific coast than a hundred battleships. For the fighters that come, if they do come, will fly miles above the battleships.

They would come less gaily, less confidently, if they knew that trained fliers awaited them.

Hideyo Noguchi, who gave his life to fight yellow fever in Africa, will inspire many men. He was born of a proud, warlike race, intensely self-centered, for 2,000 years a hermit people. The loyalty of a Japanese was to family, clan, above all to the emperor representing his race. The rest of the world was nothing to him.

Born one generation after Japan opened her doors to the world, Noguchi felt the new spirit of the times. He was loyal to family, clan, emperor, race; but he was devoted chiefly to all human kind.

From boyhood to the last, through poverty and many perils, he studied how to wipe out disease. He discovered the germ of yellow fever, developed serums to prevent the fever of cure it, led in the work that has driven it out of America and will soon put an end to it throughout the world.

Yellow fever killed countless millions of all peoples. Noguchi's skill and devotion have saved the lives of millions, too many to estimate, most of them foreigners to whom his forefathers would have paid no attention, calling them hei-min, or no-folks.

Noguchi's self-sacrifice to human welfare sets an example that is sure to be followed. Perhaps, in time, most men will see that it is better to help one another than to kill or even rob one another.

It is said the Hackensack Indians sold to the white men for so many bars of lead, and some finery, worth altogether $700, land on which now stands the entire city of Newark, N. J., and a great deal of land beyond.

The poor Hackensack chief, with his $700, couldn't buy today enough land or a tight grave at the corner of Broad and Market streets in Newark. Land goes up wonderfully.

Doctors at Kansas City report that birth control information so much discussed does little good to the poor, and has caused an "alarming slump in child bearing among educated families."

That is how reform works, usually. But since 90 per cent of human beings worth while come from poor families, providence may be working in its usual mysterious way.

Call Spade a Spade

Washington. — As the campaign gets more heated it becomes increasingly evident that the political battle this year will result more times in a spade being called a spade—men being named names—than has happened in a good many previous years. When this stage is reached it invariably means that party workers as well as party leaders are thoroughly imbued with the sense of battle and it means further that no phase of either party policy or personal affairs of the candidates themselves escapes the attention of the opposition.

That probably is the reason why Mr. Roosevelt lately has found himself being "kidded" to a greater extent than usually occurs about his "non-political" visits to various sections of the country. The opportunity has not yet come for Governor Landon, the Republican nominee, to be made the butt of such jokes or the subject of such personal attacks, but undoubtedly it will arrive long before November 3.

To refer again to the President's "non-political" trips, the correspondents here have been having a great deal of fun about the President's determination to learn first-hand about the flood areas of Pennsylvania and New England and the drouth areas of the middle western plains.

This is significant. It shows an important change of attitude on the part of the Washington observers who seldom find themselves in a position where they can tell everything they know. It is significant also from this standpoint that it shows Mr. Roosevelt to have lost the loyalty of a great number of those writers. Time was when 95 per cent of the Washington correspondents were with Mr. Roosevelt on everything he said or did and when they found vulnerable spots or weaknesses in his statements or actions they were inclined to overlook them. Such is not the case now, however, and I think it may be added with candor that the President's programs and policies, his speeches and statements in press conferences are examined with utmost scrutiny.

From the Democratic standpoint, this is distressing. From the Republican standpoint, it is a highly valuable change in circumstance. The reason is that as long as the President had a completely "friendly press" he did not need to be so careful nor did he ever need to fear that interpretations would be placed upon his statements or his actions, other than the interpretation which he desired. It takes no stretch of the imagination to realize forthwith that any time he says or does anything to which exception can be taken, some of those correspondents will point out the other possibilities.

I find, generally speaking, that the writing corps doubted that the President's Pennsylvania and New England visits were based solely on his desire to know what the federal government should do to prevent floods. One correspondent was so extremely frank as to write in his metropolitan newspaper that Mr. Roosevelt foresaw not a flood of water but a flood of Republican votes. Of course, this is an exaggerated position for any unbiased writer to take, but there were any number of those correspondents who laughingly inquired why it was so urgently necessary for the President to visit the flood areas at this time—considering that there was no congress in session and no definite provision for the framing of flood relief plans.

Learned Little

Now as to the President's visit to the drouth stricken area: The drouth was present in the "dust bowl" as the brilliant young strategists of the New Deal organization have named the middle western plains. There can be no doubt, likewise, that relief was needed and that a thorough-going understanding of the situation by those responsible in Washington should be obtained. Yet, I believe it was the consensus of the writers accompanying the President on that whirlwind tour of the dust storms that Mr. Roosevelt personally gained no knowledge of conditions that was not already available to him in reports from his subordinates. Indeed, I am told on very good authority that relief representatives who had gone into the drouth area already had written their reports to the President and made their recommendations concerning policies to deal with that relief situation before he left Washington on that trip.

It must be quite obvious, however, that Mr. Roosevelt desired to see conditions about which so much was being written in the newspapers. I think he cannot be blamed for desiring the opportunity to witness things as they actually were before the rains came; but some of his speeches from the rear end of his special train evidenced something more than a hint that he desired to see not only the drouth stricken area but the voters who live there.

More recently the President has made a non-political trip into certain areas of the southland where it is suspected by Chairman Farley's representatives that a goodly number of Republican votes exist. In fairness to the President it must be said with respect to his southern trip, however, that he did little actual speech-making. It is true that he gave the pump-handle handshake wherever people desired to greet him but his campaigning was much less evident in the minds of the reporters than obtained in his visit to the north and to the central west.

* * *

Soil Erosion

And referring to his trip to the central west, I am reminded of the hysteria that has arisen over soil erosion. Undoubtedly, soil erosion is a problem worthy of general attention but the thing that disturbs me as a Washington observer is that soil erosion, like a lot of other problems, suddenly has become mixed up in politics when it is not a political question.

The conservation of soil of natural resources, has been a matter to which farmers of the nation have addressed themselves for more than a hundred years. Who is it among farming community that has not attempted at one time or another to stop "washes" or who has not planted some willow trees or some kinds of bush to prevent ditches being cut through the middle of fertile and arable land? And may I ask further, what farmer is there who has not given consideration to crop rotation, to the planting of types of clover or hay or grasses that would of themselves enrich the soil?

All of these things are commonplace. All of them have been done from the time to which the memory runneth not to the contrary. But now we find a perfect hullabaloo—a hysteria—as I said at the beginning about a thing with which farmers long have been familiar.

It comes almost into the category of nonsense. One needs only to visit the oldest communities in the nation to find soils that have been producing for two centuries and that have continued to show increased production through all of that time. The reason is that those farmers knew about soil erosion and they sought to prevent it. Those farmers and nearly all farmers recognize that soil must be fertilized; that it cannot be planted to the same crop eternally without destroying its fertility and they know the necessity and the method for solving the problem. They have acted on that necessity and knowledge.

Notwithstanding all of these facts we are due to see in the next session of congress and probably for a considerable number of sessions thereafter a bunch of politicians who will be prating about soil conservation long after the farmers have become thoroughly sick at the stomach about the idea. It is just another one of those things upon which hungry political demagogues will leap and continue to use as a vehicle on which to ride into office.

I was born on a farm and grew up there. I know the problem inside out because the farm upon which I was born was susceptible to erosion—"washing" as my father called it—to a greater extent than is usual in farm lands. It is no particular credit to any one to boast about preventing soil erosion because it is a thing that any farmer will want to do if he wants to continue to make his farm pay him a return. It is just as much a part of farm management as it is to see that the work stock does not develop sore shoulders.

But the point of all of this as far as I am concerned is that political capital is being made out of a condition with which politicians ought not to be concerned at all. Some may accuse me of ignoring the drouth condition. I do not do so. We have had several years of bad drouth conditions. I find it difficult to associate political control over the weather, however, because the claims of politicians have yet to reach very far above their heads.

Hoover to Speak

Announcement is made at last that former President Herbert Hoover is going to take the stump in behalf of Governor Landon and the Republican ticket. Though it was long delayed, it probably has come before the country became convinced that an irreparable breach existed between Governor Landon and Mr. Hoover. Rumors were just beginning to fly and gossip tongues were just beginning to wag that Mr. Hoover would remain out of the Republican picture this year so it is extremely fortunate that he and Governor Landon at last have been brought together, as far as Republicans are concerned.

I am not informed as to the reasons for this delay. It is evident that somebody slipped because it is unnatural for politicians to deliberately decline to take advantage of strength when it is proffered them.

Clean System
Clear Skin
You must be free from constipation to have a good, clear complexion. If not eliminated, the wastes of digestion produce poisons and the skin must do more than its share in helping to get rid of them.
So for a clear, healthy skin, remember the importance of bowel regularity. At the first sign of constipation, take Black-Draught—the purely vegetable laxative. It brings such refreshing relief, and tends to leave the bowels acting regularly until some future disturbance interferes.

Brothers Were Strangers

The recent death of an aged man in a little one-room cabin near Canisteo, New York, disclosed the fact that he and his brother had lived there together as strangers—divided by a chalk line and silence pact—for the past 62 years. During all this time neither had ever crossed the line or spoken a word to the other.—Collier's Weekly.

W.N.U. SERVICE

—9—

She remounted and rode up the Divide trail. The smoke was so dense that it cut off hope of seeing the valley, and, spurred by the determination to see by riding higher, she rode on and on till she found herself at the foot of Gunlock Knob. Jane headed the pony up the mountain. The summit had never seemed so hard to reach but, panting and exhausted, the pony carried Jane to the summit, and she rode out on the table to look. The scene below was terrifying. Huge clouds of smoke billowed and spread, only to boil up anew and race on the wind. It seemed as if the whole country were in flames. Here and there tongues of fire shot from the rolling smoke.

Weary, at length, and depressed, Jane turned her pony's head to ride home. Gunlock itself might be in danger.

Even the pony took the downward trail reluctantly. Jane could not tell why until, rounding a shoulder of the Knob, she saw below her a fire sweeping across the trail she was following. Worse than that, the fire was spurting through the brush, up the mountain, in front of her. The pony balked. Thoroughly frightened, Jane turned him up the narrow trail and headed for the summit.

Even the few moments she had been away from the top had changed the scene. Overwhelmed with consternation, she began to think anew of her own safety. She urged the pony swiftly down the trail again, hoping faintly to find some hidden by-pass. Her path was blocked. The hot air of the fire below was catching at her throat; gusts of smoke burned into her eyes. She reined about to return, despairing, to the summit.

Once again the level rock afforded her temporary refuge. She dismounted. The pony was growing unmanageable. He snorted, stamped, flung his head up and down and chewed frantically at his bit. Hope deserted her. She sank to her knees and fell forward, covering her face with her arms.

For a moment her mind was a blank. She heard nothing of a frantic calling of her name, when a singed and blackened horseman spurred and lashed his pony toward her, sprang from the saddle, and caught her up in his arms.

"Jane!" he cried, as he looked into her face and shook her in his effort to restore consciousness. "Jane! Open your eyes! Speak to me! It's Bill, Jane, Bill! Can't you hear me? Speak!" Her eyes opened; she looked in a daze at him. "It's Bill, Jane!"

She threw her arms convulsively around his neck. "Oh, Bill, Bill! What can we do? Must we die, Bill, in this horror?"

"No!" he exclaimed. "We can get through. But we mustn't lose a minute, not a second. Come!"

He half carried her to an edge of the summit, where a rock crevice gave a slight footing a few feet below. Into this he lowered himself and raised his arms to Jane.

"But the horses, Bill?" she cried.

"Leave them," he called back. "They may escape. There's no footing for horses where we're going. Quick, Jane! Jump!" He caught her in his arms, steadied her, showed her how to secure herself in the precarious footing, and lowered himself to another slender ledge to brace himself, bade her spring, and caught her again in his arms.

Her heart beat so violently, he seemed to feel it as she hugged close to him. There was barely room for the two to stand. "Keep cool, Jane. We can make it, but be very, very careful of your footing, darling Jane. The fire hasn't touched this side of the mountain yet, but if you fell it would be a hundred feet."

Spurned to superhuman effort, Denison achieved the almost impossible, and by sliding, clinging with fingers, hands and arms, and by carefully using his lariat, he managed to bring Jane down unharmed to the foot of the precipitous wall that had given him the bare chance to save her life. He held out his arms to catch her for the final jump. "Bill!" she exclaimed, breathing hard and looking up in sheer amazement at the precipice down which he had brought her. "How did we ever get down there alive?"

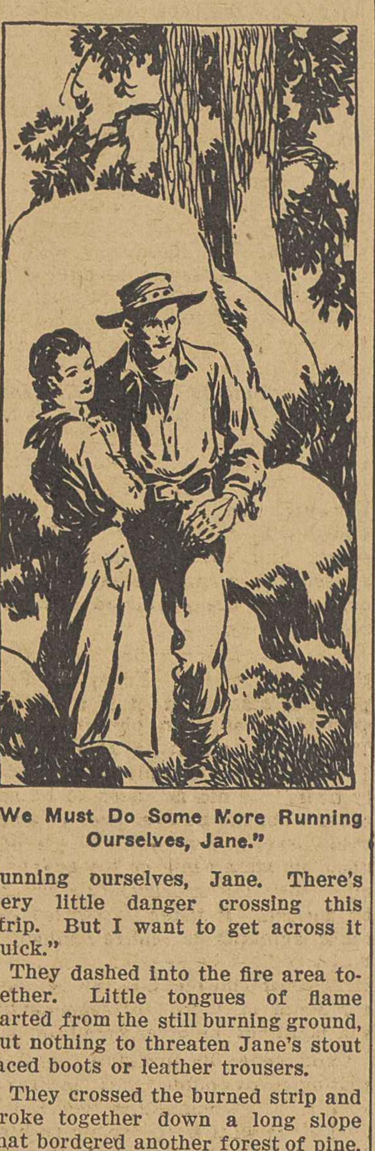
He was still very anxious—the wrinkled veins of his smoked forehead plainly mirrored that. She waited for orders. "We must run through that grove of quaking asp and try to get away from the Knob. This will all be burning in a few minutes. Are you able to run?"

"I'll bet I can run faster than you, Bill." The laughing tone of her words thrilled and cheered him. He knew better than she what still lay between them and safety. They hastened on through the light timber; then, running a broad shoulder, they saw a vast panorama of smoke, lighted in places by flames.

Denison hurried on, Jane briskly keeping pace with him. But when they neared the smoking pine, she felt dismayed.

"Bill, it's all on fire, yet—look at the little blazes. See the ground pine, and the trees are smoking and burning yet. Bill! See the deer running, too—why, every animal you can think of—"

"They'd better run," said Denison grimly. "We must do some more running ourselves, Jane. There's very little danger crossing this strip. But I want to get across it quick."



"We Must Do Some More Running Ourselves, Jane."

They dashed into the fire area together. Little tongues of flame darted from the still burning ground, but nothing to threaten Jane's stout laced boots or leather trousers.

They crossed the burned strip and broke together down a long slope that bordered another forest of pine.

Denison paused and looked anxiously at Jane. "How are you standing it, girl?"

She was panting, but game. Her high-colored cheeks, the flashing brightness of her eyes, her parted eager lips, made her a picture.

"Fine, Bill. Are we out of danger?"

They were standing together in the wind and smoke that swirled and eddied up the mountain. His hand was at her back as she leaned on his arm. Perhaps overwhelmed by the thought of what he must say, he hugged her close and, drawing her unresisting lips to his own, held them in a long kiss. "I wish we were, Jane. We're going only now into danger—I wish it weren't so, Jane."

"Oh, Bill!" said Jane. "Don't think of me—do just as if I were not here." She threw her own arms around his neck, and their lips met again in passionate appeal.

"Then come, Jane. We must dash through this pine before that fire you hear roaring catches up to us."

"Is that awful roar from a fire, Bill?"

"It is. It's our worst danger. Let's go, Jane."

To cross the wide belt of pine their course lay obliquely downhill. If anything were needed to spur them on, the thunder of the fire sweeping down the forest behind served as a dread warning that they had only minutes left to escape disaster.

Halfway down the ridge, Denison paused to rest Jane in his arms. She was panting like an antelope.

"Brave girl!" he murmured. "Not a sob—not a tear—"

"But we must hurry, Bill," she panted.

"Get a little breath for the next run."

"Can we make it, Bill, dear?"

"We've got to make it," he muttered. "I'll save you, Jane, if it's the last thing I do in life."

"Don't save me unless you save yourself—remember that!"

"Come! We must make the spring—the spring!"

The timber was thinning, the ground growing rougher. The frontiersman and cowman who had gone through every adventure that befalls a man in a life of danger and escape made little of finding safe footing from rock to rock.

He himself saw, before Jane realized it, that the end of her strength was at hand. Striving vainly to keep up she stumbled and with a little moan fell forward on the ground. Denison picked her up in his arms. She could not speak; only panted.

"Put me down, Bill! Put me down!" she sobbed when she could breathe and form the words. "You must save yourself! Is the spring far, now?"

"Not far. Clasp your arms tight around my neck," was all he said, leaping along.

"You can't save us both; save yourself. You are dearer to me than my life, Bill."

"So are you to me. Hang on," he panted. "I'll never put you down!"

After another run he paused. "Bill, I can run a little now. Let me try it. Please, dear! Let me try!"

He shook his head and struggled on. The fire was only minutes behind him, its roar deafening.

A cry roused Jane in his arms.

"The spring!"

She cried to him in happy answer.

There was not an instant to spare. He slid down the steep side of the hollow that enclosed the spring. Jane, still in his arms, he rolled into the pool and lay panting beside her. The shock of the icy water revived her. He soused her head into the water. The pool was wide enough to submerge Jane, but not himself. He rolled in the shallower edge, wet himself all over and, holding her head just clear of the surface as she sputtered and coughed, gave her orders: "Keep your face down. Don't, don't open your eyes. You're safe if you do exactly as I say."

The heart of the fire was on them. They could no longer hear or think. Flame bellied and danced. Tongues of fire licked at their hiding heads. Denison mechanically dipped water into Jane's hair. Consciousness was nearly gone. Only the effort to live and the fierce instinct to protect animated him.

With their trial of endurance almost at an end, a sudden explosion burst in the air above them. Denison, forgetting his caution, opened his eyes in the fear that a tree was falling. His eyeballs were scorched in a fraction of a second. He dashed his face back into the water; but mischief had been done.

At last the terrific outburst abated. With the hope of life reanimated, the two rose in the pool in their steaming clothing. Darkness fell from the sky above, but the forest was lighted with smoking and burning tree torches, the afterglow of its destruction.

The two who had passed through and escaped a hideous catastrophe stood clasped in each other's arms thanking God and delirous in a newfound, intimate happiness.

"Water!" exclaimed Denison. "I'm perishing, in spite of my cold bath. Aren't you thirsty?"

"Yes, but not suffering. I didn't have to carry you, you know."

Moving a few feet up to the basin of the spring itself, they pushed aside debris from the water's surface, drank from their cupped hands, and dashed water over their faces.

"Jane," said Denison when he rose again, "it was almost worth it for the way it's brought you and me together."

"It was," she whispered. "I've given you my trust."

"For all time, Jane?"

"For all time, Bill. Nothing shall ever part us, now."

CHAPTER VIII

PICKING their way haltingly and cautiously down through smoking pines, dodging burning limbs that snapped and crackled menacingly overhead or crashed to the ground about them, the refugees emerged from the forest and could see that Denison's ranch buildings had escaped the flames.

The instant they reached the ranch house, Denison ran to the well, filled the water bucket, and carried it to Jane. Sitting on the ground, bareheaded, they slaked their thirst out of the dipper together.

Denison turned to the corral. Jane, who had gone into the house, had got the fire going and was slicing bacon when she heard the clatter of hoofs outside, and angry voices.

"Where's my daughter, you damned scoundrel?" were the first words she made out. The sound of the voice that uttered them sent her running, the knife still in her hand, to the door. Amazed to dumbness, she saw her father and McCrossen in the saddle, facing Denison, who stood at the gate of his corral.

"Van Tambel," Denison spoke carefully, "you're too old a man for me to quarrel with. Just remember you're on my property and keep a civil tongue in your head."

"I don't want no truck with you, Denison," shouted Van Tambel, raging. "Where's my girl?"

McCrossen had reined about and was starting for the house. "Swing back here, McCrossen," Denison sang out sharply. "Stop right where you are. My cabin's not open to public inspection!"

"I don't give a damn for your cabin. There's Jane," the foreman shouted, "standing in the doorway."

Jane ran across the yard to the angry men. "Father!" she cried. "What in the world are you doing here? What brought you from the hospital?"

Her father's deep-set, piggy eyes flashed his fury on her. "You wench! Living with this man, are you?"

"Father!" Outraged womanhood never spoke the word more stingingly. "Is it possible you insult me so vilely before you have heard a single word?" she said. "What have I to do with your grudges and quarrels?"

Rigid and erect, storming within and striking with white-hot words at her parent's base intimation, Jane silenced the men about her by her outraged dignity.

"What shameful words have you heard—and from whom"—she barely indicated her father's companion by a lightning flash of her eye—"that put such vile thoughts into your head?" She waited for no answer. "I rode to the peak of Gunlock Knob to see how the fire was heading—it has threatened Gunlock Ranch for two days. When I tried to ride down this afternoon, the fire cut me off. I should have been burned to death where I stood on the peak if Bill Denison hadn't ridden up through another fire to save me. And now after fighting our way for hours through smoke and flame, he brings me down by the only possible way, to hear me foully insulted by my own father. This is too much!"

"Look here, Jane!" bellowed her father in retreat. "You come out here for your health, didn't you?"

"I didn't come out here to be grossly insulted," she retorted.

"Where's your pony?"

"Heavens knows where it is, or where Bill Denison's is. I hope they're not burned up."

"Well, come along home. McCrossen will lend you his horse."

"He needn't. I will walk home just as soon as I have cooked some bacon for Bill Denison."

"Come along now."

"Did you hear me? I'll come home"—each word was defiantly emphasized—"when I have made coffee and cooked bacon for Bill Denison. When you get home, be kind enough to ask Bull Page to saddle a horse for me and bring it over." With this, Jane walked swiftly back to the cabin. Van Tambel, in a muttering rage, followed by McCrossen, started home.

A slender supper was at length got together. Then Jane made Denison lie back in a chair and submit to cold compresses on his eyes.

Waiting for Bull Page proved no hardship, but when the hands of Denison's little alarm lock pointed to midnight it dawned on Jane that her request had been ignored and that her father or McCrossen had meant she should walk home or compromise herself by staying all night at Denison's.

She boiled a bit inside when she realized the situation, but prepared to walk. To this Denison would not listen. He got up two ponies—he had but one extra saddle—and, despite her objections and protests, insisted on riding home with her.

It needed no announcer in the morning to tell Jane that her father had come home. She lay, exhausted and with every bone in her body aching, beyond her usual rising time. But there was an unusual scurrying about outside her room.

Jane came to the table as her father was leaving it. "I want to see you after breakfast," was the gruff greeting he vouchsafed Jane.

She found Van Tambel seated at his desk in his bedroom, looking over bills. Jane went up to him.

"I could hardly believe my eyes when I saw you yesteday, father," she said coldly. "Did the doctor give you permission to come home?"

After a shuffling of papers came the first shot at Jane: "What did you fire McCrossen for?"

"Because he refused to obey orders," she retorted instantly.

"Whose orders?"

"My orders."

"Who owns this ranch?"

"You do. And," she added, keen-eyed, "you made me manager."

"I'll take that job off your shoulders. McCrossen is foreman here now. And I am boss. Now what about this skunk, Denison?"

"What about Mr. Denison, father?"

"He's a crook. And as long as you live, keep away from him."

"What has he ever done to you that's wrong, father?"

"He and his brother's been trying for five years to beat me out of Gunlock Spring and all that ranch land back of it.

Los Remedios Aqueduct

The Los Remedios aqueduct had its source in the town of Los Remedios, in the Federal District of Mexico, and a short distance northwest of Mexico City. It dates from 1620 and was built under the direction of Don Alonso Tello de Guzman. The aqueduct has not been in use for many years. The water was obtained from a strong spring that threw a high stream. Around this stream a tower was built and circular runways provided through which the water passed to a lower level where the aqueduct began. The passing of the water through the runways provided its momentum.

"The Man Who-O-O"

Tales and Traditions from American Political History

BY FRANK E. HAGEN AND ELMO SCOTT WATSON

KICKING TEDDY UP-HILL

IT IS certain that Theodore Roosevelt would never have become President in the manner he did if it hadn't been for Sen. Thomas C. Platt, the man who wanted to be rid of him as governor of New York.

Platt was the political boss of New York state. In order to insure the presence of a Republican at Albany, but with inner misgivings which were soon to be realized, he prevailed on the popular Rough Rider to become the gubernatorial candidate, shortly after the Spanish war.

Roosevelt was elected and showed immediately that he could not be controlled by Platt or any boss. Platt's embarrassment was only that of a politician. But the discomfort of his friends, thoroughly disturbed by Teddy's big stick gestures, became a serious problem.

The solution, finally arrived at by a devious route, appeared before the primaries of 1900. The Republican party in New York was to name a candidate for governor—perhaps Roosevelt again—in September. But the Republican party in the United States had to name a running mate for President McKinley, and the latter convention would be held in June!

Platt decided that Teddy would be the vice-presidential candidate. He would kick Roosevelt up-hill, and out of New York state.

If successful, the move meant also that on the strength of the national ticket it should be a comparatively simple matter for Platt to name and elect a more tractable governor.

Roosevelt himself realized the move had been launched to shelve him, for so he regarded the vice-presidency. Moreover, neither Mark Hanna of Ohio, a president-maker in a big way in those days, nor McKinley wanted Roosevelt on the national ticket.

But Platt persisted. He was aided by Roosevelt's growing popularity, particularly in the West, where the vice-presidency was regarded as a well-deserved promotion for the hard-hitting New York governor.

These westerners carried their Roosevelt enthusiasm to the convention with them. The boom reached proportions that Hanna could not ignore and in a conference with Platt the night before the nominations the President-maker capitulated.

Hanna issued a statement advocating Roosevelt for the vice-presidency and told the newspapermen: "Boys, you can't stop it any more than you could stop Niagara."

Soon to become President at the unfortunate death of McKinley, Roosevelt won the election. And when the gleeful Senator Platt was asked if he would attend the inauguration he replied: "Yes, I am going down to see Theodore Roosevelt take the veil."

NOTICE TO A NOMINEE

A LOT of folks today believe that when political parties are convening the favored candidates, wherever they may be, have one ear to a keyhole, a wetted finger uplifted to test direction of the political winds, and have set their radio dials the proper wave length to listen in on convention hall. Maybe they're right.

But it wasn't always like that. We had ten Presidents before the man who was destined to become the eleventh, James K. Polk of Tennessee, was informed of his candidacy by telegraph.

The dots and dashes that spelled out Polk's surprising overthrow of Martin Van Buren in the Democratic convention of 1844 were impulses over a newly-built line of telegraph between Baltimore, scene of the convention, and Washington. Polk, who was waiting in Washington, was the first man who received the news in what is today a commonplace fashion.

Van Buren, seeking to succeed himself, was easily the favorite. But he had steadily lost ground at the Baltimore meeting after being placed "on the spot" by the question of the annexation of Texas. Southern delegates began to forsake his candidacy in large numbers. His managers attempted to change the party's new two-thirds rule to a majority ukase, but were unsuccessful.

A steady drift to Polk began on the ninth ballot of the convention. Strangely enough, a letter from Jackson, Van Buren's mentor, which pleaded for harmony, helped complete the general rout in Polk's favor.

The telegraph wire served for one more purpose on this momentous occasion. Sen. Silas Wright was in Washington and had been tendered second place on the ticket with Polk. He was angry over the shelving of Van Buren, so the dots and dashes which came back over the wire carried his indignant refusal of this chance to become the vice-president of the United States.

CURIOUS DEVICES USED FOR SEEING AFTER DARKNESS

It is presumed that man originally toiled or played only during hours of sunlight. That when darkness came and the eyes could no longer see—he lay himself down to rest. Yet all the while, Nature, through volcanic and meteoric disturbances, through flashes of lightning, was trying to demonstrate to man its power to create light in the midst of darkness.

Fire was discovered, and man found he could prolong the day with the aid of firebrands, camp fires, torches.

The earliest lamps of which we have record were saucer shaped objects with a shallow projecting spout which held the wick. A hole in the center of this disc-like lamp held a small quantity of oil.

So far as is known, there was no radical development toward better lighting until 1783 A. D., when Leger of Paris devised a flat ribbon wick and burner. Not long after, Ami Argand of Paris, perfected a glass chimney which, together with his new improved type of circular wick and burner, produced illumination far superior to anything ever before seen.

Then in 1880, Auer von Welsbach, a German, developed a burner, in which the combination of a mixture of air and gas or vapor, heated to incandescence a mantle, composed of thoria and ceria.

Welsbach's mantle was, of course, crude and inefficient compared to present-day mantles. But to Welsbach, should go much of the credit for making available to us today, the pure white light which is so easily and economically provided in modern pressure mantle lamps using gasoline and kerosene for fuel.

OUR TRAFFIC LIGHT

The installation of a traffic light has been made at the intersection of the two main business streets, at the Wilson Corner.

It is at this point that the entrance to the town over the new bridge intersects Main Street and consequently the point of heaviest traffic.

For some time it has been felt that a stop light at this point was needed as a protection to both motorists and pedestrians.

Aside from the satisfaction we get from the installation of the light as a safety measure, it makes us feel good also as a sign of progress. It is an indicator of more people traveling in and around our town. And more traffic, more people, make for more business—and more business means more progress.

Montevallo is growing. Not booming, of course, but growing steadily. The highway approach now is an inducement to travelers to come here.

When we become more able and better equipped to take care of them when they get here, more of them will stay longer, and some will stay permanently.

THE BREACH SHOULD BE CLOSED

All friends of organized labor deplore the division in its ranks today and hope that some means may be found to close the breach and bring back peace and harmony between the opposing factions.

Possibly there never was a time in the whole history of the movement when a united front was more needed than it is today.

In accordance with the decision taken several weeks ago by the Executive Council the ten unions that are following John L. Lewis and comprise the Committee for Industrial Organization are now suspended from the American Federation of Labor. This suspension of those ten unions practically amounts to expulsion.

What the A. F. of L. Convention at Tampa, in November, will do in the matter is problematical, but the best friends of labor sincerely hope that a reasonable and satisfactory settlement of the dispute will be arrived at.

It would be folly for anyone to predict just what the outcome of this "cleavage" will be in the future especially as it regards American labor and industry. It would be very unfortunate — almost disastrous—if it resulted in two great and permanent organizations of unions bidding against each other for the support of the wage-earners.

The final outcome is on the knees of the gods. It may be, unless the breach is closed, that the American Federation of Labor, as we know it now, will not be able to survive after the separation of the powerful and aggressive Lewis group.

On the other hand, the C. I. O. may find it impossible to "carry on" without the support and prestige of the parent organization. Whether craft organization or industrial organization will finally be the choice of the workers remains to be seen.

The Labor Advocate believes that there is plenty of room for both organizations in the American Federation of Labor. With an inspired and intelligent leadership, and a friendly desire on the part of all concerned to do the best thing for the labor movement, there is no good reason why the breach should not be healed. What about a compromise?— Labor Advocate, Birmingham.

SELF-RELIANCE ON THE FARM

American agriculture, like American industry, goes through bad times as well as good and must face plenty of serous problems—but the average farmer is far from the weak sister that some of our professional "farm relievers" seem to think. Self-reliance still is his foremost characteristic.

Proof of that is found in the statistics showing the growth and development of agricultural selling cooperatives. These co-ops were in their infancy fifteen years ago—today they are "big business" and tomorrow they will be bigger business still. They grew rapidly during the depression. They are owned and operated by their members, who appoint excutives precisely as do stockholders of a corporation. And these cooperatives, loyally and enthusiastically backed, are fighting the farmers' battles and getting results.

Fifty years from now, when the history of agriculture in the 'twenties and 'thirties is written, it will probably be the cooperatives, not the farm relief laws, which will be given the main credit for farm achievements of the period.

Economic Highlights

As fall approaches, optimism is still the dominating note in the business reports and forecasts. Many quarters feel certain that during the next few months business will reach the highest level since 1930—and, possibly, since 1929.

Interesting "Scorecard of Fall Prospects" was recently published by Business Week. According to this authority, there are twelve major plus signs now in evidence. These include such factors as the following: Business' inventories are generally low and need replenishing; money is "easy"; much of the bonus money is still in the hands of veterans, will be spent this fall; automobile makers are now at work on new models, which will be introduced beginning in September; stock market activity is up; it is believed that utilities and railroads will soon do heavy buying; building contracts are mounting; in the field of foreign affairs, world trade expansion more than counterbalances the chaotic European situation.

The magazine finds five minus signs to set against its plus signs. First, the drought is causing poor distribution of farm income. Second, the Revenue Act of 1936 may restrict new construction. Third, the employment picture is still dark. Fourth, threats of strikes in major industries are a disturbing factor. Fifth, Presidential campaigns create a "psychological disturbance."

A survey of other business publications finds them in agreement with this, generally speaking. So far as industrial production indices are concerned, there is hardly a gloomy note. Automobile production recently fell off—but that was to be expected, as preparations are made for the new season. Steel ingot production also dropped temporarily—but the mills are well booked with orders at last report. And corporate net profits are rising in every field, a fact which is naturally reflected in better dividend payments.

There are two factors, however, outside the production field, which are highly disturbing. One is wages, which are tending upward, but very slowly, and are not keeping pace with production. The other is that worst bogey of all, unemployment. It is generally believed that the unemployed rolls are declining, but at a conservative estimate, some eight million men are still out of work.

Another interesting aspect of the business situation is covered in a late issue of the scholarly Annalist, in a table comparing consumer expenditures in the six months ended in June, 1936, with the same period in 1935. This table shows that more of the consumers' dollar is being expended for durable gools and less for perishable articles—a trend that is highly important, in that the durable goods industries took the worst lacing during depression and are the biggest element in the nation's set-up. Thus, where in the 1936 period consumers spent 4.6 per cent more for food than in the 1935 period, they spent 22.3 per cent more for cars. Where they spent 9.6 per cent more in restaurants, they spent 24.8 per cent more for lumber, building and hardware. Where they spent 9.6 per cent more on general mercahndise, they spent 19.3 per cent more on furniture and other household equipment.

Consumer expenditures for the 1936 period marked a 12.1 per cent increase over the 1935 period—totaling $17,470,000,000 as against $15,580,000,000.

Even as the opproach of fall stimulates business, it stimulates politic.

Both parties are rearing for the big drive now. The candidates are limbering up—and during September and October will really go through their paces.

First guns from the Landon camp came with his speeches on education and taxation. The Governor denounced the teachers' oath, spoke for free education. He vigorously denounced the Administration's tax and fiscal program and paid special notice to what he termed the "cock-eyed" excess profits tax enacted at the last session of Congress at White House request.

Republican strategy, according to observers, calls for only a few formal speeches by Governor Landon. He will travel about the country and make informal appearances. Many speeches will be made by Colonel Knox, a much more impressive radio speaker.

The Roosevelt campaign has not really gotten underway yet—the President apparently feels that it would be a waste of energy for him to do a great deal before October. His tour of the drought section, however, gave him a chance to be seen and heard. And in the meantime, of course, the Democratic machine is working 24 hours a day, is bending every effort to bring "doubtful" states into the Roosevelt column.

Shelby's Picturesque Personalities

By Miriam Brewer Richardson
in Montgomery Advertiser

Beautiful Shelby County, with its softly wooded hills and romantic background, is a namesake of Col. Isaac Shelby, Revolutionary soldier who served the cause of American independence heroically at the battles of Point Pleasant and hard-fought King's Mountain, and later became the first governor of Kentucky. He was reelected in 1812 and during his second administration left his gubernatorial duties to lead the Kentuckians at the battle of Thames River. It was in this fierce and gory conflict that the Indians lost their great leader Tecumseh. Shelby County was organized by an act of the Legislature passed Feb. 7, 1818, from territory taken from Montgomery, which at one time comprised most of the center of the State. Something of the valor and enterprise of its heroic namesake must have entered into the hearts and minds of Shelby Countians, for this sections has produced some of the finest citizens of the State, many of them having materially aided in the building of Alabama.

During its long political history, Shelby has been preponderantly Democratic, yet at times leaders, who fought under the banners of other parties, have had considerable influence with their Democratic constituency and have represented it in the Legislature. One of these was William M. Kidd, an ardent Whig, who served Shelby in the House of Representatives in 1842, and again in 1844. Mr. Kidd was a leader in the Tippecanoe clubs throughout the State and labored ceaselessly for the election of President William Henry Harrison, who was the beauideal of the Whig party.

James M. Nabors left a pleasant memory and an honored name in his beloved county of Shelby. He was a planter on a large scale, with an education considered liberal at that time. He represented Shelby in the House of Representatives in 1831 and 1833, and served in the Senate in 1834. He was again in the lower branch of the Legislature in 1839, and in 1847 he returned to the Senate from Shelby and Bibb. Mr. Nabors was a strong Democrat and stood so well with his party that he was selected to place in nomination the name of Dixon H. Lewis for the United States senatorship at the joint session of the two houses, which met in convention on Dec. 7, 1844, after the resignation of Senator William R. King. Dixon H. Lewis, Democrat, and Arthur F. Hopkins, Whig, were the nominees, and the vote stood 85 for Lewis and 45 for Hopkins.

Though the name of Leonard Tarrant is closely associated with Talladega, where he resided for many years, yet he was identified with Shelby in the early part of his career. He represented Shelby in the House of Representatives in 1831 and 1832. He was a Democrat at this time, but in 1836 he espoused the Whig cause and soon was in full alliance with this party. At the time of the execution of a treaty with the Creek Indians in Alabama, President Andrew Jackson appointed him agent to superintend the sale of their reservations by the heads of families, and he served in this capacity for two years. In standing between the greedy land-buyers and the ignorant Indians, his integrity and unswerving devotion to duty were fully tested, and President Jackson's confidence in him fully justified. He served as judge of the county court for Shelby and was a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

No history of Shelby would be complete without the name and honorable ercord of Samuel Wright Mardis, who was born at Fayetteville, Tenn., June 12, 1800. When still a young man he accompanied his father, Reuben Mardis, to Shelby County, and with his only education from an "old field school," he studied law anl was admitted to the bar in 1823. He soon indulged in his natural flair for politics and represented Shelby in the Legislature in 1823-1825, 1828, and 1830. He was elected as a Democrat to the Twenty-second and Twenty-third Congresses, serving from March 4, 1831, until March 4, 1835. Later he moved to Mardisville, Talladega County, in 1835 and continued the practice of law until his death at Talladega, Nov. 14, 1836. He was interred in Oak Hill cemetery and sleeps in the breast of the second Alabama County he faithfully served.

Judge George David Shortridge of Shelby was one of the handsomest men of his time, a gentleman of great urbanity of manner who possessed the most attractive social qualities. He was a native of Montgomery County, Ky., where he was born Nov. 10, 1814. He came with his father, Eli Shortridge to Tuscaloosa in 1826, and became a Supreme Court clerk two years later. He was one of the first students to matriculate at University of Alabama, but did not graduate. He read law in his father's office, was admitted to the bar in 1834, elected solicitor about the same time and then removed to Montgomery. In 1836 he represented Montgomery in the Legislature, but ill health caused him to return to his Shelby County plantation. He soon recuperated and resumed the practice of law. In 1846 the Legislature elected him to the bench of the circuit court, and he held this office until he resigned in 1855 to accept the nomination of the American or Know-Nothing party, for governor, in opposition to Governor John A. Winston. The contest was bitter and exciting, the two candidates, both of whom were excellent speakers, addressing multitudes who gathered to hear them. Judge Shortridge's party was in the minority and Governor Winston defeated him by some ten or twelve thousand majority. Later he removed to Selma and practiced law with J. R. John. In 1861 he returned to Shelby and represented it as a member of the State convention which, in January, with his assistance, passed the Ordinance of Secession. He suffered heavily during the War Between the States in property losses, but more particlarly in the loss of his three sons and his only son-in-law. He died in 1870.

Thomas Waverly Palmer was an esteemed adopted son of Shelby. He was born May 19, 1860, at Snow Hill, Wilcox County, near Furman, and attended Howard College in 1877-88 when that institution was still located at Marion. He graduated at the University of Alabama with an A.M. degree in mathematics, and was instructor in mathematics at the University from 1881 through 1882. He was associate professor of this branch of learning in 1882-1883, professor of mathematics from 1883 until 1907 and dean of the Academic Faculty from 1905 to 1907. In May of that year he was elected president of the college at Montevallo, at that time known as "The Alabama Technical Institute for Women." He was chairman of the board of education of Montevallo in 1912, member of the Alabama Textbook Commission in 1915, and from 1898 to 1907 he was secretary of the Alumni Association of the University of Alabama. During his nearly 20 year's residence of Shelby he was an ardent and tireless worker for that county's welfare and progress, particularly along educational lines.

Henry Brazeale Walthall, famous stage and screen actor, and the best interpreter of Confederate roles, is Shelby's most distinguished native son. He is the most distinguished because his face, acting and character have penetrated every nook and corner of the globe and he made the world understand and accept the character of the Confederate soldier and his place in Southern history as a real and vital thing. Mr. Walthall was born at Mallory's Station, March 16, 1878, the son of Junius Leigh and Annie Mallory Wallace Walthall. The father was a native of Virginia, who removed to Alabama, and at the outbreak of the War Between the States enlisted in the Southern Foresters at Mobile and was later promoted to a captaincy. Henry B. Walthall received his early education in his family, being toutored by his two aunts, Miss Miliene Mallory and Mrs. W. W. Wallace. He attended Howard College a year. In September, 1900, he went to New York and after being in the city only three days began working as a super member of the Murray Hill Stock Company. Later he went on the road and played with Henry Miller and Margaret Anglin for four years in "The Great Divide," and "The Faith Healer". When war was declared between the United States and Spain in 1898, he volunteered and served as a private in Company G, First Alabama Volunteers, and when peace was declared he went to England with Mr. Miller in "The Great Divide."

Returning to the United States in 1910, he entered the motion picture field with David Wark Griffith. Among his screen successes are "The Birth of a Nation," in which he played the role of the young Confederate colonel, Ibsen's "Ghosts," Edgar Allan Poe's "Raven," "The Avenging Conscience," and "The Scarlet Letter". His most recent success was with the lamented Will Rogers in "Judge Priest," when he played the part of a Confederate chaplain. Mr. Walthall's most arresting role, outside of Confederate portrayals, was that of President Francisco Maredo in "Viva Villa." His last role was in the "China Clipper." He married Mary Charleson, a motion picture actress. He died June 17, 1936, at the Pasteur Sanitarium at Monrovia, near Hollywood, California, and was the oldest actor in pictures in point of service.

Henry B. Walthall's great mission in life was the interpretation of history, particulary Confederate history. His outstanding achievement in this was the "Little Colonel," in "The Birth of a Nation". This is one of the truly great pictures of all time and it is still being shown though produced more than 20 years ago. It has reached the far windy corners of the earth and it has been said that the moon is always shining on a picture theater which is showing this remarkable film. It was a huge success financially and has made over $20,000,000. In portraying the part of the young Confederate colonel, Mr. Walthall displayed moral and physical courage of a high order and a certain wistful cultural charm. The world had become confused in its vision of the Confederate soldier by reason of war and reconstruction propaganda, and Henry Walthall clarified him and made his personality and character one of heroism and romantic beauty. Every country, State and section should not only preserve its history but see that other countries and posterity understand it. In order to do this its history must be interpreted in the terms of understanding of each succeeding generation. Mr. Walthall magnificently interpreted Southern history to at least two generations, and if the South is wise it will not permit his work to fall to the ground.

THE WORD IS "HYPOCRISY"

Under the title "What the Utilities Don't Understand," a recent Business Week Editorial said:: "It is a pity that the public utility companies in the Tennessee Valley don't quite understand what the Tennessee Valley Authority is up to. When they see TVA using its Federal subsidy to undersell them, and giving preferential rates in order to cajole their customers away, and establishing lines that practically parallel their own, what do they do but jump to the conclusion that TVA is in the power business? Yet certainly the truth ought to be plain enough. TVA is not in the power business. It is not trying to destroy the utility companies . . . . The one and only purpose of TVA is to foster navigation.

"That is what TVA told the Supreme Court . . . . If TVA builds power lines that parallel those of the utility companies and prevent the companies from refunding their bonds, it is only because TVA has a little power to sell; and the power is a mere incidental result of the building of dams to help navigation. In this great cause the utilities ought to be willing to sacrifice themselves gladly and patriotically, going broke if need be to forward the day when vast argosies of commerce shall cram every creek in the Tennessee Valley."

Under Business Week's sarcasm, there is an astonishing truth. Technically speaking, TVA's principal purpose is to develop navigation—and, as a result, it may spend as much as it likes on power dams and transmission lines and charge the cost off to navigation, national defense or what have you. The fact that navigation is a very small part of TVA activities, and power development the larger part can thus be legally camouflaged.

There is a word for this sort of thing; Hypocrisy. Just because the hypocrisy may be legal and was authorized by Congress, does not make it any prettier. Nor does it make it any easier on the tax payer who is paying the gigantic bills occasioned. So far as loss to innocent investors is concerned, it is not even considered.

Dr. H. W. James, recently head of the School of Education at Alabama College, Montevallo,, is now the new president of the New Mexico State Teachers College at Silver City. Dr. James served Alabama College for thirten years and during this time took an active part in the work of the Alabama Education Association. He is a graduate of the Kansas State Teachers College, at Emporia, Kansas, and holds the Ph.D. degree from the University of Iowa. — Alabama School Journal.

She Wondered

The housewife was showing her prospective new maid over the house. She had been very liberal with her promises of privileges, and it looked as though the two were about to come to a working agreement. Suddenly the girl said:

"By the way, do you do your own stretchin' here, ma'am?"

"I don't understand," said the other, puzzled.

"Well," explained the girl, "do you put all the food on the table at dinner and stretch for it, or do I have to shuffle it round?"

Competition

An enterprising young florist, in order to increase his trade, displayed this sign in his window:

"We give a packet of flower seed with every plant."

His competitor across the street promptly sought to meet the competition by placing in his window the following announcement:

"We give the earth with every plant."

Tipoff on Series Hard to Find, for Even Yanks Hedge

OF COURSE, it is true that certain things still could happen in St. Louis. But, taking it for granted that a divine providence will reward the deserving (and how a Memphis vestryman named Bill Terry probably wishes he had the same sublime faith), I recently have been trying to find out who will win when the Yanks and Giants swap clouts for the gold and glory.

Strangely enough — aside from gaining support for a firm belief that it is a classic example of understatement to call a million-dollar sports festival a nickel series—I have been able to obtain very little inside information. While countless millions orate upon the topic at every street corner, the gents most intimately concerned refuse to weigh in with their five pennies' worth, no matter how diligently they are pretty pleased.

Terry

So it seems that I'll have to be the sucker again and get a mangled neck out on another limb far ahead of time.

During those early months when their hearts were light and gay and they had not yet been driven into the precarious business of defending a 16½-game lead with only 27 games left to play, the Yankees did gab a bit about October. Then it was their impression that the Cards, being two-fisted citizens built along their own sturdy lines, would be the toughest opposition.

The Cubs, they gossiped wistfully, would be the easiest of the National contenders to knock over. That was because they felt the Chicago athletes lacked the power and the pitcher capable of performing such magic feats as an aroused Dizzy Dean.

As for the Giants—Well all this chattering took place in the dim July days when Bill Terry's chin was being battered by numerous fourth-place I-told-you-sos, but even then the Yanks must have had a premonition. They asked questions, compared carefully obtained notes concerning their Polo Grounds neighbors, were reluctant to be pressed into any statement.

When they did crack, though, the Gehrigs, the Dickeys, the Crosettis and the others left little to the imagination. They said Carl Hubbell was one of the game's all-time great pitchers, that the Giants had other breaking stuff hurlers who might be hard to handle in a short series, that, all in all, they could think of far more pleasant ways to spend autumn afternoons.

With all hands—as well as backs, legs and other ailing portions—ready for action the present Yanks are athletes who hit for distance. When Ruffing is pitching, you have nine men who are likely to hit home runs. Playing in such a circumscribed spot as the Polo Grounds, there is more than a chance that pull hitters would even be connecting with outside balls for such pleasing results.

That would mean even such a skilled, smart and game pitcher as Hubbell would have to toss each ball to the exact spot of nine men's weaknesses.

The Giants — even though strange things can happen in a seven game limit affair such as the October classic—are not such a big-inning club. Ott, Leiber and several others might match distances with their opponents, but Terry's real team success has come from a waiting game. The club quite plainly is one that squeezes through the smallest opening in the enemy guard, capitalizes as fully as possible upon such stinted opportunities and then settles back to hold a hard-earned lead.

This—because on paper the Polo Grounds twirlers seem likely to be far superior to their neighbors—might be enough. Yet, since there always is the possibility that Pearson, Gomez, Broaca, Hadley or one of the others might be at top form for a week along with the old reliable Ruffing, it is not the sort of straw to be clutched too determinedly.

Probably the old guess has got to be laid on the line eventually, but, until the proper moment arrives, I'll be darned if I'm going to give those amazing Giants a chance to treat me like they have been treating the National League recently. Maybe both me and the Yankees know something.

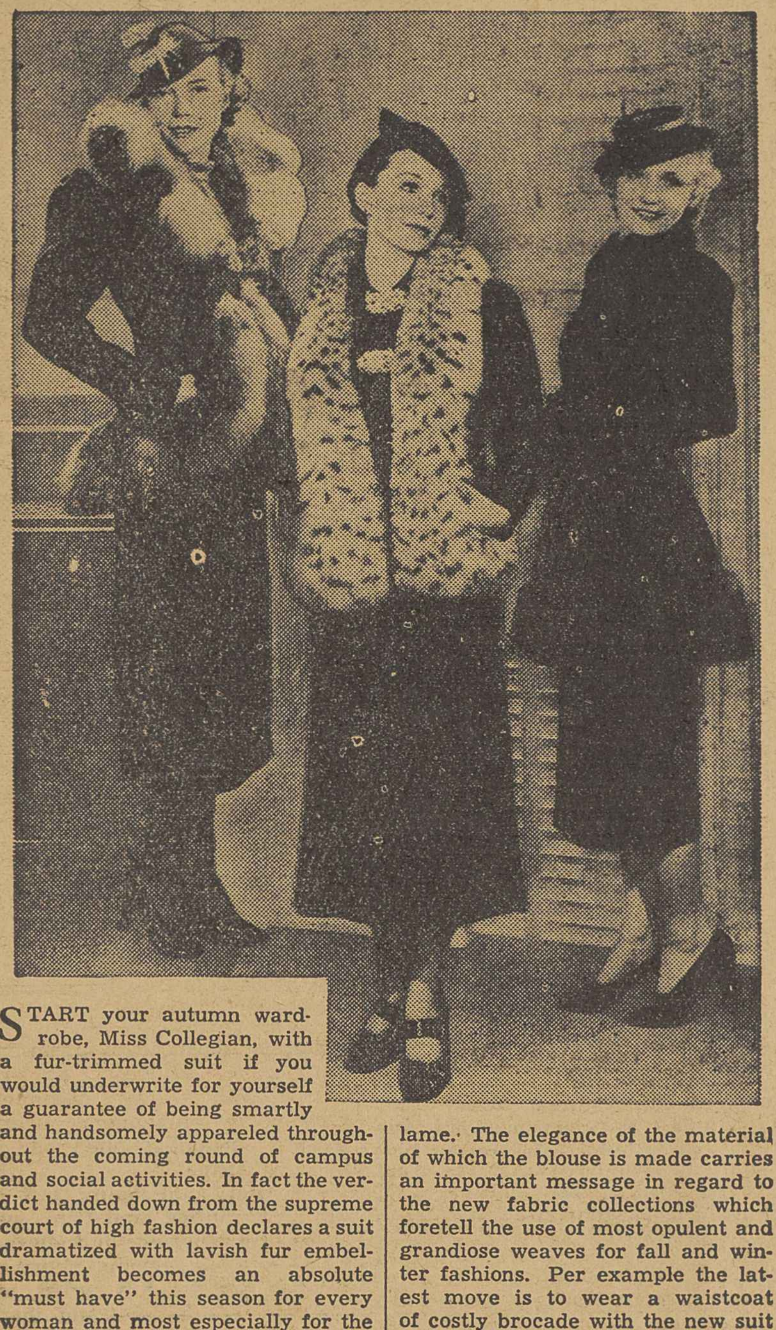
Furred Suits "Must" for College

By CHERIE NICHOLAS



START your autumn wardrobe, Miss Collegian, with a fur-trimmed suit if you would underwrite for yourself a guarantee of being smartly and handsomely appareled throughout the coming round of campus and social activities. In fact the verdict handed down from the supreme court of high fashion declares a suit dramatized with lavish fur embellishment becomes an absolute "must have" this season for every woman and most especially for the college girl who would do the correct thing in matter of practical stylish daytime dress.

Since fur-laden costume suits are so outstanding on the current style program we are picturing a trio of last-minute models that simply radiate with style-significant details. These stunning ensembles were recently shown at a fashion revue presented by the style creators of Chicago in the wholesale district—a brilliant affair that intrigued a vast and appreciative audience to a point of high enthusiasm.

In these striking fashions three distinct trends are indicated—peplum, tuxedo (with reefer suggestion) and tunic. Generally speaking, the costume suit program for autumn and winter classifies into these silhouette influences.

The daring, flaring youthful peplum effect that distinguishes the colorful trotteur suit to the left carries appeal to the slender figure. This snappy walking suit of imported wool in the new moss green is lavishly bordered with red fox, a color combination that tunes in superbly with a glowing autumn landscape. The blouse is of rich lame. The elegance of the material of which the blouse is made carries an important message in regard to the new fabric collections which foretell the use of most opulent and grandiose weaves for fall and winter fashions. Per example the latest move is to wear a waistcoat of costly brocade with the new suit as a happy diversion from the regulation blouse. As to evening velvets and satins and such they are superbly beautiful and "classy."

A tuscan wine costume of nubby wool is centered in the group. Here we have a jacket with fitted back and a spectacular lynx tuxedo front that dramatizes the picture. The very new and popular fur reefer fronts such as stylize both jackets and long coats are quite similar to the tuxedo treatment. The dress with the "tuxedo" jacket is of matching material. It interprets a new neckline and has a double pearl ornament fastening down the front. Speaking of leading colors the wine shades repeat their triumph with dark rich greens (spruce green's the new theme) contesting for first honor.

The costume to the right is of spruce green wool trimmed in mink-dyed kolinsky. Here we have the more-than-ever popular tunic lines. The tunic suit is a leader among leaders this season. The deep fur bordering is typical of the smartest fur treatments for fall. The matching muff and self-fur collar add a final touch of chic.

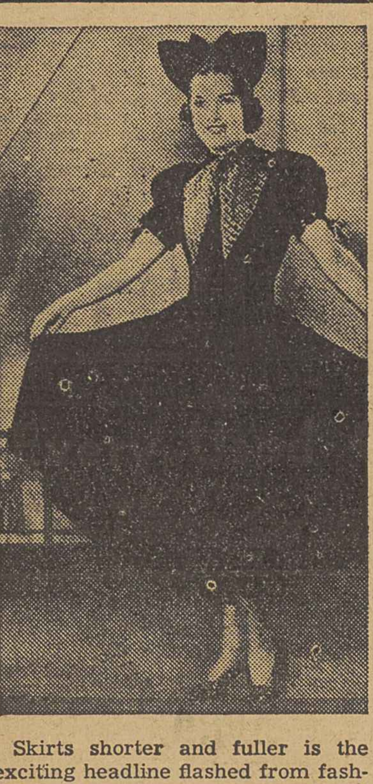
SHORT, FULL SKIRT

By CHERIE NICHOLAS



Skirts shorter and fuller is the exciting headline flashed from fashion's realm for fall and winter. Another significant style message is that the new modes reflect a strong British trend influenced by the forthcoming coronation of King Edward VIII. All this as a prologue to the story of the dress here shown made of black spotproof transparent velvet with full circular Victorian skirt and a basque blouse trimmed in royal blue chiffon with metal coin dots — inspired by fashions popular in the days of Queen Victoria. We learn furthermore from the series of fashion revues presented recently by the Style Creators of Chicago in the wholesale outlet that the coronation theme reflects in street outfits as well as in the richly colorful and jeweled evening costumes, also that the red being used is strictly a British wine color and that a typical British tunic and cap influence is evidenced in new stylings.

DECORATIONS FOR HATS FOR AUTUMN

Judging by the forecasts of autumn millinery we are getting back to the days when a hat which wasn't trimmed wasn't considered as worthy of attention.

Autumn hats have all sorts of novel decoration, usually in a shade which contrasts so that there is no chance of overlooking the elaboration of detail. Bonnet-like shapes that look suspiciously like those great-grandmothers once wore are trimmed with pompons and perky ostrich tips. Tassels, silk cords and even spangle arrangements in several different shades trim more sophisticated models.

The alliance of different tones is as significant as the trend toward trimming. Novel fancies of ribbon in two shades of green appear on black felt models and those of very dark red shades. A soft raspberry tone is effective as a contrast for grayish blue.

Tunics Are Now Designed for All Types of Women

The vogue of tunics has reached the state where there are tunics designed for fat women, tunics for thin women, tunics for young and tunics for old. Woe unto the follower of fashion who happens to choose the wrong one.

Those flaring, knee length tunics which start from slender waistlines and shoot out in all directions are intended for the young and willowy creatures. The more they flare and the puffier the sleeves of the accompanying blouse the younger they are. Stylish stouts are permitted to adopt the tunic theme providing they select the straight line version.

Bouffant Effects

At recent Rue de la Paix shows, the silhouette varied from the strictly tailored pencil lines to bouffant effects, more effective perhaps in the full skirts because of the transparent laces which retained the willowy grace of the slim figures as heavier materials could not do.

Accidents Kill More Young Than Three Diseases

Auto Crashes Lead in List of Fatalities

Washington. — More than twice as many children under 15 years are killed by accidents as by three common communicable diseases, measles, scarlet fever and diphtheria.

This fact emerges in a study of fatal childhood accidents which has been undertaken by the U. S. Public Health Service here. First section of the study relating to automobile accidents, has just been reported by William M. Gafafer, senior statistician of the federal health service.

For children under one year of age mechanical suffocation leads the list of fatal accidents. At one and two years burns caused most fatal accidents. Automobile accidents and burns lead at three years.

The Dangerous Age.

At four years and from then up to fifteen years, automobile accidents rank first as cause of accidental deaths and also outnumber deaths from the three diseases, measles, scarlet fever and diphtheria. The study was limited to the year 1930, the most recent year for which accurate population enumerations exist.

Mr. Gafafer divided the country into three geographic regions, Northeastern, North Central, Southeastern and Western, and reviewed the fatality figures region by region.

The Northeastern region had most childhood automobile deaths per hundred thousand children. Next greatest number was found in the Western region. Then followed the North Central and finally the Southeastern with fewest deaths per hundred thousand children.

"Blanks" in Mind Occur Several Times a Minute

Chicago.—Your mind "goes blank" several times every minute. During these blank periods you involuntarily stop work for a couple of seconds. If you are tired, the stops occur oftener—maybe eight or ten times each minute—and they may last twice as long.

This automatic putting on of brakes by the brain was discovered in experiments conducted at the psychology laboratory of the University of Chicago here, under the direction of Prof. Arthur G. Bills.

Mind Stops Work.

The "blocks," as Professor Bills calls these blank periods, are not complete, he explains. The individual does not lose track of what is going on, but he must mentally stop work on the task at hand.

Blocks partly account for the "er-r-r" and "Ah" which public speakers put between words. These blanks are particularly conspicuous when a person is doing rapid calculating. Every so often, he is unable to proceed and stalls. Fatigue increases both the frequency and the duration of the blocks, causing bunching of responses or spurts of work.

How Stutterers React.

Stutterers block about twice as often as normal persons and their blocks last longer, it was found.

"It is safe to assume that there is a common neurological basis between blocking and stuttering," Professor Bills concluded.

Mental blocks are enforced resting periods, he explained. They may account for the fact that continuous mental work does not impair mental efficiency to nearly the same extent that muscular work impairs muscular efficiency.

First "Quake" Recorder Is Placed in Museum

Philadelphia. — The first earthquake recorder in the United States, placed in service at Lick observatory at the University of California in 1886, will soon go on display at the museum of the Franklin institute here.

The Lick observatory instrument was one of the few in California at the time of the disastrous 'quake in San Francisco on April 18, 1906. The observatory is only 45 miles away from San Francisco. The original record of this severe and damaging shock is still preserved and shows that while the vibrations threw the recording mechanism off the tracing paper, the apparatus functioned unharmed.

Electric Waves in Human Brain Are Studied by Science

Currents Vary During Sleep or Wakefulness

IS LIFE electrical?

Through the ages man has tried to discover or to explain that mysterious something which is life—the force that animates a mass of blood, bones and flesh. At one time, when scientists were rapidly learning one fact after another about the composition, structure and function of the human body, optimistic persons were sure that these scientists would finally unravel the wonder of wonders—life, itself.

The idea that scientists might some day use this knowledge to build a robot and then find a way to breathe life into him will apparently never be realized.

Life Is Mystery.

"The miracle of life itself — the fact that to certain material processes consciousness is added — can never be explained," Prof. Hans Berger of the University of Jena, Germany, now declares in a report to Research and Progress.

Professor Berger is the man who started the wave of experiments on what are popularly known as "brain waves." These are the tracings on paper of the electric currents which arise in the brain.

All activities of life are accompanied by electrical impulses, the current thus produced being called bioelectric. The English scientist, Caton, was the first who showed that electric currents arise in the brains of the higher animals, dogs and apes.

Fifty years later, in 1924, Professor Berger showed the existence of these currents in man and devised a method of leading these currents off from the brain so that they can be amplified and charted or recorded, appearing as wavy lines on paper.

Brain Always Active.

Recent study has shown that these waves vary during sleep, consciousness, mental activity, under the influence of anesthetics or sedative drugs, and in certain diseases. Though the waves are different under differing conditions, they are always present, showing that the human brain like the human heart is continually active.

Study of the currents from the brain will, it is hoped, give valuable information about various mental disorders, much as similar studies of the currents from the heart tell certain important things about the condition of that organ. But apparently they will not shed much light on the question of what makes life.

No answer can be given, Professor Berger says, to the question of whether the electric tension that is seen in the main vibrations of the "brain waves" merely accompanies the vital processes or whether it does just the work necessary to produce consciousness.

Automaton Chemist Analyzes Solutions

Vienna.—A chemical "robot" into which one pours an electrolytic solution to be analyzed and then receives a printed answer in a few minutes has been demonstrated before the faculty and chemical students at the university here by Dr. Hans Horn, former Viennese chemist now living in Germany at Cologne-Bayenthal.

Dr. Hohn's chemical analyzer is known as the Polarograph and operates by using the known chemical fact that the electric potential or voltage decreases as a solution is being disassociated during electrolysis.

What really pops out of the small black box, after an unknown electrolyte has been poured in, is the graph showing how electrical potential across the solution varies with time. From such potential curves (Polarograms) the trained chemical operator can quickly calculate the qualitative and quantitative analysis of the investigated material.

Tasteless Quinine Is Developed by Swiss

Washington. — That bitter shudder-creating taste of quinine is claimed not to be present in a new quinine compound for which a United States patent has just been granted here to Max Hoffer, of Basle, Switzerland.

The inventor says that it is not only tasteless, but also that it has no after taste.

The man-made quinine substitute is an entirely new chemical, made by combining quinine with a naphthalene compound. Naphthalene itself is familiar as the common moth balls or moth flakes.

STAR DUST

★★★By VIRGINIA VALE★★★

HENRY FONDA'S marriage to Frances Seymour Brokaw will increase the little circle of smart society women who, married to motion picture actors, reside in Hollywood. Richard Barthelmess, Gary Cooper and Fred Astaire all married into the Social Register.

Incidentally, Mrs. Brokaw's life story is rather like that of a movie. Born in a small town in Massachusetts, she was the poor cousin of the wealthy Rogers family. Very pretty, very charming, she had everything but money.

She met George T. Brokaw, who had both wealth and social position, fell in love with him, married him, in 1931. Mr. Brokaw died nearly two years ago, leaving his widow and their small daughter well provided for. She never forgot what it meant not to have plenty of money. She has done notable things in charity work. Henry Fonda, whom she met this summer in Europe, is a fortunate young man.

Bette Davis

Bette Davis may seem to be a temperamental star when it comes to battling over stories and salary, but away from the studio she is most decidedly just another human being.

Not long ago she and her husband were traveling through the Canadian Rockies, on the first part of that vacation trip she's taking. She did rather startle the other guests at the hotel at Lake Louise by wearing a very low-cut evening gown—but she startled them still more by taking the bus to Banff the next day, instead of being exclusive and going in a private car.

Here's a new way to break into the movies. Marjorie Gage, a young society girl, likes to fly. She entered her own plane for the Ruth Chatterton Flying Cup race—and first thing she knew, had been engaged for a picture, "The Flying Hostess".

Simone Simon does so well in "Girls' Dormitory" that she is being pushed right ahead. An American girl who, just for fun, acted in a French film made in Salzburg summer before last, declared when she came back that Simone was the cutest thing she ever saw.

"Her face and her figure are both cute," she announced. "And her mind's cute too." Take that as a compliment or the reverse just as you please. Anyway, Simone will be seen next in "White Hunter," with Warner Baxter.

A short story which has attracted much attention, "Beyond the Sound of a Machine Gun," has been purchased by a leading studio, and in it will appear George Raft, Cary Grant, Randolph Scott and Fred MacMurray.

We're to have still more Dickens on the screen. "Pickwick Papers" will be the next Dickens picture. Paramount intended to make it with W. C. Fields, but that plan has been abandoned, and Metro has taken it on.

Jean Muir

Jean Muir decided recently that she'd like her hair better if it were brown, instead of blonde. Also, she cut off her bangs.

Then she made some tests for Warner Brothers. They objected to the changes. And as a result of a lot of argument, the hair stayed brown but the bangs returned. Some movie fans are betting that eventually Jean will return to blonde hair. They point out that it was as a petite blonde that Jean first attracted attention and that its appeal is one of her big assets.

The cycle of war pictures is well under way. Twentieth Century-Fox launched it with "The Road to Glory," and continues it with the forthcoming "King of the Kyber Rifles" and "The Splinter Fleet."

It Doesn't Pay—

Doing Favors for Others With Thought of Return Disappoints

"THE older I grow the more I am appalled by the ingratitude, the complete lack of a sense of obligation on the part of our fellow human beings.

With me the people who come first are always those to whom I have any obligation whatsoever. Anything that is done for me is constantly on my mind and I am on the lookout to repay. But look about you and you will observe the most inconceivable indifference on the part of most otherwise decent people to what they owe to others. Indeed the code seems to be to cultivate those from whom some advantage may be forthcoming and neglect those to whom we are indebted. The answer to it all is to put yourself out for nobody; it doesn't pay"

The above lament was received by an international writer of note, who answers as follows:

It must have been an unusually unfortunate chain of experiences that gave this woman such an unhappy slant on human nature. But certain it is that favors done with thought of return are bound to bring disappointment. In this busy, hectic world, people are likely to be rather casual about give and take. That does not necessarily mean that they are unappreciative. They are just not punctilious. Frequently a kindness makes its mark but time passes before occasion presents itself to show appreciation, or to reciprocate. After all, if we think enough of people to put ourselves out for them, as our reader says, there must be a certain amount of faith.

If we do things for others only because we want to do them and find a certain satisfaction in it, we have nothing to lose. But the expected reward is something like the watched pot—very disappointing. In fact, it doesn't pay.

"To Mary--With Love" Strikes Deep And Sure At Love Today

A story that strikes deep and sure at love today, comes Thursday and Friday to the Strand Theatre, in the Twentieth Century-Fox picturization of Richard Sherman's sensationally successful novel of modern romance, "To Mary—With Love."

Warner Baxter and Myrna Loy, together for the third time cinematically, are co-starred and their performances opposite each other are said to surpass the heights they reached in "Broadway Bill" and "Penthouse."

Ian Hunter, as Myrna's childhood sweetheart who still loves her and Claire Trevor, as the good-time girl who almost disrupts the romance, are featured in the cast which also includes Jean Dixon.

A love-letter romance, "To Mary—With Love," opens with the marriage of Baxter and Miss Loy. Best man is Ian Hunter who hides his regret with a grin, at seeing Myrna's happiness in Baxter's arms.

Making love lightly, yet loving deeply, they move through their honeymoon and then return to New York where Baxter plunges into the stock market, intent on accumulating a fortune.

So occupied is he that Myrna takes a summer trip to Maine alone. Returning home, earlier than expected, she finds that Baxter hasn't been so lonesome as supposed but, instead, has been entertaining Claire Trevor.

This is the first flaw in their happiness and, although they patch it up, the scars still linger. Baxter returns to his manipulations in finance and, as the market rises, becomes wealthy.

Money doesn't bring happiness to the pair, however, for Myrna finds too much time on her hands and becomes intimate with a group of parasites and questionable friends.

Just as it appears that their marriage must break up, the market crashes and Myrna finds that her husband needs her more than ever.

From their penthouse they go to live in a shabby surburban bungalow. Baxter is unable to comprehend what has happened and Myrna is unable to convince him that he should get a job—any kind of a job.

Hiding their hurts and holding back their tears, Myrna and Baxter rise gallantaly and splendidly from their mifsroe ntdnufadni their misfortune and find a new and greater love to reward them.

Darryl F. Zanuck chieftain of the Twentieth Century-Fox studios, selected John Cromwell to direct "To Mary—With Love," and Kenneth Macgowan associate producer.

War To Be Waged On Organized Crime

Moving against organized crime, Alabama will require every "pistol toter" in the State to obtain a license effective October 1.

The license may be obtained from the probate judge, chief of police or sheriff and will cost 50 cents. It calls for the owner's full name, address, occupations, color, place of birth and the caliber, make, model and manufacturer's number of the pistol.

The license is not required for revolvers and automatics kept at a residence or place of business—only for the privilege of carrying the gun on your person or in your car.

No person who has been convicted of a crime of violence in Alabama or elsewhere shall be given a license, and these persons are specifically forbidden from owning a pistol.

The law, sponsored by Senator James Simpson, of Birmingham, is patterned after the uniform firearms act now in effect in many states.

Persons purchasing pistols after Oct. 1 must give 48-hour written notice to the dealer, who in turn must relay the notice within six hours to the chief of police or sheriff. After the sale is consummated, a copy of the purchase certificate must be sent to the secretary of state.

All dealers in pistols must obtain a special license Oct. 1, to cost 50 cents, in addition to the present license required under the general revenue act.

All receipts go into the state treasury.

Violators of the law may be fined not more than $500 and sentenced to one year in prison.

Senator John Rogers Dies At Gainesville

Gainesville, Ala., Sept. 22.—John Aduston Rogers, leader in State politics for more than 40 years, died of angina pectoris today in his home here.

He was elected to the present State Senate from Sumter and Pickens Counties, but failing health prevented his attendance at sessions of that body, to which he was first named in 1894

Born on his maternal grandfather's plantation in Sumter County in 1861, Mr. Rogers was educated in private schools and at the University of Alabama, being graduated from the latter in 1881.

For several years he was a merchant here, but in 1893 he sold his business to engage in farming and livestock raising.

A lifelong Democrat, he was elected to the State Senate in 1894, and to the House of Representatives in 1915.

During the Brandon Administration, he was chairman of the State Highway Commission, and had served as a member of the board of trustees of both the University of Alabama and Alabama Polytechnic Institute at Auburn.

His political career was punctuated with many bitter verbal fights. That even his political foes never accused him of "straddling" any issue was one of his proudest assertions.

Despite many stands not popular with many voters, he was never defeated for office in his home county of Sumter, and was usually unopposed when he announced his candidacy.

Mr. Rogers married Miss Lula Bradshaw, also of Gainesville, here January 25, 1888. Mrs. Rogers and their five children, John Aduston, Jr., State Senator, C. M. A. Rogers of Mobile, Miss Jane Bradshaw, Miss Elizabeth Roycroft and Albert Gallatin Barnes Rogers survive him.

The funeral will be held here at 10 a.m. Wednesday. Many of the State's highest officials are expected to attend.

Dothan, Ala., Sept. 22.—Injured when his automobile and another crashed at a street intersection, L. D. Smith's car and one driven by Miss Wilma Windham, County health nurse met at a crossing, and his overturned. No charge has been placed so far.

MONROE CHEST CLINIC

Monroeville, Ala., Sept. 22.—Forty persons were examined at the two-day chest clinic conducted here by the Monroe County Health Department. Only those persons whose cases were brought to the department by physicians in charge were examined. Reports will be rendered at an early date to the doctors.

Simone Simon In Brilliant Debut Twentieth Century Fox Triumph!

One of the most important cinema events in years will take place Saturday at the Strand Theatre when an exciting personality, Simone Simon (pronounced See-MOAN See-MOAN), makes her debut in the Twentieth Century-Fox production, "Girls' Dormitory".

Warm, young, refreshing and vital, with distinct magnetic appeal and rare, strange beauty, Miss Simon is being acclaimed the most important discovery in recent screen history. Herbert Marshall and Ruth Chatterton are starred with her, in an exceptional cast that features Constance Collier, J. Edward Bromberg, Dixie Dunbar, John Qualen and Shirley Deane.

The film opens in an exclusive boarding school. Herbert Marshall is the director of the school, Ruth Chatterton, Constance Collier, J. Edward Bromberg, are important members of the faculty.

The students are all young girls in their late 'teens, and all are daughters of wealthy families, sent to the school to complete their education.

Beyond walls barred to men, the girls are taught and schooled in everything, except what the rules forbid—life and love.

It is but a short time before graduation. Simone, a remarkably beautiful girl, is about to leave the surroundings she has known for years—and the man she has youthfully loved almost as long, Herbert Marshall.

On a dare, Simone asks Marshall to dance with her at a school social event. He refuses the girl, and ashamed at the rebuff, she runs off, to return just as a searching party is setting out to look for her.

Ruth Chatterton is also in love with Marshall, but she conceals her affection behind an appearance of friendly cooperation.

One of the teachers discovers a romantic love note, evidently written by one of the girls. She brings the note to Marshall demanding that the girls be reprimanded at once. Behind the words of the letter, Marshall sees that the girl was evidently creating a fictitous character in her mind.

Simone is discovered to be the author of the note. Hailed before the faculty, she admits writing it, but denies that the contents of the note are true.

Ruth Chatterton takes her aside, and Simone reveals that she wrote the note, in a girlish mood, to Marshall, and that she is in love with the teacher.

When Marshall is informed of Simone's statement, he realizes that he, too, loves the young girl. In their romance, they find temporary happiness, but Simone overhears a conversation that makes her believe Marshall is really in love with Miss Chatterton.

From this foundation, the film moves swiftly, strongly, to its climax, replete with drama and suspense.

"Girls' Dormitory" was especially chosen for Simone's first Hollywood picture. Irving Cummings directed the production, with Raymond Griffith associate producer.

Rural Lines Ahead Of Previous Schedule

Birmingham, Sept. 21.—Officials of Alabama Power Company stated today that since it began a program for a year of rural line construction on September 4, 1935, it had built 882 miles of lines and had under construction 232 miles. This runs ahead of the planned schedule of 849 miles within that period.

A twelve months summary, on September 16, of the company's rural line construction program shows that the company has completed the construction of 220 rural lines, a total of 882 miles to serve 4,280 rural customers in 52 counties of the State. In the construction of those lines, labor of the local communities has been employed to dig holes, clear the rights-of-way, and for such other labor as does not require skilled workmen. Local electricians in the communities have found employment in wiring the homes and dealers in the towns near those communities have sold the materials for wiring, fixtures and appliances.

The materials for constructing the lines have been purchased from dealers and manufacturers of the State, increasing business for the creosote plants and manufacturers of line materials.

At the present time the company has under construction 41 additional rural lines with a total of 232 miles to serve 963 rural customers. Thus, the company is continuing its policy and effort to expand its electric system to serve additional customers throughout the entire area served by the company.

8,000 Walker Co. Pupils Out Of School

Jasper, Ala., Sept. 22.—Union sources said more than 8,000 of Walker County's 17,000 school children remained away from classrooms today as the "strike" started last week to protest "discrimination against union members" gained force.

G. C. Banks, secretary of the Central Labor Union here, said the walkout came in support of a demand that school authorities allow teachers to join the American Federation of Classroom Teachers, an American Federation of Labor affiliate.

Banks said 150 of the county's 375 teachers were members of the union, and scores of others "want to join but are afraid of their jobs."

Walker County's principal industry, coal mining, is strongly unionized, and children of union members have been kept from classes.

County Superintendent A. S. Scott has declined to "take any position". He said "teachers in our schools are free to join or not, as they see fit."

Union leaders claimed that three instructors were discharged because of union activity. Scott denied the charge.

Schools at Coal Valley, Parrish, Bankhead, Sipsey, Nauvoo, Empire and Sumiton were either closed or operating wits sharply reduced student bodies.

Both school officials and union spokesmen agreed that no salary disagreements were involved in the walkout.

Members of unions affiliated with the Central Labor Union here have been called into a mass meeting Friday, at the same hour the County Board of Education is scheduled to meet.

State Superintendent of Education J. A. Keller has been here conferring with county officials, and State Labor Commissioner Robert R. Moore sent Conciliator M. C. Hughes here in an effort to work out an agreement.

Most of the schools most sharply affected are in coal mining areas.

Jasper's city schools, operated separately, are not affected by the county disagreement.

Great Britain Buys Ford Boats

A fleet of 45-foot high-speed picket boats, each powered with four Ford V-8 engines adapted for marine use, to patrol the coast of Great Britain has been ordered by the British Admiralty from Vosper and Company, Limited, of Portsmouth, England.

On a trial run of 260 nautical miles fr om Portsmouth to Plymouth and return, the first of these craft to be completed averaged 21 knots, running through heavy seas and in a stiff wind.

The engines, as adapted for marine use by Vosper, develop 75 brake horsepower each and are set side by side. They give the boat a maximum speed of 25 knots. The macinery occupies only one-third the space required for machinery in 45-foot steam-driven picket boats now used, and the service speed is approximately three times as great. The boats are fitted for mounting a machine gun forward, with depth bomb dropping gear amidships and mine-sweeping gear aft. Each is capable of carrying more than 100 men in an emergency. They have full fire-fighting equipment and for watertight compartments.

The same company is also delivering seventeen 25-foot flotilla type fast launches, each equipped with a single Vosper-adapted Fard V-8 engine, giving a cruising speed of 18 and a maximum speed of 23 knots. It is expected these boats will be standardized for use in connection with the latest classes of cruisers, destroyers and sloops throughout the British Navy.

"Mother, isn't it nearly time for lunch?" asked little John.

"No, lunch will not be ready for nearly an hour," returned the mother.

"I guess my stomach must be fast," ventured the six-year-old.—Indianapolis News.

Dress Colors Should Match Hue Of Eyes

MYRNA LOY EXPLAINS WHY SHE PREFERS TO WEAR GREEN DRESS

"I think the color of a girl's eyes should be the predominating shade in her dress," states Myrna Loy in response to a query as to why she almost always appeared in green off screen.

Myrna, co-starred with Warner Baxter in "To Mary—With Love," Twentieth Century-Fox picture Thursday and Friday at the Strand freely admits a veritable passion for green.

"When I was sixteen," she continued, "I remember getting a dress that completely changed my life. The combination of the emerald-colored gown and my green eyes changed me from just another girl into someone with a personality.

"Ever since then I've stuck pretty closely to that color, although I change off sometimes to a black."

Miss Loy doesn't insist that her picture clothes be made in her favorite color. Good sense guides her there.

"I generally let the wardrobe department and cameraman decide what color costume I'm to wear. It is their business to know the pecularities of the camera. It is mine to decide what I am to wear in private.

"However, I don't think any girl can make a mistake in choosing her clothes if she selected dresses to match her eyes, whether they be green, blue brown or hazel."

In "To Mary—With Love", Myrna is co-starred with Warner Baxter. Ian Hunter, Claire Trevor and Jean Dixon are also featured in the production, which was directed by John Cromwell from Richard Sherman's best selling novel of the same title.

Federal Emergency Funds For Alabama

From the Emergency Relief Appropriattion Act of 1935 the allocations by the President to Alabama were $65,820,000, of which $49,803,000 has been expended on the basis of checks issued as of August 31, 1936, according to figures compiled by Judge John D. Petree, State Director of the National Emergency Council for Alabama.

Of these expenditures, $4,696,000 went for roads and grade crossing eliminations; $9,843,000 for Emergency Conservation Work; $10,236,000 to the Federal Emergency Relief Administration; $2,588,000 to the P.W.A. for various public improvements; $4,128,000 to the Resettlement Administration; $15,225,000 to W. P. A.

In addition to the above expenditures and appropriations, $7,512,000 was allocated by the President to Alabama from funds available under the Emergency Relief Appropriations Act of 1936, $4,975,000 of this amount has been obligated and $3,476,000 expended.

These Federal funds together with funds supplied by the State, the counties and the municipalities have provided jobs directly for almost 50,000 people in Alabama and stimulated greatly activities in industry furnishing materials of various kinds to the Federal agencies.

REGISTRY IN CHANCERY

VOLUME 4, NUMBER 25 MONTEVALLO, ALABAMA, THURSDAY, OCTOBER 1, 1936 SUBSCRIPTION $1.00 A YEAR

Opposes Changing Name Of Annual

PROTEST IS REGISTERED BY ALABAMA COLLEGE ALUMNAE ASSOCIATION

Unexpected opposition to renaming the campus year book came Thursday from the Alumnae Association, protesting against a move in this direction begun last May by the Publications Board. The Alumnae suggested that the matter be submitted to a vote of both students and Alumnae.

The contest for names for the year book was reopened today and will continue through Tuesday, October 6. Dinkey Sankey, editor of the '36-'37 annual, expressed the opinion that the question of a new name for the Technala, official name since Alabama College was a technical institution, will remain unsettled until after the alumnae meet here at Homecoming Oct. 10.

The protesting letter signed by Alumnae Association Secretary, Martha Allen, stated that "at a call meeting of the association a resolution was passed requesting that the matter ge submitted to the student body here and the Alumnae Association at its regular fall meeting before any definite action be taken."

Although the constitution of the Publication Board gives it the authority to make any changes or regulations relating to college publications deemed wise or necessary, the Alumnae Association believes this move is not entirely democratic.

Name Contest Reopened

Until the matter is officially settled, Dinkey Sankey announces that the name contest will be conducted as planned.

Rules governing the name contest last year hold good for the reopening of the contest, according to an announcement of the yearbook's editor. Both students and faculty members may submit as many names as desired, each to be typed on a separate sheet of paper. Names submitted must be symbolic and beautiful in sound. They are to be put into a box placed in Reynolds Hall for this purpose.

A prize of ten dollars will be awarded to the person suggesting the winning name. Judges will be chosen by the Publications Board. Their decision will be final.—The Alabamian.

Miscellaneous Shower Given Mrs. Knowles

Mrs. C. R. Knowles and Mrs. Floyd Knowles were joint hostess at a miscellaneous shower in honor of Mrs. Arthur Knowles at their home on Wednesday, Sept. 23. The home was beautifully decorated with dahlias and other garden flowers in the autumn colors. A number of games and contests were enjoyed. Mrs. Milton Bridges and Mrs. Harvey Nabors won the contests prizes which they presented to the honoree.

Misses Mattie Knowles and Jeanette Samples presented the gifts to Mrs. Knowles in a beautifully decorated basket. A delightful salad, ice tea and cookies were served to the followings guests:

Mesdames Fred Johnson, John Samples, Sam Knowles, Hubbard Underwood, R. L. Pate, Hobart Wyatt, J. Earl Swingard, H. D. Wooten, Max Allen, T. W. Ingram, Georgia Lee Greene, B. R. Alexander. Harvey Nabors, R. N. Cunningham, Mattie Eddings, Velma Cunningham, W. R. Alexander, W. H. Alexander, R. G. Lockridge, L. E. Graves, C. D. Whatley, Howard Alexander, Exie Bridges, Milton Bridges, J. A. Killingsworth, Lawson Ingram, Noel Toff, J. D. Holcombe and Misses Mae Ingram, Lois Alexander, Mattie Knowles, and Jeanette Sample.

Flip Of Coin Decides Election Tie

Clanton, Ala., Sept. 25.—A flip of a 50-cent piece decided the outcome of a tie in Clanton's municipal election of last Monday when Tom Kemp and Wiley M. Bean, candidates for member of the city council, each received 297 votes.

The coin was flipped by Frank Callen, president of the Peoples Savings Bank, Thursday morning in the presence of a crowd of spectators including Mayor C. Fenn Jones, who was reelected for the the next fours years.

The coin fell "tails up" and gave the place to Tom Kemp, prominent merchant of this city, and who will be the only new members of the city council. All former members were relected.

The stock of dry goods and store fixtures of E. Baer is being moved to Centreville this week. Mr. Baer will operate his business there, while his family will continue to live in Montevallo.

New Post Office

Mr. Ricardo F. Wallace, construction engineer, quoting from his progress report of September 25, says the work of building the Montevallo postoffice was 23.5 per cent complete on that date.

Progress, he said was above normal during the past thirty days, advancing at a more rapid rate than during the first days of work on the job.

Preliminary details of installation of the steam heating plant and plumbing were begun August 19th, by D. W. Benson, sub contractor for that part of work.

Electrical work is in charge of T. D. Little, sub contractor, of Montgomery. This work was started September 15.

Mr. Wallace predicts that the work will continue in good time, making a fine showing in the next few weeks. However, he indicated that progress would, apparently, slow down when it comes to the interior finish and trimmings. This is particular work, and requires much care and time.

The interior marble trim will be of Alabama marble, while the white marble, which is used for the exterior trim is from Georgia.

Men's Bible Class

The regular meeting of the Men's Bible Class, at the Strand Theatre, will be resumed next Sunday morning at ten o'clock, following a recess of some weeks during the vacation period.

Prof. J. H. Henning, of the Alabama College faculty, will be the speaker next Sunday morning.

A cordial invitation is extended to all men of the community to join the class and attend regularly upon its meetings.

Liberty Leaguer For Amendment

Birmingham. — Impetus against the proposed Constitutional Amendment, No. 1, which would remove the power of the ballot from citizens of Jefferson County and vest this inherent power in the legislative delegation, was added Saturday with the revelation that Richard Hail Brown, Alabama chairman of the American Liberty League, was taking the lead for its passage.

Brown, leading the opposition in Alabama against te re-election of President Roosevelt, came out last week trough an auxiliary of the Liberty League and announced this group would "take the lead" for the passage of the so-called" "Comptroller Amendment."

Awakening to the fact that there is a sinister motive behind the backers of this amendment, voters in Jefferson County through various civic and political groups will launch a determined move to educate the voters of Alabama of the evils of this proposal and ask them to vote "No" on Amendment No. 1, on November 3.

"Every county official in Alabama is against this pernicious effort to disfranchise the voters of Jefferson County," said Willard McCall, co-chairman of the drive to defeat the amendment. "These county officials who were elected by their people are aware of the tremendous power of such a law would give to the Legislature and leave the people out in the cold.

"The proponents of the proposal are attempting to pull the wool over the eyes of the voters of Jefferson County and are asking the electorate of the state to abet them in their crime," he continued. "People in Jefferson County want to preserve their right to elect their own officials and they believe that voters in Alabama will come to their rescue".

Montevallo Beaten

The Jones Valley Brownies trounced on the Montevallo Bulldogs at Bessemer last Thursday night, September 24, to the tune of 34-0. The Bulldogs, though outweighed, showed up suprisingly well, their only trouble was they couldn't stop Daniel Zobresky, who made the majority of the touchdowns.

couldn't stop Daniel Zobrosky, was the power of Brownie Attack. Zobrosky showed great ability in his running, passing, place kicking and tackling. Without Zobrosky Montevallo could have certainly held Jones Valley to a much lower score, and possibly a tie. The only other player that gave M. H. S. any trouble was Ernest Halfacre.

Toward the end of the game Bessemer students crossed the field to Montevallo's side of the stadium and started cheering for the Bulldogs. Whether by coincidence or otherwise Montevallo immediately started playing a better brand of football.

Montevallo out-punted Jones Valley with Capt. Lee and Walter Weems doing the punting. M. H. S. completed one out of three passes and one was intercepted.

Montevallo had their chance to score in the first quarter when David Leslie blocked a punt and put Montevallo within scoring distance.

All the boys gave their all. Many could hardly stand when they left the field, Jack Harrison having to be assisted off the field after fighting his heart out.

Montevallo has a good team this season and should win their share of the games.

Lineup and Summary

Montevallo—Spurgeon, left end; G. Cahoon, left tackle; Comer, left guard; Liddle, center; Leslie, right guard; Carr, right tackle; Hartley, right end; Lee, quarterback; Confer, left halfback; Weems, right halfback; Harrison, fullback.

Substitutions, Montevallo—Griffin, Johnson, Frost, A. Cahoon.

Legion Day At The State Fair

Alabama State Fair officials have designated Thursday, October 1st, as "Legion Day" and all Legionnaires wearing Legion caps will be admitted to the Fair Grounds free of charge on that day.

Governor Graves and several prominent Legion officials will be there. The Jefferson County Posts join the Fair officials in inviting all Alabama Legionnaires to be with them at the Fair on "Legion Day".

The information given above was communicated to Post Adjutant, R. P. Holcombe, by D. Trotter Jones, Department Adjutant, with the request that all Legion members be informed, and urged to attend the Fair Thursday.

This may come to the Legion members a little late, as to-day (Thursday) is the day referred to. But you still have time to grab your cap and get there in time for the day's events.

Game and Fish Life To Be Developed

GRAVES REQUESTS TVA TO COOPERATE WITH STATE OF ALABAMA

Montgomery, Ala., Sept. 30.—The way has been paved for a conference between representatives of the Tennessee Valley Authority and the State Conservation Department on a proposed plan for developing the game and fish life of the Alabama counties in the Tennesse Valley.

In a letter to the Tennessee Valley Authority, Gov. Bibb Graves suggested that the establishment of waterfowl feeding grounds and fish cultural stations, and the rehabilitation of the mussell industry be made a part of a cooperative TVA-State development program.

"I respectfully invite you to give consideration to the following suggestions as a means of rehabilitating those economically and socially important benefits formerly enjoyed by a very considerable number of people living in the Tennessee Valley:

"First.—In the upper stretches and in the shallow marsh areas of each of the series of pools waterfowl feeding grounds should be developed. Refuges or inviolate sancturies should be created and maintained where waterfowl could rest and feed in safety. Neighboring areas could be utilized for regulated shooting.

"Second.—Fish cultural stations should be constructed and maintained where an adequate supply of fish could be propagated and planted to take care of the loss of spawning beds sustained through fluctuation of water in the pools. This, in my opinion is of the highest importance.

"Third.—Experiments in the production of mussel and pearls could perhaps be carried on in tributaries to the Tennessee river, and thus recover and possibly improve this industry in the Valley."

Dr. Arthur E. Morgan, chairman of the Authority, replied that studies have been made for wildfowl refuges and fish cultural stations and that the TVA was very anxious for an early discussion of plans for building up the wildlife resources of the Valley. He added that the growth of mussels would be encouraged wherever possible.

"We are now able to report that the work of biological readjustment in the reservoirs is to be continued for this fiscal year and as long thereafter as appropriations permit and the pursuance of this program is deemed necessary," stated Dr. Morgan. "We are anxious to discuss with your representatives the possibilities for cooperation between the State of Alabama, other Government agencies, and ourselves, to the end that conditions on and in the waters of . . . . the Tennessee river . . . . will promote to a maximum degree the game and fish life."

D. A. R. Met With Mrs Kennerly

The David Lindsey chapter Daughters of the American Revolution held the first meeting of the year on the third Tuesday at the home of Mrs. W. J. Kennerly. The officers for the year are Mrs. W. J. Kennerly, regent; Mrs. E. H. Wills, vice-regent and acting secretary; Mrs. Louise Coleman, chaplain; Mrs. J. Alex Moore, registrar. Constitution Day is always observed at the September meeting. This year Mrs. Moore gave a most interesting discussion of the Constitution.

The National Society D. A. R. is asking every chapter in the United States to celebrate the sesqui-centennial of the founding of the Constitution by planting a tree at the proper season this Winter. The local chapter is glad to take a part in this celebration.

At the request of Mrs. W. L. Brown, state chairman of scholarships, the chapter agreed to assume responsibility for placing three hundred dollars in scholarships which the Alabama Society D.A.R. has available for use at Alabama College.

DRY CLEANING PRICES RAISED

A joint announcement appears in this week's paper from DeLuxe Cleaners and Montevallo Cleaners and Dyers, stating that on and after October 1st the prices on Dry Cleaning will be raised.

Recent advance in the cost of dry cleaning materials is given as the cause of the change in prices of dry cleaning service.

Read the advertisement which appears elsewhere, for a full explanation of the changes in price schedules.

Deep Religious Strain Is Found in "Green Pastures"

There is a part of Louisiana where dwell men and women who have seen God in their own image. They are people of simple thoughts, with the humble faith of children. They are the natives of Louisiana's bayou region who inspired first Roark Bradford to write a book and then Marc Connelly to create a world-renowned dramatic masterpiece, "The Green Pastures."

Free of modern complexities and philosophical doubts, "The Green Pastures", which as a play won the Pulitzer prize and now as a motion picture is receiving the plaudits of millions throughout the country, presents the Bible which we know and love. The film is at the Strand Theatre Sunday and Monday.

We can recall with longing fondness the days when every Biblical episode, when every character in the Good Bok meant so much to our own lives. David was real. Moses was a person we loved. Abraham, Isaac and Jacob were a triumvirate whose deeds inspired us. They represented to us faith in God and His works.

As we have reached maturity, these firm beliefs have been sloughal believers in the materiality of vale of memory. But the aborigines of Louisiana's bayous are still the trusting children, the literal believers in the materially of their celestial rulers.

Who as a child did not wish to know what the Lord looked like? One recalls the reply of a believing man who was asked by a skeptical monarch to show him the Creator. The good man took the king into the street one hot summer afternoon and told him to look straight into the sun.

"But I cannot," replied the ruler, "The sun dazzles me."

"How then can you expect to see God," replied the wise man "when you cannot even look at His creations?"

But the natives of Louisiana have seen God. They have seen Him in the rivers, the swamps near which they live. They have seen Him everywhere.

Roark Bradford who had lived in New Orleans for many years knows these people. He learned their stories and loved them. He knew such a preacher as the Reverend Deshee who explained to his Sunday school charges the wonderful story of the Creation, the brith of man, the fall of Cain, the Flood, the bondage of Israel in Egypt, the fall of Jerusalem.

Mr. Bradford took those stories and incorporated them into a volume called "Ol' Man Adam and His Chillun". Then came Marc Connelly who saw in this book a beautiful play. He wrote it and for five years, "The Green Pastures" gave humanity a glimpse of much that it hod forgotten. Warner Bros. realized that "The Green Pastures" was "such stuff" as immortality is made of. To them must be given merited praise. They have been true to their honored trust.

How regard this screen work? Merely another motion picture? Impossible. A great film? But that is understatement! "The Green Pastures" has reached out into space and brought back centuries and centuries. It is the biography of Man from Genesis to Revelation — the growth of man from childhood into maturity.

It is a remarkable thing that a play or film where the Lord is portrayed by a mere mortal has not caused offense to anyone. Wherever "The Green Pastures" has been shown in this country—North or South, East or West—it has so gripped audiences that they have emerged from the theatre almost reborn.

Those who have seen the play need no admonition to see the film. Those who have not seen the play, should see the film version so that they, too, may experience the joys of faith.

Morris Watson has been designated as chairman of the Roosevelt for President campaign fund committee in Beat Four of Shelby County. Assisting him as members of the committee are R. A. Reid, F. H. Frost and Percy Lee.

Judge L. C. Walker, of Columbiana, is chairman of the county committee. The local committee headed by Mr. Watson, was named by Judge Walker, who visited this community this week in the interest of the campaign for President Roosevelt.

The quota assigned to Beat Four, Mr. Watson stated Tuesday, is $115. The committee hopes to have an opportunity to see every Roosevelt supporter in this section and give them an opportunity to contribute to the campaign fund.

However, if the committee fails to see you, Mr. Watson urges that you get in touch with any one of the committee and your contribution will be accepted with due receipt issued for same.

Voters Will Decide Issue November 3

QUESTION IS CONSOLIDATION OF COUNTY OFFICES IN JEFFERSON

Voters of Alabama will decide November 3, 1936, whether Jefferson County shall be empowered to consolidate the Jefferson County offices of Tax Assessor, Tax Collector, County Treasurer and Commissioner of Licenses under a new officer to be known as County Comptroller, who shall be elected by the people of the County.

Although the Comptroller Act affects only Jefferson County and no other county in the State, a Constitutional Amendment is necessary because the State Constitution prohibits the enactment of any local law regulating either the assessment or collection of taxes.

The Jefferson County Comptroller Act is being sponsored by Senator James A. Simpson, all members of the Jefferson County legislative delegation except one, and a large group of citizens, who ure that it will reduce the cost of government in Jefferson by more than $50,000 yearly and materially increase efficiency. They point out that the act will not affect salaries or terms of present incumbents whose offices would be consolidated.

Opposition to the Act has developed from a group of office holders who have established headquarters in Birmingham in charge of F. D. McArthur and Willard McCall. Opponents of the measure are calling on other county office holders to join in a campaign against the measure on the ground that if the consolidation works successfully in Jefferson, it may be adopted by other counties. Advocates of the Comptroller Act insist that office holders, in their fight to keep their jobs, are confusing the real issue, which they say involves solely the question of improved Jefferson County Government for less cost.

Used Car Sales By Ford Dealers

With the announcement that all Ford dealers in the United States are joining during the month of October in a nation-wide Used Car Clearance Sale, Towery Motor Company, reported today that the local dealership has made complete preparations for active participation in this nation-wide Ford dealer activity.

"This type of nation-wide used car clearance sale," said Mr. Towery, head of the local Ford dealership, "is something new and unusual in the automobile industry. We are joining the rest of the Ford dealers throughout the United States in inaugurating this new movement, and we expect that our share of the sale will produce the largest volume of used car sales in our history.

"We feel that hundreds of persons now driving cars that are growing more costly to operate and losing in trade-in value daily will take advantage of this October Sale, with the new low prices and unusual bargains offered, to obtain better transportation for winter.

"Many of the used cars and trucks in our stock bear the famous Ford 'R & G' emblem, which means they have peen renewed and bear our written guarantee."

Play Will Review History Of College

HOMECOMING AND FORTIETH ANNIVERSARY OCTOBER 10 AND 11

A chief attraction of Alabama College's fortieth anniversary celebration Oct. 10-11 will be Mrs. Willilee Reaves Trumbauer's play, "Merrily We Go Along," which in five episodes reviews the history of Alabama College since its founding in 1896.

The scenes are a boarding house in 1896; a portion of the front campus in 1906; a room in Main Dormitory, in 1916; the Assembly Hall, in 1926, and Palmer Hall Stage in 1936. Mrs. Trumbauer has constructed her play in such a way that each episode is complete in itself, although a single thread of continuity binds the five episodes.

Background and settings are essentially accurate, though the plot is largely fictitious. Characters for the most part are girls who were in college during the particular periods used in the play.

Sixty Alabama College girls will make up the cast. Direction will be under Mrs. Trumbauer and Dr. Trumbauer, professor of dramatics. Students assisting them will be Phyllis Poland, Emily McLendon, Frances Faust, Aileen Holley and Eleanor Watson.

A large attendance of alumnae and friends of the college are expected in Montevallo at 10:30 a.m., Saturday, Oct. 10, when the double celebration in honor of the fortieth anniversary and the annual homecoming will begin.

Exercises open with an address in Palmer Auditorium by Dr. O. C. Carmichael, vice chancellor of Vanderbilt University, who from 1926 to 1935 was president of Alabama College. After Dr. Carmichael's address the visiting alumnae and friends will be entertained at a luncheon in the college dining room.

Saturday night the class of 1937 will entertain alumnae and visitors at an informal reception and dance.

Alabama College will have a full hour's broadcast over Station WAPI from 2:35 to 3:35 Sunday afternoon, Oct. 11, when a representative of the alumnae of each of the four administrations before the present one will speak five minutes on the sprit of the administration they knew. Dr. Arthur Fort Harman, fifth president of the institution, will speak for his administration.

Members of the alumnae-faculty committee on homecoming, all of Montevallo, are Miss Eloise Meroney, chairman; Miss Mary McWilliams, Miss Melba Griffith, Miss Lenice Vaughan and Miss Eleanor Rennie.

Cooperating with this committee in making plans for the occasion are officers of the state Alabama College Alumnae Association. These are Mrs. Frank Chappelle, Birmingham, president; Mrs. Charlotte Peterson, vice president; Miss Ethel Harris, treasurer, and Miss Martha Allen, secretary, all of Montevallo.

Baptist Church

"The Atonement" will be the subject of the Sunday morning sermon. At the evening service the theme will be, "Overcoming Doubt." The Lord's Supper will be observed Sunday morning.

Have you heard the B. S. U. orchestra play? Be present next Sunday morning at 9:45 and hear it.

The Baptist Training Union will have a study course next week. Mrs. John Maguire (Clyde Merrill) will teach the seniors, using the book, "Planning a Life." The intermediates will study "Training in Church Membership," and the Juniors will study the Junior Manual. The classes will meet at the church at 6:45 each evening from Monday through Friday.

A HEAVY NAME

Mr. J. Alex Moore observes that the new Montevallo postoffice has over the front entrance a marble name plate that weighs five thousand pounds.

The further observation is made by Mr. Moore that there is perhaps no other postoffice in the State that has such a "heavy" name.

On the marble slab above referred to is carved the words "Montevallo, Alabama".

Above this slab and extending across the front of the building will be a large line of aluminum letters reading "United States Postoffice".

Work of remodeling the Hicks Variety Store is about completed. The new front and show windows give the store a most attractive outside appearance, while the larger space inside renders it able to serve the trade more satisfactorily.

Dr. L. M. Latham and family left this week for Coral Gables, Florida, where they will live in future.

League of Nations Assembly Seats Ethiopians—American Legion Elects Colmery Commander—Japanese Marines Occupy Part of Shanghai.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union.

Haile Selassie

HAILE SELASSIE couldn't whip the Italians in the Ethiopian war, but the fugitive emperor won the battle of Geneva and put Benito Mussolini's nose out of joint. After an exciting debate, the League of Nations assembly voted, 39 to 4, to seat the Ethiopian delegation, now headed by the emperor's American adviser. The negative votes were cast by Hungary, Austria and Albania, all under the thumb of Italy, and Ecuador. Ethiopia, Portugal and four other countries refrained from voting. Rather surprisingly Great Britain and France espoused the cause of Ethiopia, though it had been thought they considered the co-operation of Italy in the league of more importance than justice to the African realm. The heated debate was closed when Capt. Anthony Eden, British foreign minister, said:

"Enough of this nonsense! There never has been any sufficient ground to unseat the Ethiopian delegation."

The credentials committee in recommending the action taken said it applied to the present session only. Its report asserted that certain documents which had been received by the members alleged that Ethiopian governmental authority has been set up in sections of Ethiopia not occupied by the Italians.

Seating of the Ethiopians made it certain that no Italian delegation would attend this session, and it was believed by many that Mussolini might withdraw formally from the league. It was a victory not only for Ethiopia but also for the smaller European powers, which felt that league submission to Italy would be disastrous to their own security.

Sir Samuel Hoare, first lord of the British admiralty, added to Italian resentment against Great Britain by declaring in London that the British intended to maintain their supremacy in the Mediterranean and would modernize and consolidate their naval, military and air defenses between Gibraltar and the Suez canal "in the light of recent experience." Malta, he said, would remain the first and principal base of the British fleet in the Mediterranean and would be strengthened to meet conditions. Work on Cyprus as a military, naval and air base is being hurried to make that island a complement to Malta. Sir Samuel asserted that the development of Italian air power has not endangered the British position in the Mediterranean.

Harry W. Colmery

VETERANS of two great conflicts, the World war and the Civil war, held their annual conventions, the American Legion meeting in Cleveland and the Grand Army of the Republic in Washington. The legion elected Harry W. Colmery, a lawyer of Topeka, Kan., as its national commander and awarded next year's convention to New York city. Mayor La Guardia personally led the Gotham delegation in the big parade. This delegation included an impressive display of police and fire department bands, motorcycle squads and mounted officers.

In its business sessions the legion adopted a resolution asking the United States government to withdraw its recognition of soviet Russia. Other resolutions approved called for a 90 per cent reduction in immigration quotas and deportation of all aliens who are anarchists, communists, or affiliated with the Third Internationale; the removal from public relief rolls of aliens who have not applied for citizenship; universal application of the fingerprinting system in this country, and an investigation of methods used in disseminating "subversive doctrines."

Harry E. Ransom of Milwaukee was elected head of the "40 and 8," fun making subsidiary of the legion.

The legion band championship was won by the Musicians' post, No. 394, of St. Louis, Mo.; second place went to Franklin post band of Columbus, O., and third to Musicians' post of Los Angeles. The Commonwealth Edison post drum and bugle corps of Chicago won the drum corps tournament.

Only about nine hundred survivors of the Union army were able to attend the G. A. R. encampment, and many believe it will be the last to be held. The aged warriors, headed by Oley Nelson of Iowa, the national commander, began their proceedings with a service in Washington cathedral. The route of their parade was six blocks on Pennsylvania avenue, the scene of the grand review of the Union armies before President Andrew Johnson seventy-one years ago.

C. H. Williams Ruhe of Pittsburgh, who ran away from home 72 years ago to join the Union army when he was only a lad of fifteen, today was unanimously elected to be commander-in-chief, and Madison, Wis., was named as the encampment city for 1937.

W. R. Hearst

ASSERTIONS made by William Randolph Hearst and other opponents of the New Deal that the President "passively accepts" the support of the Communists have got under Mr. Roosevelt's skin. A statement issued through Stephen T. Early, his secretary, said:

"My attention has been called to a certain notorious newspaper owner to make it appear that the President passively accepts the support of alien organizations hostile to the American form of government.

"Such articles are conceived in malice and born of political spite. They are deliberately framed to give a false impression, in other words to 'frame' the American people.

"The President does not want and does not welcome the vote or support of any individual or group taking orders from alien sources.

"This simple fact is, of course, obvious.

"The American people will not permit their attention to be diverted from real issues to fake issues which no patriotic, honorable, decent citizen would purposely inject into American affairs."

Mr. Hearst, who was in Amsterdam, promptly replied by cable, saying in part:

"The President has issued a statement through a secretary. He has not had the frankness to say to whom he refers in the statement . . . I think I am justified in assuming that I am the object of the statement, and that I may courteously endeavor to correct Mr. Roosevelt's misstatements and to set him right . . .

"Let me say that I have not stated at any time whether the President willingly or unwillingly received the support of the Karl Marx Socialists, the Frankfurter radicals, communists and anarchists, the Tugwell bolsheviks, and the Richberg revolutionists which constitute the bulk of his following.

"I have simply said and shown that he does receive the support of these enemies of the American system of government, and that he has done his best to deserve the support of all such disturbing and destructive elements."

FOUR Chinese gunmen in Shanghai killed one Japanese marine and wounded two others, and within a few minutes a Japanese landing party more than 2,000 strong had occupied much of the Hongkew section of the international settlement. The Japanese naval commander declared martial law in that area and troops stopped buses and street cars in the search for the slayers. Tanks, armored cars, light artillery and machine gun squads poured through the streets and on into Chapei, the Chinese district that was the scene of furious fighting between the Japanese and the Chinese Nineteenth route army in 1932.

Stirling Fessenden, American chairman of the international settlement, was warned by Japanese officials to protect their nationals, and the White Russian volunteer regiment and special police in the French quarter were hurriedly mobilized.

Shigeru Kawagoe, Japanese ambassador to China, who was in Nanking conferring with Chang Chun, Chinese foreign minister, on the other recent anti-Japanese incidents at Chengtu, Hankow and Pakhoi, threatened to break off the discussion and return to Shanghai.

Because of killings in Hankow and Pakhoi, Japanese marines already had been landed in those cities. Transports bearing reinforcements arrived from Japan.

THREE members of the maritime commission authorized in the closing days of the last congress were appointed by President Roosevelt. They are: Rear Admiral Henry A. Wiley, U.S.N. retired; Rear Admiral Harry G. Hamlet, coast guard; George Landick, Jr., chief of the planning section of the procurement division of the Treasury department.

The commission will administer the ship subsidy measure, act as a regulatory body in conduct of merchant marine affairs, and operate generally in the nature of the interstate commerce commission.

TOM K. SMITH of St. Louis, Mo., was elected president of the American Bankers association at the convention in San Francisco. Orval Adams of Salt Lake City was advanced to the first vice presidency, though it was said this was opposed by some because of his pronounced anti-New Deal convictions.

The executive council will select the meeting place for the 1937 convention. Mexico City was the only one to make a bid for the choice.

Resolutions reported by the committee and adopted called on governmental divisions—national, state and local—to bring their expenditures more definitely under control and return to balanced budgets, and recommended that chartering of new banks be limited rigidly to the economic needs of the nation.

CHIEFS of police of the United States and Canada, attending the convention of their international association in Kansas City, drew this picture of the typical American criminal of 1936:

A lazy, vain, moderately educated city youth whose parents have separated; shielding his laziness and an inferiority complex behind a false bravado that leads him into crime; motivated by a desire to impress "the girl friend" with a flashy appearance of wealth.

Chief William J. Quinn of San Francisco said the large majority of the 6,000 inmates of San Quentin prison are under twenty-four years of age and that 98 per cent of them come from broken homes.

Canada, according to Chief Constable George Smith of Winnipeg, does not differ from the United States in respect to its young thief problem. He said: "Kids start in at seventeen or eighteen stealing cars for joy rides."

These criminologists believe the time to "rehabilitate" the youthful criminal is immediately after his first offense.

SENATOR LA FOLLETTE'S senate committee on civil liberties, investigating the activities of strike breakers, was told that a preacher was hired as a spy, girls did undercover work, picketers were scalded by live steam and strikers were electrocuted by secretly strung wires on company property. Witnesses testified, also, that men who direct crews of ex-convicts, panhandlers and sluggers take a small fortune annually from industry to combat labor unrest.

The inquiry is designed to aid in the preparation of legislation demanded by organized labor leaders to eliminate agencies which specialize in strike-breaking. It is not indicated that evidence will be heard on the other side of the question—the violent practices often adopted by strikers and their sympathizers.

G. P. Jones

GEORGE P. JONES of Minnesota, who has been serving as a special assistant to the attorney general of the United States since 1934, has been made judge of the federal district court for the Virgin Islands. This is a recess appointment by President Roosevelt and is subject to confirmation by the senate. Mr. Jones planned to leave for St. Thomas about October 1. He succeeds Judge Albert C. Levitt of Connecticut, who resigned August 1 because, as he alleged, the Department of the Interior interfered with the processes of his court.

The oath of office was administered to Mr. Jones in Washington by Ugo Carusi, executive assistant to Attorney General Cummings, in the presence of Mr. Cummings and a number of other officials.

SEVERAL columns of Spanish Fascists and Moorish legionnaires were reported to be making a determined drive toward Madrid under the direction of General Franco, and the loyalists were falling back at the rate of five miles a day.

The rebel garrison of the Alcazar in Toledo was still holding out though the government forces, after dynamiting part of the old fortress, made attacks with flaming gasoline. The defenders lost heavily but the survivors kept up their deadly machine gun fire and repulsed the charges of the loyalists.

The American State department ordered the embassy in Madrid closed and warned all Americans still in the capital that they remained at their own risk. The consulate at Malaga also was closed and the consul took refuge in Gibraltar. Diplomats of 13 nations, who had gone to Saint Jean de Luz, France, rejected the Spanish government's demand that they return to Madrid.

SPECULATION concerning what part Al Smith would take in the Presidential campaign seems to be settled by the news that he will deliver several anti-Roosevelt addresses, the first probably in Carnegie hall in New York in October. He is reported to be making out his own program and planning talks also in Massachusetts and New Jersey. It is said neither the Republican party nor the American Liberty league will be sponsor for his appearances. Until Mr. Smith announces his intentions it will not be known whether or not he will advocate the election of Governor Landon.

Airplanes at $750 Each
Perils of Pacifism
The "Man of Calcium"
Improving Human Breed?

Arthur Brisbane

Fourteen concerns have offered to build small airplanes to cost as little as $750. That is important aviation news; the bureau of air commerce is to be congratulated on its effort to encourage individual flying.

The day is coming when there will be more machines in the air than there are automobiles on the ground now. More than 25,000,000 airplanes may sound like exaggeration.

But it sounded like exaggeration some years ago when this writer published editorials urging citizens not to spread tacks and cut glass on roads, to puncture automobile tires, because, before long, automobiles would be used by workers going to and from work. That prediction came true.

Some one preparing a list of ten things that Christians would and would not do says:

"There would be no private wealth; Jesus denounced great possessions as alien to His gospel, and fatal to His kingdom.

"There would be no poverty and no war, because real Christians would refuse to fight."

In this civilization, if Christians refused to fight, they would rapidly diminish in numbers and the Pacific coast would be settled by Asiatics.

The founder of Christianity taught that what was due to Caesar should be rendered unto him.

If He were on earth now He might say the same of organized capital, knowing that it supplies, in our complicated system, the possibility of steady work.

Nobody, not even a clergyman, can be positive as to what Christ's commands would be if he returned in this age of flying machines, automobiles, public schools and the strange problem of too much of almost everything, combined with want among many thousands of families lacking food and the government wondering occasionally what to do with millions of bushels of wheat.

Before long you may have football coaches feeding calcium to their players. You know what we call "a man of iron" is really the "man of calcium."

The metal calcium in the blood, in quantities that do not change, or that change little, produces a steadiness of nerve lacking in men with a fluctuating calcium supply.

It is said that experiments made on four young men at an eastern university showed that a drop in calcium brought on "moodiness, depression and pessimism."

If there is high calcium content in the blood serum they are in a "happy, cheerful, optimistic, emotional state."

But ask your doctor about it. Don't swallow calcium recklessly.

London thinks something should be done about "more than 250,000 mental defectives," and sterilization, on the German plan, is suggested, on condition that the individual consents. With such a law, government sterilization agents would have few customers.

Under one law suggested, the health minister would order the sterilization of "physically ailing persons shown to be carriers of transmissible disabilities."

The world is preparing to regulate and improve the human breed, as it has long regulated and improved breeds of cattle, swine and other creatures; a step in the direction of uniformity that may not be desirable.

One of the most enlightened educators in America tells teachers and undergraduates that the important thing is the general welfare, not the individual welfare. An excellent idea to put into the minds of young people.

They should also be told that individual welfare and striving, with selfishness back of it, is the foundation of general welfare.

The baby wiggling its arms and kicking its legs in the cradle is building up one more strong baby, for its own sake, not for the general welfare, to which it, nevertheless, contributes. The man, concentrating on his career, and on the care and education of his children, has chiefly in mind his career, children and family. But he also is building up the general welfare. Each tiny coral builder worked only for its own speck of coral, but beautiful islands are the result.

After four years of study, wise men discover that ideas are impressed on the minds of children more deeply by moving pictures than by reading books. Less than four minutes is required to establish that fact.

Campaign Issues

Washington.—It has been exceedingly interesting to watch the progress of the Democratic and Republican campaign committees in their efforts to shape and join the issues upon which the electorate will choose the next occupant of the White House. There has been a tremendous amount of hauling and filling, each side coming forth with trial balloons in an effort to find out what it is that will attract the most interest among the voters and to determine what particular matters afford the best vehicle on which they can ride into office.

From the beginning of this year, President Roosevelt has been trying to shape his issue on the basis of a single question—whether the American people in dollars and cents are better off then they were when he took office. I think admittedly that if Mr. Roosevelt could force that question into the center of the stage and make it the real issue, he would have very little campaigning to do. But the trouble is Mr. Roosevelt has been unable to accomplish his purpose and no little credit for his threat to force a joinder of issues on this point is due to the Republican leadership. The Republican managers simply will not be led into that trap. Thus, we must look elsewhere to see what the real issues are, or are likely to be, in this campaign decision.

It has nearly always been true that the issues prominent early in the campaign have proved not to be the issues at all near the end of a political battle. This year promises to be no exception. Political leaders attempt to figure out the proposition upon which their opponents are most vulnerable and obviously this figuring takes place in advance. It has to happen that way in order that methods of attack can be arranged in advance.

The New Dealers thought they could smoke out the Republicans by shouting far and wide that the people as a whole are better off than they were when Mr. Roosevelt took office. But, again, it was a case where political strategy did not work. Even though many hundred thousands of people are better off, the fact remains that there are some twenty million persons receiving relief in one form or another and the further fact remains that there are somewhere between nine million and ten million workers without jobs. Consequently, Mr. Roosevelt's question whether people were better off in dollars and cents did not quite click.

In the meantime, the Republicans have found what they believe to be a very vulnerable spot in the New Deal armor and they are shooting at it with machine-gun rapidity. This question, this spot, centers around taxation. The Republicans apparently thought at the start of the fight that Democratic waste of federal money and the vast debt that was piled up would force a revulsion of feeling against New Deal policies. So they started out on that campaign horse. But they found that the question of taxation over-shadowed the other, even though the taxation about which the Republicans are talking has been an offspring of the alleged waste of the party in power.

* * *

Err in Strategy

I doubt that the taxation issue would have been as important as it is proving to be had not the New Dealers made a mistake in political strategy. This mistake, it may be said in passing, illustrates how very minor things influence the ultimate result in politics to a greater extent perhaps than in any other activity of American national life. The mistake which I refer to was made by Attorney General Cummings.

The story of the circumstance chronologically is something like this: The Republicans from their headquarters in Chicago began calling attention to increased tax burdens in connection with their exposure of the increase of more than thirteen billion dollars in the country's debt. They pointed out how, if the Roosevelt administration had not wasted money, preparations would not have to be made for raising the taxes and how, if this waste had not occurred, tax increases which we already have had would not have taken place.

As a part of the demonstration of increased taxation the Republicans issued campaign literature itemizing the amount of taxes each and every one of us pays on the common every-day necessities of life. They showed how each loaf of bread, each pair of shoes, each pork-chop, among other things, bears so much tax which all of us pay in buying those necessities of life.

Probably the distribution of this campaign literature by the Republicans would not have stirred up so much fuss in and of itself had it not been for the action of Attorney General Cummings. The Attorney General made some public threats that he would seek to indict those who were responsible for distribution of this information, claiming that a federal law had been violated. Being attorney general of the United States, any statement from him got wide distribution.

But the Republicans, recognizing the potentialities of this situation, issued a challenge to Mr. Cummings to proceed with his threat of indictments. Their publicity statement on the point was just as virulent as that of any red-blooded American boy who says to his playmate, "I dare you to!"

Well, the rejoinder of the Republicans rather put Mr. Cummings on the spot.

I presume probably the threat and the resulting challenge still would have amounted to nothing except that the method employed by the Republicans capitalized on that threat by accusing the attorney general of seeking to prevent free speech and to prohibit discussion of campaign issues. If there is one thing that the American people resent, it is any attempt by a governmental agency of whatever character it may be that seeks to stifle discussion. They look upon it as a sign of dictatorship. Somewhere in their veins still courses the virus that overthrew King George in the birth of this nation.

* * *

Too Many Agencies

President Roosevelt announced the other day that he is preparing to start reorganization of the federal administrative agencies. He said he had arrived at the conclusion that such a course was necessary because there has been overlapping in function and jurisdiction among the many agencies created by the New Deal. It is the second time that the President has proposed reorganization of the governmental units and his new announcement promises to attract as much attention as did his original announcement which was made when he was a candidate during the 1932 presidential campaign.

For a long time, it has been plainly evident to observers in Washington that New Deal agencies were literally falling over one another and that many of them were constantly in conflict with others because the laws or executive orders, chiefly the executive orders, by which these agencies were created, did not clarify their jurisdiction or their function.

A good deal of this trouble obviously had its origin in the haste that characterized the early efforts of the Roosevelt administration to establish machinery by which problems of the depression could be solved or alleviated. It always happens that when governmental agencies are created in such haste, ridiculous situations result. It was the case during the World war and it has been the case during the New Deal's efforts to solve depression problems under the emergency powers granted by congress. The truth seems to be that there is more overlapping, more conflict, now than there was during the World war.

* * *

Much Confusion

I have known of numerous instances where one agency, under authority given it by the President, has promulgated rules and regulations having the force of law that did not conform to rules and regulations dealing with the same matters but coming from another unit of government. In addition, I have seen different interpretations placed on the same statute or the same regulation by two different agencies. In consequence, the citizen whose business practices or personal affairs were touched by government edict found himself prohibited from doing a particular thing on the one hand and ordered to do it on the other.

Thus, it would seem that it is high time for something to be done about re-organization. It would seem equally to be high time for elimination of some of the extra red tape of government which has been wound about the private lives of American citizens by the New Deal. Goodness knows, there was plenty of red tape before the New Deal; it certainly is worse now than it was before.

The thing that seemed to interest most of the writing fraternity in Washington, however, was not so much the alleviation of the conditions which I have mentioned, but the political aspects of the presidential announcement that new reorganization plans were under consideration. Some of these writers who are critical of the New Deal went back to the 1932 campaign records and dragged out to public view Mr. Roosevelt's promises respecting governmental complexities.

—10—

"That's part of what he's done to me. He's stole my cattle besides. McCrossen is the only man that stayed by me through thick and thin. McCrossen's the right man for you. You can get married tomorrow if you want to."

"I haven't the slightest idea of getting married tomorrow, father. And if Mr. McCrossen were the only man left, I certainly should never marry. There's not a straight hair in his head."

"Sounds like that skunk Denison's been filling your ears for you."

"Bill Denison's barely ever mentioned McCrossen's name to me."

"Well, keep away from Denison for good, don't forget that."

Jane flinched inwardly but spoke low and clearly: "I can't promise that, father."

"Why not?"

"I don't think it's right."

"Ain't I your father?"

"Yes."

"Ain't a parent a-goin' to be obeyed?"

"If he is reasonable. I'm not a child, father."

He grew furious. "I don't give a damn what you are, you're not goin' to take up with any enemy of mine, 'n' you might just as well know it now—and I'll see that you don't."

Van Tambel, quitting the house, rode with McCrossen, over the hills burned the day before, to determine what further measures should be taken to insure safety for the ranch buildings. The two men halted at the foot of Gunlock Knob.

"A lot of good timber gone in that blaze, Van," muttered McCrossen.

Van Tambel was silent for a moment. "The ranch ain't worth as much as it was yesterday, that's sure," he said at last. Then after another pause: "I wouldn't mind the timber if the damned fire had held on till it cleaned out Denison."

Both were looking down on the neighbor's ranch.

"I wish I was rid of that fellow." Van Tambel's words fairly grated out of his harsh throat. "Why couldn't that blamed fire have cleaned out his buildings yesterday?"

"It was a close scratch. If the wind had shifted—"

"Always blows the wrong way for me. I don't mind losing the timber. If it had caught him, I'd—" He checked himself suddenly. "Look here," he jerked, why can't we help the wind along next night there's a blow—just give things a start down there?"

"What d'you mean? Burn him out?"

"Why not?"

McCrossen took the cigarette from his mouth but said nothing.

"Well?" sputtered Van Tambel. "Why don't you talk?"

"I don't fancy that kind of a job."

McCrossen shifted moodily in his saddle. "Bill Denison and I have got our differences—plenty of 'em. Some day I expect to iron 'em out with him. But it'll be done in daylight."

Van Tambel sneered. "Look out he don't get you and the girl both."

"Well"—the words came reluctantly—"I'll talk to Barney Rebstock. You'll have to pay him well."

After Van Tambel came back from the hospital, he reopened his office in Sleepy Cat.

"I thought you said the old devil couldn't get well," complained Pardaloe to Dr. Carpy.

Carpy was laconic. "He can't. Some day he'll crack up sudden."

But Van Tambel kept Jane so closely under his eye that she had no chance to see Denison.

One day her father took her in town on business. The volunteer fire fighters were clamoring for their pay, and Jane, knowing the details of the agreement with Pardaloe as to how much beer and "grub" should be provided, plus their pay, rode with her father, to town, to settle with Pardaloe.

"Bill," she said to Pardaloe, when the accounts had been straightened out, "I want to ask a question and I want the truth."

Pardaloe looked at her with shrewd benevolence. "Fire away, girl!"

"Why does my father hate Bill Denison so?"

Pardaloe shifted uneasily. "You won't like the truth, Miss Jane."

"Whether I like it or not, I want you to tell me, Bill," she said.

"Well, your dad wants the Spring ranch—started a fight for it at the Medicine Bend land office. Bill beat him there, so he goes up to Washington, and Bill has to sell off his cows to get money to fight and pay lawyers. 'Fore he got through, the boy had to sell everything to keep his end up."

"It was tough," assented Jane grimly. Her eyes were half closed and her lips compressed, as if to shut out unpleasant details.

Pardaloe warmed to his story. "If it wa'n't you, Miss Jane, an' your own dad, I'd call a man that'd act that way—well, wonder to me is, Bill never plugged him. Now don't cry; I told you you wouldn't like it."

Jane shook her head and brushed the tears from her eyes with a gesture of defiance. "Don't mind a little shower, Bill. You've told me what I asked for—the truth. Now I want to tell you something. But please keep my secret—will you, Bill?"

"Shoot," was all he said.

Swiftly she told him of her first meeting with Denison, and of their rides together. She described how he had saved her life and how afterward her father had ridden over to the Denison ranch with Dave McCrossen, created a scene and forbade her ever again to see Denison.

"I'm watched now like a two-year-old child," she concluded, "and I'm rebellious!"

Pardaloe looked at her appraisingly. He observed the animation of her manner and the flash of her eye; he listened to the rapid flow of her words and the spirited way in which he spoke them. The old frontiersman looked at her as an artist might look on a flower; he could see, but couldn't quite understand, all that was hidden within it.

"I wish," said Jane, musing, almost as much to herself as to Pardloe, "I knew just what to do."

"Do nothin'," suggested Pardaloe.

Jane bridled. "Do nothing! That isn't very pleasant to think about."

"You've got to realize your circumstances," he returned. "In the mess you're in all around out there, it's best for you to sit tight 'n' do nothin'. You don't know it, but you're settin' on a box of dynamite."

"Do you expect me to act as peacemaker, Bill?"

"I didn't say that—'twouldn't be no sort of use. There'll be peace there when bobcats go back on jack rabbits."

"Well," sighed Jane, reluctant, "you know best, Mr. Pardaloe—"

"Bill."

"You know best, Bill. I may want to talk to you again."

"Any time, honey."

Riding home with her father, who rode slowly, she had plenty of time to think. And her thoughts were sober-hued.

McCrossen was a thorn in her side. To meet him every day and be halfway pleasant was a daily strain.

He tried to make up to her. "I got off on the wrong foot with you, Jane," he said one day. The two were standing near the ranch-house door, in the sunshine. "I know that, all right. All I can say is, if there's anythin' I can do to square myself, I'm ready to do it whenever you say the word. Is that fair?"

Jane was looking up at the mountains. She answered without rancor; a mild manner must be her cue now.

A week passed. Van Tambel lay in bed. He had to send Jane to Medicine Bend to attend to some bank business there. To keep her under surveillance, Van Tambel ordered McCrossen to ride to Sleepy Cat with her. When Jane heard of the arrangements she flatly refused to go.

"What's a-matter with you, you damned cantankerous thing!" demanded her father huskily. "Ain't my foreman good enough for you to ride with?"

Jane's features set. "I won't ride with him," she declared crisply.

"Why not?" thundered her father, rising in bed.

Jane drew herself up the least bit. Her father's rudeness stiffened her attitude. "If you want to know the real reason, I don't want him trying to kiss me on the way home after he's had too many drinks in the Red Front saloon. I won't ride with him. If he goes, I don't."

Finally Bull Page was assigned to escort the wayward Jane, and the two set off for town. Jane was most interested to get some news from Bull Page about Denison; but Bull had neither seen nor heard of him since the Gunlock Knob fire.

In Medicine Bend, Jane extended a note, drew some money, paid the hospital bills, and waited for the afternoon train home. When she got to Sleepy Cat it was ten o'clock at night, and no rig was at the station from the ranch. She was compelled to spend the night at the hotel. It was a long time afterward before she realized that the whole trip had been planned by her father and McCrossen for a purpose.

She rose early, breakfasted alone, and started out to pay the few remaining fire bills. She went first to Spott's place to pay for the beer. Spotts was out. "Ought to be back pretty soon," said Oscar. "He's got to be here pretty soon to let the bartender out for breakfast."

"I've an order to leave at Rubido's," said Jane. "I'll be back." She walked over to the general store, left her provision order for the wagon to pick up, and returned to Spott's barber shop. Jake, his crutches at his side, was sitting in his barber chair.

"Hello there, Miss! Well! How's things out at Gunlock?"

"About as usual, Jake. I've come to pay for the beer."

"No more fires botherin'?"

"Not at present. How much was the beer?"

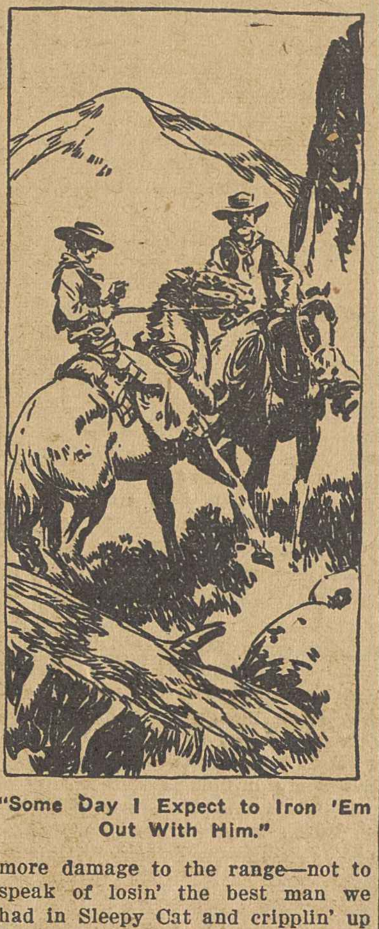
"No hurry about that."

"Yes, but I want to clean it up."

"Thank you, ma'am," said the saloon keeper and barber as Jane counted out and handed him the money. "If I could only call my old side partner back out of it,"—Spotts shook his head.

"None of us will ever forget Panama, Jake."

"The damnedest, meanest, orneriest fires that ever swept them hills," said Spotts, counting over the money perfunctorily. "Done more damage to the range—not to speak of losin' the best man we had in Sleepy Cat and cripplin' up the best man we had in the hills."



"Some Day I Expect to Iron 'Em Out With Him."

"Who was that, Jake?"

"Why, Bill Denison."

Jane started visibly. "Bill Denison?" she echoed in consternation. "What do you mean?"

'Well, you know he's in the hospital."

"I know nothing of the kind," exclaimed Jane sharply. She stood white as a sheet. "What has happened? Tell me!"

"Why, didn't you know his eyes is gone to hell?"

"What do you mean? What has happened? Tell me!"

Spotts started violently out of his torpor as he saw with amazement the effect of his news on his visitor. "Why, Doc. Carpy says that his eyes got burned some gettin' through that Gunlock Knob fire. Then some son—" Jake checked himself. "Somebody set his ranch house afire last night and nearly burned him up. Ask Carpy; he'll tell you."

She hurried to the hotel. The doctor was out on a call. Jane hurried to McAlpin's barn, where she had left her pony, and rode straight up the hill to the hospital.

CHAPTER IX

"WHERE is he, Sister?"

"His room is on the second floor—218. Shall I show you the way?"

"If you please, Sister. I learned only a moment ago that he was here. I've heard of this dreadful ranch-house fire only this minute. Did he tell you how it happened, Sister?"

"He has hardly spoken since they brought him in. But Mr. Scott said it was getting out of the burning ranch house."

"Do you think there is any chance to save his sight? Oh, Sister, can you imagine how I feel?"

"Dear heart, I do know how you feel. Of course I don't know a thing about the case, except that Dr. Carpy has given very strict orders about his care." She was too considerate to tell how worried she knew Carpy to be. "Of course his room is dark. And his eyes are bandaged. We like Mr. Denison so much—he's always been so kind to us with nice gifts. This is his room." The nurse laid her hand on the knob of the door. "Shall I go in with you?"

"Do, Sister," said Jane.

Sister opened the door. "Good morning, Mr. Denison."

"Good morning, Sister."

Jane, walking in on tiptoe behind her guide, heard his answer.

"Who's that with you, Sister?" Jane had stepped as lightly as possible; but his ears had detected her footsteps.

"I've brought you a visitor. I hope you're not cross," she added, banteringly.

"Who is visiting me?" he asked.

Jane had been gradually drawing closer to him. "Bill?"

He started violently. For an instant he was silent as if listening for more. Then he responded, low and strangely, "Jane?"

"Yes, Bill."

In the dark, her hand touched his arm. He caught both her hands, crushing them with his own, and drew one and the other hungrily to his lips. "Sister," he said, composed, yet eager, "can you find a chair, in the dark, for Miss Van Tambel?"

With the nurse gliding out of the room, Jane's hands crept over his shoulders, around his neck, and as his arms enfolded her, their lips met.

"I didn't want you to hear that I was in trouble till we knew more about it. How did you find out I was here, Jane?"

"Jake Spotts, Bill. I never dreamed of such a thing," she said tremulously. "He told me the ranch house was burned last night. Oh, Bill!"

"I think maybe my eyes will be all right in a couple of days. Ben Page has been working for me for a while. He got hold of Bob Scott to bring me in to see Doc Carpy—and the doctor sent me here." He felt her warm tears against his cheek. He kissed them away from her eyes. "Don't cry! There's nothing to cry over. I'll be all right when my eyes get better. Doctor says that won't be long. I wish you hadn't heard of it."

"I wish you'd never heard of me, Bill. To think of it, that I should have been the cause of starting all this trouble. Oh, why couldn't I have stayed home that dreadful day instead of riding into danger? I'll never, never forgive myself. And I'm ashamed to say it, Bill, but the real reason I rode up there was because I was just hungry for a sight of you."

Denison only laughed. "Don't think you're the only one that was hungry for a sight. If I hadn't been scouting around the Knob trail where I knew you liked so much to ride, I'd never have caught sight of you. What then? Why, Jane, if you were burning in a fire, why shouldn't I jump in after you? What would be left for me?"

"Do your eyes hurt terribly, Bill?"

"Not when you're here, Jane."

"Oh, I know better. I know they do. And I can do nothing to help!"

He made light of her worry. There were more furtive tears, more earnest prayers, more submission from Jane. More happy laughs, more ardent embraces, more carefree cheer from Denison.

"Why, Bill," she protested at length, "one would think there was nothing the matter with you. And I am frightened to death."

"I was frightened to death myself till you came. It's not much fun sitting alone here in the dark. What frightens me most is the thought that if the worst should come, I'd lose you."

"You can never lose me, Bill. Remember that."

"Yes, but a blind man!" he exclaimed desperately. "Jane, I never could ask you to marry me blind—"

"There's only one way to keep me from marrying that good-for-nothing Bill Denison—that's to kill me and make me into dust—even then, I'd tremble under his feet. I would—just to annoy him."

Her tongue was light and happy when she said good-by, but her heart was dread with fear. She rode straight to Carpy's office; luckily she found him in.

"Doctor! I'm so worried about Mr. Denison—"

"So am I."

"You know what happened?"

"Said he got trapped in the ranch-house fire."

"Yes, but it was trying to save my life when his eyes first got hurt."

"Never said a blamed word about that."

"I was up on Gunlock Knob, and he rode up to get me through the fire. "Doctor," she asked, unsteadily, "can't you save his eyes?"

"Jane, my girl, give me another two weeks. If I thought anybody, anywhere, would do anything more than I'm doing, I'd put him on the cars tonight. It's time, Jane, time."

If Jane expected to get much information about the Denison fire at home, she was disappointed. When she reported it to her father, he was silent—professing still to feel outraged at her insubordination. McCrossen was more communicative, even sympathetic; but he knew little about the fire.

See in Different Directions

The curious little reptile that is noted for changing its color to suit its background, the chameleon, and the small oddly shaped fish known as the hippocampus or sea-horse, have one peculiar characteristic in common. Their eyes move independently of each other. When a chameleon gets one eye focused on an insect it moves the other eye until it, too, is focused on the prospective prey. Then it darts out its long, sticky tongue to make the catch. Persons observing sea horses in aquariums have noted that their two eyes appeared to be looking in opposite directions.—Detroit News.

New Fertilizer Made From Starch Penetrates Soil

Carries Phosphorus to Roots of Plants

Reno, Nev.—Combining a possible large-scale use for farm products with a very much more effective way to get phosphorus to the roots of growing plants, a new type of fertilizer developed at the Nevada University College of Agriculture in Reno is being watched with greatest interest by both agricultural scientists and fertilizer manufacturers.

Phosphorus is one of the most important of all fertilizer elements, yet it is at present one of the most inefficiently used. In the forms now commercially available, the phosphorus is grabbed by other chemical elements in the soil and held in insoluble form almost where it falls.

Experts Make Discovery.

It does not penetrate to any appreciable degree below the level disturbed by the plow, whereas most common crops and all orchard trees send their feeding roots far below the plowline.

Obviously, a soluble fertilizer, that will penetrate deeper, is a highly desirable thing. Drs. Robert Stewart and V. E. Spencer have been experimenting with organic compounds of phosphorus, instead of the simpler inorganic ones

Economical to Produce.

They have made several entirely new phosphate compounds, of which the most successful, both in its behavior in the soil and in its possibilities for economic manufacture, are compounds with common glucose.

If the glucose phosphates come into extensive use, it will provide a tremendous potential market for corn and other high-starch farm products. Starch is easily converted into glucose, and the glucose, combined into the new, highly efficient phosphorus fertilizer, can return to make the farm and orchard more profitable.

Hawaiian Climate Growing Warmer, Records Indicate

Honolulu.—While weather on the "mainland" is giving people plenty to think about, students of climatology in Hawaii are having their own problems to puzzle over. Three changes have become apparent:

Tradewinds in the Pacific have shifted their course.

Hawaii's temperature is gradually rising.

Distribution of rainfall in the mid-Pacific American territory is changing.

Expert Makes Study.

Some points in Hawaii are receiving 30 per cent more rain than they did 30 years ago while other points are receiving 21 per cent less. Every month in the year is slightly warmer than the corresponding period 30 years ago.

These are some of the conclusions John H. Voorhees, in charge of the U. S. Weather Bureau at Honolulu, has drawn from a study of records covering the period since the federal government established an official weather bureau there in 1904.

The warmest December day in Honolulu in nearly half a century was December 8, 1935, when the maximum temperature was 84.6 degrees.

First public knowledge of an apparent slight upward climb in Hawaii's temperature was obtained in 1925, when Edward A. Beals, at that time in charge of the U. S. Weather Bureau in Hawaii, reported to his department head in Washington that "Hawaii is growing warmer year by year."

Abandoned Mine Shaft Is Used to Cure Roquefort

Washington.—An old abandoned mine shaft in Pennsylvania is the newest idea in curing places for domestic Roquefort cheese, reports the Department of Agriculture here.

The damp shaft has been whitewashed and air at 46 degrees Fahrenheit forced through it.

Thus a new underground place has been added to an industry already noted for its queer locations. On the upper Mississippi river caves have been cut out of the damp sandstone bluffs near St. Paul to provide curing rooms.

Growth of Timber Nears Balance With Consumption in U. S.

Danger of Exhaustion No Longer a Specter

FIGURES often quoted, to show that America is using up its timber resources several times as fast as they are being re-grown, were called in question by John B. Woods of the Society of American Foresters, in an address before his colleagues in Washington, D. C.

Changes during very recent years, he declared, have gone far toward bringing timber production into balance with timber consumption.

The changes involve both an increase in tree growth and a sharp decline in timber use, he said. The new approach to a balanced state is of post-depression date.

Consumption Declines.

"To compare growth and drain on the basis of 1929 and prior years is to cling to the bad old days," Mr. Woods contended. Consumption declined abruptly from a five-year average of 36 billion feet of lumber to 16.4 billion for the next five-year period.

"Total forest drain for the period 1929-1934 is estimated by Smith in the N. R. A. report as 9,500,000 cubic feet per year. The same report carries an estimate of growth for the same period of 8,900,000 cubic feet.

"We recognize that production and loss at the old rate put too great a burden upon our growing capacity. But reduced consumption and increased effectiveness of protective measures have put us practically in a state of balance. The job now is to complete the extension of management to all our lands—both public and private—and build up our productive capacity."

Re-Growth is Rapid.

The accelerated re-growth of our timber is a tri-regional affair, Mr. Woods states. In the still-unexhausted Northwest, lumbermen have at last learned the lessons of more conservative cutting, better protection against fire and other natural agencies of destruction, and provision for replacement on cut-over lands.

Instead of becoming a barren waste of treeless flats and hills, the South "in two decades has become a potential yellow pine farm, now growing upon half of its pine lands (according to Inman Eldredge) 18,000,000 cords of wood each year. As this great plant swings into production, as the small trees become big ones, the annual yield of saw-timber and pulpwood may exceed in volume the yearly output of old-growth pine in the old days."

Yellowstone Elks Face Starvation in Coming Winter

Yellowstone Park, Wyo.—Yellowstone's ten thousand elk of the Northern herd face starvation and death during the coming winter, because of the unprecedented failure of their rangeland and of the fields where hay is normally grown for their winter use.

A survey of the situation, just completed here, shows a falling off in density of forage vegetation of twenty-seven per cent, as compared with the figures for last year.

Not only is the total amount of vegetation decidedly less, but what is left is qualitatively less fit for animal consumption. The palatable grasses have been largely burned out or eaten off to the roots. Their place is taken by various kinds of undesirable weeds and unpalatable brush.

Recovery Is Slow.

This means not only bitter hard times for the elk during the coming winter, but also very slow recovery of the one-time rich game rangeland. The pasture will be years, perhaps decades, in coming back.

"Perhaps the most distinct indication of volume of forage that will be available during the coming winter is the height of forage plants," the report continues. "The average height of all plants examined in the plots is 65 per cent less than in 1935.

"In several instances the quadrats examined did not contain a single grass seed stalk, while in the previous year a good seed crop was produced. Seedling crops have been totally lacking this year or have died due to weather conditions.

Deaths Exceed Births in French Republic

Paris.—Deaths exceeded births in France during 1935, declares the scientific journal La Science et la Vie.

Births during the year numbered 638,881, and there were 658,357 deaths — a morbidity excess of nearly 20,000. During 1934 births exceeded deaths by about 43,000. Unemployment and rising cost of living in France are blamed for the situation.

At the same time Germany showed an excess of 480,000 births over deaths during 1935.

No 13-Inch Fish

"Thirteen-inch fish are apparently very hard to catch in Michigan," says R. W. Eschmeyer, of the Institute for Fisheries Research, after checking over thousands of creel census returns made by the state's anglers. Anglers estimate their fish at 10, 12, 14 and 16 inches but rarely do they say 9, 11, 13, 15 or any odd figure.

LEGISLATURE LOSES REID

When a good business man and a conservative is lost to the Alabama Legislature it is time to say something about it. The columnist has kept track of Representative R. A. Reid, of Shelby County. We watched him during the deliberations of the House and we approved his course. He was a fine representative from Shelby, a credit to the county a credit to the State.

Representative Reid has resigned to become the postmaster at Montevallo. He will make a fine postmaster because he knows his people and knows their ways. It takes that, together with executive ability, to make a good postmaster. We expect him to become the Roy Nolen, of Montevallo. And we regard Roy Nolen as a postmaster par excellence.

"Since you have been so kind and generous to me in your column," said Mr. Reid in a recent letter to the columnist, "I want to express to you my appreciation for the courtesies shown me while a member of the House and to say to you that I greatly enjoy The Advertiser.—Atticus Mullin in The Montgomery Advertiser.

VACANCIES IN THE HOUSE AND SENATE

The governor has announced that vacancies in the House and Senate will be filled at the general election on Nov. 3. This does not mean that an extra session of the Legislature is to be held any time in the near future. In fact it begins to look like there would not be another extra session during the present administration. The governor has said that he did not expect to call the lawmakers back until he had a majority pledged to a program that he would submit. The only purpose of an extra session would be to raise additional funds for school purposes and any proposal to levy additional taxes is going to meet with stiff opposition, whether such proposal means new taxes or means setting up new machinery to collect escaped taxes. The legislators are very much divided and some of them seem to be more concerned about their own pocketbooks than they are about the schools. Others seem to think the school system will adjust itself to the new conditions if let alone. At any rate an extra session is not in sight at this time.—Southern Democrat (Oneonta).

ESCAPES EQUAL TAXATION

"The payment by the Tennessee Valley Authority of $40,000, with a possible additional $10,000, to the State of Alabama on account of power sold at Wilson Dam has been widely publicized," says Haleyville, Ala., Advertiser-Journal. "This pocket money is to be in lieu of all other taxes, either Federal, county or municipal, of which the state and its political subdivisions have been deprived because of encroachments of this governmental agency.

"While it is admitted that the Alabama Power Company . . . . serves a larger number of communities and has a great many more miles of poles and wires, yet after all this has been taken into consideration, the pittance which TVA is paying appears insignificant indeed when compared to the $2,500,000 which the Alabama Power Company is paying. This company pays a kilowatt hour tax for school purposes alone of more than $300,000 annually.

"The constant acquirement by TVA of tens of thousands of acres of land, and their retirement from cultivation, with the consequent reduction of tax income to the state—all under the guise that they are needed for development of the Tennessee river for navigation—affords an ever growing problem for the citizens of the State. Moreover, while the Alabama Power Company pays taxes on every foot of its lines, the TVA maintains that its lines are subject to no taxation whatsoever, and it pays none."

Citizens throughout the whole TVA area, as well as in other parts of the nation where more "authorities" are proposed, are at last awakening to the menace which results from turning private tax-paying property into tax-free government property. When a state's revenue is cut, the taxes on all other property must be increased to cover the loss. In most states, the taxes paid by light and power utilities amount to a very substantial part of all tax revenue—and if this money is lost, a grave fiscal problem is created.

It is certainly a hollow achievement for government-owned business with its advantages of public subsidies, tax-freedom, franking privileges and so on, to be able to make small reductions in already low power bills—and then boost taxes for every citizens of the nation in order to give slightly lower rates to privileged communities.

State Capitol News

Montgomery.—Alabama farmers received $16,351,000 for cooperation in the 1935 production programs, bringing the total income of the year to $174,662,000, J. C. Garrett, state and federal agricultural statistician revealed this week.

The state's farm income exclusive of government subsidies was placed at $158,311,000.

"This is $14,196,000 above the gross income, including government payments for 1934," Garrett said, "when it was $160,466,000 and compares with $122,545,000 for 1933, and $101,206,000 for 1932. Farm income from crop production was slightly less in 1935 than in 1934, but government payments and income from livestock show substantial increases.

"Cash income of Alabama farmers (gross income, less the value of farm products consumed by the farm family) for the same four years, and including benefit payments, was $117,949,000 in 1935, $108,744,000 in 1934, $92,737,000 in 1933 and $58,605,000 in 1932.

"As usual cotton was the outstanding item as a source of farm income in 1935. Lint and seed combined account for nearly $82,000,000 of the $174,662,000 gross income for the year. Due to larger government payments, farmers received more income from cotton in 1933 than they did in 1934, though the total value of the lint and seed sold was less.

"Milk comes a distant second to cotton as an income producer in Alabama. The gross income from this product was $26,182,000 in 1935, an increase of slightly more than $3,000,000 over 1934. Other important sources of gross farm income in 1935 were gardens, $10,252,000, hogs $10,115,000, chickens and eggs, $9,723,000, peanuts, $6,432,000 and corn, $5,319,000.

Several hundred Alabama war veterans who cherish memories of campaigning throughout the world under the American flag, participated in special exercises at their respective posts of the Veterans of Foreign Wars in observance of the 37th anniversary of the founding of the V. F. W.

State officers of the organization said special ceremonies were conducted simultaneously at each of the posts in the state Monday night, Sept. 28.

Warning investors against purchasing stocks and bonds which are not registered with the State Securities Commission, Robert Harris, commissioner, revealed that two Birmingham men, who 6 years ago sold several thousand dollars worth of an unregistered stock issue to Cullman county residents were sentenced last week to stiff prison term.

Francis Kohn, assistant attorney general has been engaged for some time in a sweeping probe of "blue sky" stock salesmen.

Announcement by Governor Bibb Graves that the five vacancies in the Leislature will be filled at the general election Nov. 3, instead of holding special elections at considerable needless expense to the state and counties, has served to upset the "dope" of political prophets.

The genial corp of reporters and State officials, the latter comprising both the "ins" and the "outs", were greatly upset by the Governor's announcement because they felt that the "Little Colonel's" decision as to the date of the elections might throw some light on the probable date of the much-talked-about extra session.

Five Vacancies

Since the Governor's order to fill the legislative vacancies in Madison, Chambers, Marengo and Shelby counties, another vacancy occurred last week with the death of Senator Alston Rogers, of the 10th Senatorial district comprising Pickens and Sumter counties.

The State Democratic Executive committee last Saturday endorsed the nominations of Schuyler Richardson, of Huntsville, to succeed the late Senator Shelby Fletcher, of the same city; Miss Sybil Poole, of Linden (Marengo county) to replace the veteran Clint Harrison, who recently resigned to accept an appointment on the Alabama Public Service Commission, and Robert Wallace, of LaFayette (Chambers), to succeed the late Reresentative J. W. Hollingsworth of Chambers. The party's executive committee of Shelby county is expected to nominate a candidate to succeed Representative Bob Reid, of Montevallo, effective October 1.

F.D.R. Campaign Fund

Pitt Tyson Maner, secretary of the finance committee of the State Democratic party appointed recently to solicit funds from loyal Democrats in Alabama in the campaign to assure the reelection of Franklin DeLano Roosevelt, finds his job a pleasant role of opening letters containing checks.

So many towns, cities and counties have oversubscribed their quotas that the committee officials are seeing green spots before their eyes—"Greenbacks". Maner explained.

The $1,000 quota for capitol officials and employees for which solicitation has been in charge of Lolyd Hooper, the Governor's recording secretary, was more than doubled before Hooper had received half the pledge cards.

Fifty-seven WPA workmen engaged in the construction of the Montgomery armory last week contributed $50 to the campaign, though it was pointed out that no effort was made to obtain subscriptions from the WPA organization.

Mr. Maner, Chairman Matt Boykin, of Mobile, and other finance committee officials, who have been touring the state more than a week report the same hearty response from the rural areas.

Gasoline tax collections for the month of September amounted to $1,085,591.68, compared with $957,528.31, for September 1935, according to announcement by Henry S. Long, chairman of the State Tax Commission. This brings the total collections for the fiscal year now ending to $11,233,185.42 compared with collections of $9,994,793.16 a year ago, and $8,859,517.88 for the year ending September 30, 1934.

The increased revenue accruing to the funds of the state and counties is attributable to two things:

1. Improved business conditions.
2. Adequate force on border patrol.

Just recently Mr. Long added two men to the field force when it was learned that a new "racket" ready to be launched by those who are seeking to defraud the State of revenue. This new move was planned at a time when the evaders thought their activities would be less noticeable due to the large volume of business now enjoyed by the gasoline indutsry.

A further comparison made by Mr. Long shows that the gasoline industry set a new high mark in the year just closed, measured in gallons as shown by records in the gasoline department. In the year just closed, that department collected taxes on 187,229,780 gallons, compared with 176,586,045 gallons on which the tax was collected in the year ending Sept. 30, 1929—the previous high.

Economic Highlights

Labor Day marks the end of summer and the beginning of fall, from the industrial standpoint. In an ordinary year, manufacturers speed up production after the seasonal summer drop, retailers build up inventories and the industrial machine swings into high gear after a few months of idling.

This year, in the face of seasonal influences, there was little summer recession — most businesses continued to make progress during the hot vacation months. And, as fall begins, all the signs point to continued improvement. The national electon notwithstanding, the recovery movement seems to be so strong that nothing can seriously dampen it. The feeling that the movement will be little affected by the results of the election is becoming more wilespread.

There is also a feeling that whether Landon or Roosevelt wins the course of the national government can not be greatly changed. It is probably true that Mr. Landon would make an effort to reduce taxes—but he, like the President, is pledged to Federal aid to farmers, the needy and others, all of which costs money. He has likewise gone on record in favor of a Federal social security law. Mr. Landon would not, according to all observers, be an experimenter—but there is a feeling that the next Congress will hold a check rein on any new major experiments by Mr. Roosevelt, in the event of his reelection.

Some recent reports follow, taken from various authoritative sources:

Automobiles: Production has dropped sharply, due to prearation for new models. Production will be high during the next few months, may touch record figures. There have geen no major changes in the automobile field, and new cars will not be much different from 1936 models save in details. Important development is a Packard entry in the low-medium price field where competition is keenest. Commercial car makers expect to sell 600,000 units this year, which will surpass 1929.

Steel: This basic industry is holding up extremely well, is operating at around 70 per cent of capacity with gains forecast for the immediate future. Steel prices lists are being revised upward by most big mills.

Textiles: This is another basic industry which is holding to high levels, will continue to better production and sales figures. The cotton mills are exceptionally active.

Utilities: Electric power consumption has surprised everyone—it is commonly said that surplus production capacity, on the average, may get too low this fall and result in big construction activities by the power compaines. The private utilities, as well as the government, are giving much thought and effort to speeding rural electrification developments. The rate level continues to gradually decline.

Railroads: Some lines are faced with the prospect of equipment shortages, due to stimulated freight business. Upshot is that rolling stock buying is on a high level, will provably jump sharply soon. The railroad profits are better than in any recent year, but still average less than 3 per cent afterpayment of fixed charges.

Air Transport: Is establishing new records, according to Business Week—for the first time in the industry's history, passengers carried exceeded 100,000 in July.

Employment: All surveys show that the unemployed rolls are decreasing, but slowly. And it is a sad but true fact that the rise in industrial production has not been accompanied by an equivalent percentage rise in workers employed. One interesting result of this is found in the political platforms. When the President started Federal relief for the unemployed, Republican spokesmen were biting in denunciation. Now Republican leaders, including Governor Landon, favor it, though they criticize New Deal methods.

Yes, the business picture is painted in bright colors these days. And the commentators are still wondering what effect that will have on the presidential race. Will the electorates give the credit to Mr. Roosevelt and endorse him—or will it regard the betterment as being inevitable, think that a Republican president could speed matters up still more? Surveys indicate that the election will be very close, with the betting odds favoring Mr. Roosevelt.

Thought for election day: In very few countries can the people express their opinion of the government—either informally or in their official capacity as voters.

To denounce Hitler in Germany means death or long imprisonment. To speak a word against Mussolini in Italy makes you the worst possible insurance risk. To mildly criticize Stalin in the U. S. S. R. gives employment to a firing squad. So it goes in Poland, Spain, Austria and elsewhere.

In this country you can say that Landon or Roosevelt is a "so-an-o" and no one will bother you.

CHAINS COOPERATE WITH FARMERS

A voluntary pledge by members of the Food and Grocery Chain Stores of America, operating more than 22,000 stores, to cooperate in elimination of the practice of using agricultural products as "loss leaders," is worth many thousands of dollars to Idaho producers, according to Carl L. DeLong, Executive Secretary of Idaho Vegetable Producers, Incorporated.

Selling potatoes as loss leaders, he added, had the effect of demoralizing the market. When the growers protested to the chains, they were given prompt attention. The pledge resulted. Producers of other vegetables and agricultural products will benefit equally, and the pledge marks a cooperative step between the farmer and his retail outlets.

This is indicative of a fact that deserves widespread dissemniation—our great merchandising systems, chains and independents, are eager and willing to work with and for producers. They realize that merchandising policies that are inimical to the welfare of producers are inimical to the country as a whole, and they are always ready to debate honest differences of opinion and to correct abuses.

This attitude was recently expressed by L. A. Warren, President of Safeway Stores, when he said: "We are very anxious to cooperate with farmers in all territories, not only because it is good business for us but because we number them as the largest group of our customers, value their patronage, their good will and their friendship."

WHY FORCE GOVERNMENT OWNERSHIP OF RAILROADS?

It is safe to say that the American people do not want Federal ownership and operation of the railroad industry. Yet it is possible that such ownership of our principal medium of transport—with all the inefficiency, waste of tax money and demoralization that would result—will be forced on the country, in spite of public disapproval.

The reason for that anomaly is simple, and has been pointed out by a number of observers, including railway officials. If the railroads continue to be stringently regulated and heavily taxed, while their competitors remain free or practically free from comparable burdens, they will be hamstrung in meeting the nation's needs. The lines will find it impossible to attract investors, some will go bankrupt and then the stage will be set for the government to step in to keep the trains moving.

In the first seven months of 1936, the railroads had the best operating experience in many years. Yet they earned only 2.3 per cent on their investment, at a time when other industries were earning six, eight, ten per cent and more. What over-optimistic observers call a railroad "boom" brings little profit to the lines' treasuries. Our unreasonable public regulatory policy is largely responsible for that.

The only way out is for government to regulate and tax all carriers alike—to subsidize none and penalize none. Regulations should be such that the railroads can more quickly meet changing conditions. The lines must be freed of the fear of injudicious and unnecessary class legislation, such as "full crew" and "train limit" laws.

Government acquisition of the rails would add billions to the public debt, and impose a terrific drain on the taxpayers. A fair deal for the railroads now will prevent that and enable them to further improve the highest standard of railroad service in the world under our American system of private enterprise, instead of switching to European theories of socialization of industry.

INDIVIDUALS CREATE WEALH

"Every step forward in economic progress since the world began has been through the voluntary efforts of individuals. The corollary is true: Political organisms have never created wealth-producing enterprises."—David Lawrence.

WHY HE IS FOR ROOSEVELT

To the Editor The News:

Here are some reasons why I shall vote for Roosevelt:

1. In the World War the United States treasury spent 90 per cent more than Roosevelt has during the past four years, but as long as it was a "poor man's fight and a rich man's war," the G. O. P. has not said a word regarding this particular feature.

2. Hoover spent millions of dollars for capitalism, claiming this expenditure would bring prosperity from "around the corner." The more he spent the farther away prosperity seemed.

3. As soon as Roosevelt started spending, "prosperity" emerged from "around the corner."

4. Roosevelt has advocated the past four years that labor is entitled to a fair living. If this system is carried out there will never be panics. Under Kaiser Wilhelm's reign, in Germany, he established a system, "Live and let live." Because of this there were never panics.

5. Under Hoover's administration how many people lost money in banks? How many, if any, have lost money in the banks under Roosevelt's administration?

6. I have been a naturalized American citizen since 1911, and never voted a Democratic or Republican ticket, because the Democrats used to be for capitalism, the same as the G. O. P.; since Roosevelt has been president, 95 per cent of the Democrats turned, all at once, on the labor side.

7. The G. O. P. spent $56,000 through the Liberty League for votes in Maine. I learned since 1904 one thing, anything capital is for I am against.

8. Roosevelt's New Deal drives the same distance as Christ's New Testament drove 2,000 years ago. Why is it that Christ called for a New Testament? Because the old Hebrew laws were not good for labor.

Rural Electrification
In Alabama
Early Days

By E. C. Easter

CHAPTER 1

RURAL ELECTRIFICATION is not a new idea so far as Alabama Power Company is concerned. It was one of the pioneers in rural electrification, and has been building rural lines since 1920.

In 1924 it began an intensive program of rural electrification and was one of the first, if not the first, company in the country to do so.

The policy of the Company was expressed thus:

> "If those who live in the rural sections, therefore, will do their part in advancing the use of electricity just as the users in the cities are doing, then the farmer will find the same service available to him throughout the state. We have not waited upon the full development of the use of electricity before bringing it to the farmer, but we are engaged in this pioneer work in the hope that its benefits and advantages will commend themselves as the work goes on and thus make electric service permanent in our rural sections."

In pursuit of that policy the Company has not only conducted a continuous Rural Line Construction Program, but since 1927 has had Agricultural Engineers assist the farmers in their problems pertaining to uses of electricity.

In those early days rural electrification was started as an experimental project in co-operation with the State Agricultural Experiment Station of the Alabama Polytechnic Institute, the National Committee on the Relation Electricity to Agriculture, and the Alabama Farm Bureau Federation. The Power Company constructed rural lines to serve as a field laboratory for the field investigations which were conducted by the Agricultural Engineering Department of the Alabama Polytechnic Institute. The National Committee on the Relation of Electricity to Agriculture assisted in planning the project and the Alabama Farm Bureau appointed a committee of farmers to assist and advise in connection with the plans and work.

This original experiment resulted in the necessary information to begin an expanded program of rural electric development throughout the territory served by the Company.

CHAPTER II

Down Highways and Byways; Thru Forests and Across Fields

The progress made in this development by the Company in the decade 1924-1934 is indicated by the increas from only 14 rural electric lines served by the Company in 1923, to 789 strictly rural lines—and 68 which started as rural lines but were changed from rural to urban classification—served in 1934.

The Company has constructed rural lines in every county in Alabama in which it does business. It has built over 3,000 miles of rural lines along the highways and roads of the state to provide electric service to approximately 15,000 rural and farm customers. In addition it has extended electric service to some 27,000 customers in small towns and communities that are considered "rural" by the United States Bureau of the Census.

As a result of the Company's rural electric development and the extension of electric service to the smaller communities of the state, electric service is generally distributed over the entire area served by the Company and a large majority of the farms within the area are within reach of a reliable source of electricity.

The extent to which this program was carried out, and the manner in which rural electric service in Alabama was extended even during depression years, will be discussed in our next advertisement, to be published in this paper soon.—Adv. Alabama Power Company.

This advertisement is the first of a series which has also been printed in booklet form. T. W. Martin, President of Alabama Power Company, Birmingham, will cheerfully send a copy to any interested person requesting it.

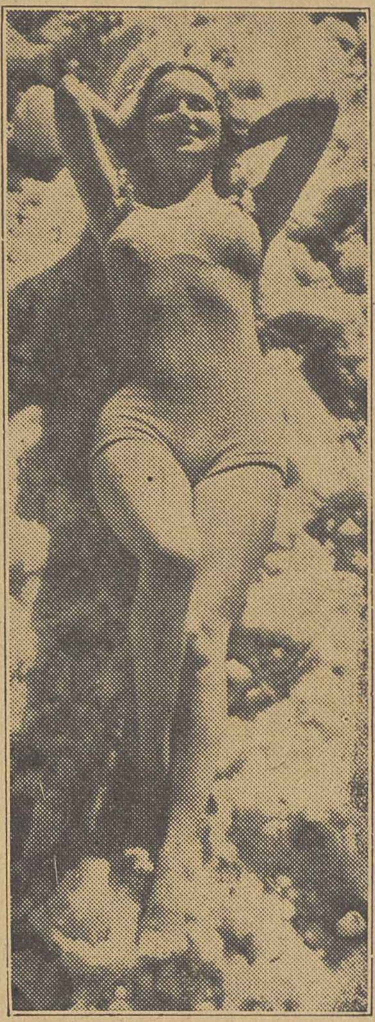
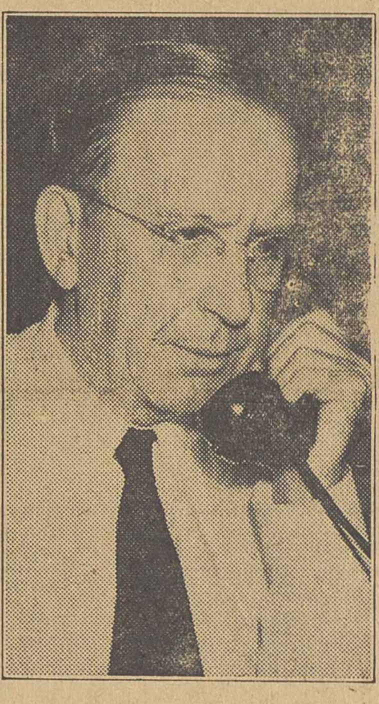
Why Snow Melts



Helen Ramsay, shapely Rangerette, cools herself in a snowbank at the Texas Centennial Exposition in Dallas. The snow was brought to the World's Fair from the mountains of Colorado for a snowfight between Rangerettes and Colorado Snowflake girls.

Heads World Fair



Harry Olmsted, for quarter of a century prominent in Southwestern business and civic affairs, is the new head of the Texas Centennial Exposition. He succeeds to the leadership of the $25,000,000 world's fair following the recent death of William A. Webb, general manager. Mr. Olmsted was for twenty years a director and for five years president of the State Fair of Texas.

Quite a Change

This fur parka, once worn by Admiral Richard E. Byrd at the South Pole, and which Corrine, sensational "Apple Dancer" in the Streets of All Nations at the Texas Centennial Exposition in Dallas, wears above, is quite, quite different from her dancing costume.

Mrs. A. E. Norwood, Mrs. R. L. Holcombe, Mrs. Fred Allen and Mrs. Leon Busby shopped in Birmingham Saturday afternoon.

Mrs. Charley Lake spent Thursday in Birmingham shopping.

Miss Ann George of Clanton spent Sunday evening as the guest of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Henry George.

Circus Comes To Birmingham Soon

Great Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Combined, With Pigmy Elephants and Pongurs From Africa, Col. Tim McCoy and Hundreds of New Foreign Features, Offers Epochal Program

With the most impressive and brillant seven-ring-and-stage program in its history the Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Combined Circus, which will exhibit in Birmingham Thursday, Oct. 15, offers this season, as a sensational super-feature, a herd of African pigmy elephants, the first ever to set foot on this continent. These tiny tuskers are not babies, but full-grown, middle-aged midget elephants, the rarest animals on the face of the earth. Accompanying them is a herd of miniature African pongurs, the world's smallest beasts of burden. The pigmy elephants have proven the greatest attraction the Big Show has ever placed before the public not even excepting its presentations in the past of the disc-lipped Ubangis, the giraffe-necked women from Burma, the sacred white elephant, Tom Thumb and Goliath, the sea elephant.

Among the scores of new features, to say nothing of the new importations from Europe and Asia including the incredible Naitto troupe, the Royal Bokara troupe, the great Frederico and a free running horse, pony and elephant liberty act of sixty members, is Col. Tim McCoy, the screen's most outstanding western star, at the head of his congress of rough riders of the world — Cossacks, cowboys, cowgirls, vaqueros, Sioux and Blackfeet warriors and Australian bushrangers. Col. McCoy, plainsman, cavalry officer in the U. S. Army Reserve and friend of the Indians, is the idol of Amercan boys and girls and he will be seen in both the main performances and the wild west.

The greatest Show on Eearth heads into this territory on four long trains of 100 cars, with 1,600 people, 7 herds of full-sized elephant actors, 1,009 menagerie animals and 700 horses. Its tented city covers 14 acres of ground. There are 31 large tents, including the world's largest big top, seating 16,000 persons.

This is the peak season for youth and beauty among the 800 world famous arenic artists with the show. In the air, in the three-rings, on the four stages and in the quarter-mile hippodrome tracks will be seen hundreds of pretty girls. In the 60-girl aerial ballet, the most beautiful mid-air display ever produced, there are beauties that evoke columns of newspaper comment wherever the Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Combined Circus exhibits.

Baseball Immortals Recall Days When Game Was Rough

BALLPLAYERS today — unlike those who starred through the last century from 1876 to 1926—must ever reserve true feelings from public gaze. They sit there in the shaded dugout, wishing somebody would get something started in the Old Timers' game.

Casey Stengel comes along, shoulders bowed under the toughest managerial job in baseball, head carried with proper pride because he has done his duty so well. A stout man attired in a sports costume that is a symphony of soft brown shades ambles up. They talk, unmindful of onlookers tingling with anticipation of conflict and the knowledge that this is another celebration of the birthday of the national game.

"'Member when I first saw you, Babe," says Stengel. "We were playing an exhibition in Baltimore and you were just a long, lean, gangling kid. I played back a bit further than I ordinarily would for a pitcher, but, after you'd taken a cut or two, you slammed one over my head.

"When I came back to the bench Robby, who never liked to lose one and was particularly anxious to win in Baltimore anyhow, hopped all over. 'Hell,' I says, 'that was only a bush league pitcher and ——.' Well, sir, that Robby really gets mad then. 'Lissen, young fellow,' he says to me. 'You get that stuff right outta your mind. When you see a guy take a cut like that, that ain't no pitcher even if he misses. That's——!'"

Casey Stengel

A sturdy, elderly man attired in Pittsburgh uniform, has seen them and is coming across the field as fast as bowed legs will carry him.

"Every time I see you you get me arguing again, Hans," says Babe. "You were a swell fielder and of course you could outhit him, but I never could decide whether you or Heinie was the greatest Wagner I've ever seen. That Heinie was a swell fielder. When I was pitching for the Red Sox we used to have a signal to catch runners off second base.

"We'd count one, two, three, then wheel and throw. Heinie'd be right on top of the bag and we'd nearly always get the runner."

"Boys sure were tough," interrupts Stengel. "Remember, when you were a rookie and tried to get a turn at the plate, how those veterans really would pour it on you."

"Sure, sure," says Wagner. "And if you forced yourself in and got a turn up there, like as not they'd break up all your bats."

"Yeah," it is the Babe's turn. "When I joined the Red Sox I got in at noon and pitched my first game at 3 o'clock. Won it, 2 to 1. Next day I was warming up and I let a ball through and it sort of nudged Smokey Joe Wood. Joe threw one back and if I hadn't ducked just in time it'd have brained me.

"So I challenged him but somebody stopped it then and after the game somebody stopped it again. So I told Bill Carrigan, who was manager, that I had something to say I wanted everybody to hear. So Bill says go ahead and I say I don't care much for anybody on the club and I'd be willing to take them on one at a time.

Babe Ruth

"Well, nobody come on and after that I never did have a bit of trouble on that team."

"Quite a man that Carrigan," says Stengel. "Remember the time I first came up to bat against you birds in the '16 series? Carrigan's catching back there.

"'You look like you might make a pretty fair hitter for a young fellow,' he cons me. 'Stand up there nice and everything like that. Don't want to make any mistakes about you. Guess we'll sort of have to pitch to you for a while and find out——.' Wham! I drop to the dirt just in time. Ernie Shore's out there pitching and he's thrown one right at my head.

But now more and more old timers have swarmed into the dugout. Burleigh Grimes, wearing a broadrimmed black hat as befits the manager of the Louisville Colonels; Charley Hargreaves, Al Mamaux, Frank DeHaney, Mickey Welch, Arlie Latham, Chick Frazier,

"The Man Who-o-o"

Tales and Traditions from American Political History

BY FRANK E. HAGEN AND ELMO SCOTT WATSON

THAT TWO-THIRDS RULE

IN 1832 a Democratic President decided to have his party's convention (the first it had ever held) renominate him and along with that decision he directed that the nomination of his running mate should be made by vote of two-thirds of the convention delegates.

One hundred and four years later a Democratic President decided to have his party's convention renominate him and along with that action he brought about the abolition of the century-old "two-thirds rule."

The man who originated that distinctively Democratic institution was Andrew Jackson. The man who ended its existence was Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Jackson had selected his secretary of state, Martin Van Buren, for the position of vice-president. The senate had only recently rejected Van Buren's appointment as minister to Great Britain and "Old Hickory" thought it would square accounts with that body to have the "Red Fox" preside over it. Also vice-presidents in those days usually succeeded to the Presidency through regular election and Jackson wanted Van Buren to be his successor four years hence. If, for any reason, the Democrats should try to rebel against the domination of their outgoing President, his control over at least one-third of the convention votes would enable him to block the nomination of any candidate whom he opposed.

So when his party prepared to hold its first convention in Baltimore in 1832, Jackson wrote out this resolution which he gave to one of his lieutenants to present to the delegates:

"Resolved, That each State shall be entitled, in the nomination of a candidate for the Vice-Presidency, to a number of votes equal to the number to which they will be entitled in the Electoral College under the new apportionment in voting for President and Vice-President; and that two-thirds of the whole number of the votes in the convention shall be necessary to constitute a choice."

The Baltimore convention was as completely dominated by Jackson as the recent Philadelphia meeting was controlled by Roosevelt so the delegates obediently adopted the resolution. During Jackson's lifetime several efforts were made to abolish the rule but all of them failed. After his death it became all but sacred and for the next hundred years the shadow of Andrew Jackson, in the form of this rule, hung over every Democratic convention, causing many a stormy session. But that was not inappropriate, considering the stormy career of the man who left his party that legacy.

GASTRONOMICAL

ONE of the best ways to win a Presidential campaign is to get a good slogan and din it in the voters' ears. A good slogan appeals to the instincts or to the emotions rather than to the intellect. Combine that fact with the old saying about "the best way to a man's heart is through his stomach" and it's easy to understand certain incidents in political history.

Back in 1840 when the Whigs were trying to elect Gen. William Henry Harrison over Martin Van Buren, the Democratic candidate, they raised the cry of "Van's Policy, Fifty Cents a Day and French Soup; Our Policy, Two Dollars a Day and Roast Beef." Would a hungry voter hesitate long between the two? Of course not!

But there was another gastronomical angle to this campaign. The "singing Whigs" set to the tune of "Auld Lang Syne" such words as these:

Should good old cider be despised
  And ne'er regarded more?
Should plain log cabins be despised
  Our fathers built of yore?
For the true old style, my boys!
  For the true old style,
Let's take a mug of cider now
  For the true old style.

So the thirsty voters who wanted "good old cider" joined with the hungry voters who wanted "roast beef" and together they elected Harrison.

Although the Whigs' slogan in 1840 was the ancestor of the "Full Dinner Pail" of a later era, that expression didn't actually come into use until 1896. In that year the opponents were Democratic Bryan and Republican McKinley. The tariff was the principal issue and the Republicans started out with such slogans as "Protection and Prosperity," "Free Trade and Pauperized Labor" and "Free Trade and the Destruction of Amerian Industries." But wise old Mark Hanna boiled them all down into the vote-getting slogan of the "Full Dinner Pail" and the American laborer who wanted one voted for McKinley and elected him.

Thirty-two years later the Republicans used a variation on the prosperity theme and their promise to the voters of "A car in every garage and a chicken in every pot" helped Herbert Hoover defeat Al Smith in the election of 1928.

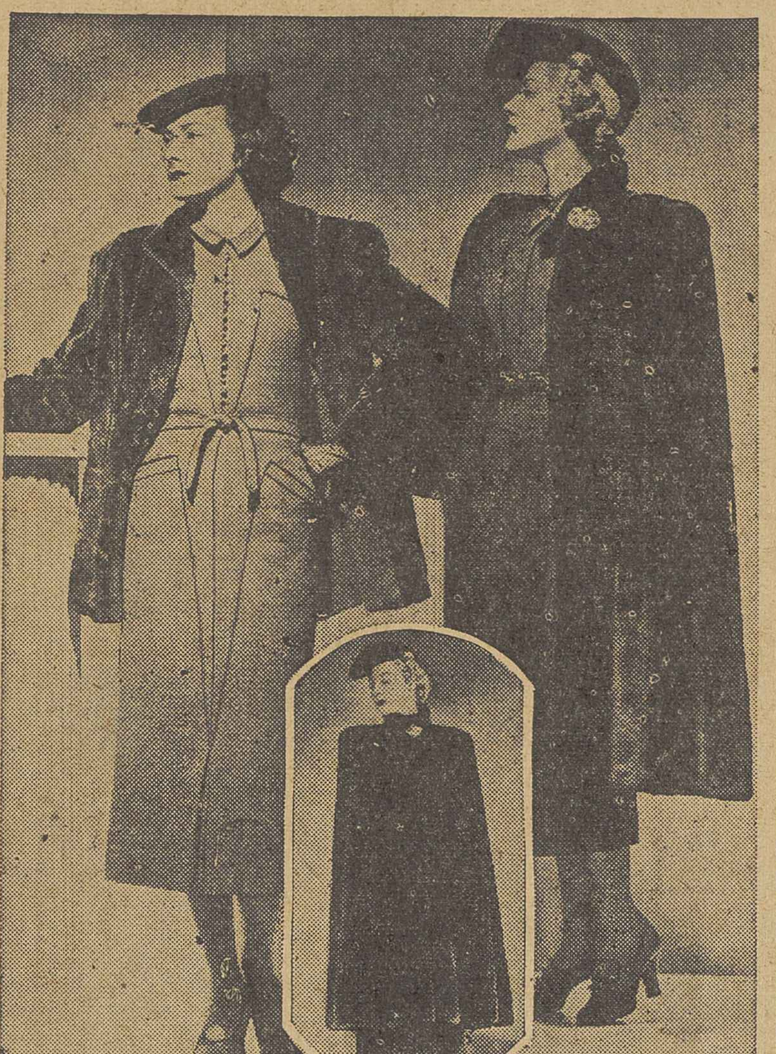
Wool-Fur Ensembles for Autumn

By CHERIE NICHOLAS



WOOL-and-fur ensembles for brisk autumn days are the most talked of costumes among new arrivals for brisk autumn days. Precious furs are combined with very fine sheer wools in stunning formal daytime modes, while popular sports furs such as kidskin and leopard are teamed with novelty wools in outfits that will add extra glamor to the football stadium and campus promenade this fall.

Fingertip and three-quarter length jackets and capes are favored in these costumes, as this type of styling plays up the smart contrast between gleaming fur and dull-surfaced wool used for the lining of the coat and for the accompanying frock or suit.

Capes appear in both swagger and formal styling in any number of the most striking wool-and-fur ensembles. The new square-shouldered slim capes that are making their appearance in advance showings are creating no end of excitement for they are so startlingly different from anything in the way of a daytime wrap seen in recent years. For real swank and a dramatic sensation a likely formula calls for a square-shouldered cape of safari brown Alaska sealskin which, when it swings back, shows a lining of sheer rabbit wool in matching brown, and a fitted frock of the same sheer wool with touches of gold lame at the high collar and tailored cuffs—a true aristrocrat this in fashion's realm. The belt buckle of the frock and the neck clasp of the cape are of handsome hammered metal. See this patrician two-some pictured to the right in the illustration (same cape closed, in tiny inset).

Soft rabbit woolen in a muted green shade styles the nicely cut and detailed frock shown to the left. The identical rabbit woolen also lines the gray moleskin swagger coat of this smart fall ensemble. Which reminds us that style experts are all agog in regard to gray this season, especially in respect to furs. Silver lame accents the buttoned narrow gilet and edges the pocket tips. As further attraction the gilet has a row of lame-covered tiny buttons. The diagonal seaming of the dress is noteworthy.

French women adore black and this season they are again expressing a preference for it by wearing costumes of stunning black broadcloth with a touch of high color and with lavish fur. In this category is the formal afternoon costume suit that boasts a fingertip box coat of black kidskin with standup collar and banding trim at cuffs and pockets of the same soft black broadcloth that is used for the jacket lining and a straight cut skirt. A cherry red blouse and a saucy fitted kidskin cap edged with flaring black net completes the ensemble.

Then there is the costume that is very swagger indeed for sportswear and for informal daytime wear in town that features a three-quarter length flared coat of gray kidskin worked cleverly in swirling lines. The coat lining and a two-piece frock in waistcoat styling are made up in oxford rabbit wool with multicolored polka dots scattered gaily over the surface An accompanying kidskin hat is worn far back on the head. It is just such all-gray costumes as this that are taking the world of fashion by storm this fall.

LACE OVER METAL

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

All the rich fabrics have a leading place in first fall showings, and the picture is one of luxury. Special importance is placed on metal cloths, heavy nubby silks and woolens and above all new patterns in lace, in such variety as has not been seen before, even in these last few seasons when lace has been foremost in vogue. The redingote dinner gown pictured combines the high-style features of rich fabric and the accepted silhouette. The foundation is heavy metal brocade.

BRIGHT SASHES AND FLOWER CLUSTERS

To be inspired by the men's clothes of the Directoire period and at the same time achieve a most feminine looking collection is certainly no common feat. This was brilliantly demonstrated at the Bruyere fall showings where smart Parisiennes were given a glimpse of beautiful fashions - to - be for autumn and winter.

One of the most important items of this collection was the introduction of sashes, such as the elegant beaux of the Directoire used to parade in. They are black on black dresses, and have the ends embroidered in vivid colors. They look graceful and give a brilliant note to the dark day and evening gowns.

Louise Boulanger places flower clusters on the sleeves this time in many of her dresses, encircling the arm.

Dignity Is Latest Note in Fashions for Campus Wear

Fall styles for the school and college miss are going sophisticate. It's no longer smart to cultivate a look of studied carelessness. Swagger "collegiate" clothes are giving way to dignity and formal tailoring. Sweaters are worn with pearls, and formal velveteens are breaking into the classroom. The college lass will be up on her curled pompadours and her smoky shades of polish for the nails. No more boyish bobs or back-to-nature fingertips.

Off-the-face bonnets ready for the big game are dressed up with tiny veils. Bonnet toques are smart in velvet with matching velvet bags. These contrast with the color of the suit: American beauty with slate blue, capucine or caramel with black or with brown, raisin with dark green.

Dressy, fur-trimmed suits are the leading theme for football weekends, with fur jacket costumes a close second.

STAR DUST

Movie • Radio

By VIRGINIA VALE

AT LAST something long predicted has happened. A real battle has been described over the air while it was going on. And never has there been a more exciting broadcast. H. V. Kaltenborn, the news commentator, stood on the roof of a hotel in Hendaye, France, and described the fighting going on just across the bay in Spain; his words and the rumbling of the big guns were clearly heard in this country.

They're building a new movie theater in New York, and equipping it for television, though we're told that television won't really be practical for some time to come.

Kay Francis

Would you trade Warner Baxter for Dick Powell, or vice versa? Twentieth Century-Fox think it's a good deal. The former will get the latter for "On With the Dance," for which elaborate plans are being made. This is only the second time Powell has been allowed to stray from the home lot; the first time it was for "Thanks a Million." And in return Warner Brothers will use the very popular Mr. Baxter as co-star with Kay Francis. Warner Baxter still remembers the time when things weren't going too well for him, and as a result of playing the role of a theatrical producer in "Forty-second Street" for Warner Brothers his star rose again.

Funny, isn't it, the way a star's popularity ebbs for a while and then, if he's lucky, the tide turns and he becomes a box-office name once more. There's the case of George Bancroft, who was at the top for so long. Then, apparently, he slipped. If you saw "Mr. Deeds Comes to Town" you'll recall him in a small part which he played superbly. As a result of that Columbia will star him again, this time in "Racketeer in Exile."

When you see "Swing Time" you'll see Victor Moore, once one of the best comedians on the stage. In fact, that's what he was till he worked in "Swing Time." For some years he has had Broadway in the palm of his hand. And he was content to have it that way; had no yearnings for Hollywood. Years ago he made pictures — about fifteen years ago, to be exact. About forty short comedies and several feature length pictures were chalked up to his credit, before he declared that he'd never make another movie unless something revolutionary came along. Apparently the Rogers-Astaire picture was that something, for he has signed a long-term contract with RKO.

Helen Hayes has chosen the story for her series of broadcasts. It is "Bambi," a novel by Marjorie Benton Cooke, which tells of the adventures of a small-town girl who comes to New York to go on the stage. It was published about twenty years ago—if you can remember that far back you may recall it.

Rudy Vallee will go to work in Hollywood again in October—the picture being entitled "Mr. Melody." And gossipy folk are renewing the talk about a romance between him and Alice Faye.

—★—

In "Sing, Baby, Sing" Adolphe Menjou gives one of the best performances of his career. Alice Faye, the heroine of the picture, has improved greatly. The story is obviously based on the romance of Elaine Barrie and John Barrymore.

If you want to get in touch with Kate Smith, who'll be back on the air waves soon, write to Kated, Incorporated; the address is 1819 Broadway, New York city. That's her business name, and she employs no less than 55 persons. Some attend to charities, some to the professional basketball team which she owns, three give their time to her fan mail, others look after her radio and theatrical affairs and there's a special department devoted to helping young artists.

ODDS AND ENDS . . . Joe E. Brown, back from his London triumphs, will make a picture that Douglas Fairbanks made years ago, "Flirting with Fate" . . . Harry Horlick, of the air waves, has a collection of autographs which includes those of many of the Russian nobility who perished in the revolution . . . Phil Baker's favorite broadcasts are private ones; he loves to talk about his two-year-old son . . . "The Gorgeous Hussy" is a grand picture, with Joan Crawford doing fine work, but it certainly mangles the historical facts on which it's supposed to be based . . . Paramount's "The General Died at Dawn" is one of the most thrilling of current pictures . . . And you certainly don't want to miss "The Texas Rangers."

Lesson for October 4

THE MACEDONIAN CALL

LESSON TEXT — Acts 16:6-15; Romans 15:18-21.

GOLDEN TEXT—Go ye therefore, and teach all nations. — Matthew 28:19.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Paul's Wonderful Dream.

JUNIOR TOPIC—God's Call to a New Continent.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—A Cry for Help.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The World's Need of Christ.

The roots of American life, cultural and religious, reach back into the European soil on which our forefathers dwelt. The lesson before us is therefore of peculiar interest, for it relates the first step in the carrying of the gospel into Europe, and ultimately to America.

Paul, the missionary with a pastor's heart, felt constrained to go and visit the centers where he had ministered on his first journey. As he proceeded he was providentially hindered and led by the Holy Spirit to Troas. Here his next "step" seemed for a time to be a "stop," but soon God in a vision called him into Macedonia—and the gospel had come to Europe.

It is of interest to note that Paul, as he thus began his second missionary journey, was

I. Obedient to the Spirit (Acts 16:6-12).

He had certain plans in mind. He set out with a purpose, but he was willing to have his own itinerary changed as the Holy Spirit led. It is significant that the guidance was negative as well as positive. The stops as well as "the steps of a good man are ordered by the Lord" (Ps. 37:23). Christians will do well to remember that providential hindering circumstances may be as much the leading of God as the heavenly vision. We are to be obedient to any guidance He gives but we are not to be merely passive, but actively submissive to His will. Paul was about the Father's business, not idly waiting for the speaking of a voice from heaven. It is to such a man or woman that the Macedonian call comes even in our day, only now it comes from China, India, South America, or Africa.

II. Faithful in Testimony (vv. 13, 14).

Paul, with his companion Silas, Timothy who had joined them at Lystra, and Luke (note that the "they" of v. 8 becomes "we" in v. 10) came to Philippi in Macedonia, but they found no Macedonian man waiting for them. Had they been mistaken in their vision and call?

True missionaries are not thus easily discouraged. They had come to be fishers of men. The fisherman does not expect the fish to come to him. He goes after them. Paul soon discovered that there was a place of prayer at the river side, evidently a gathering place of devout Jews for worship. There he met the man of Macedonia who turned out to be a woman. For some reason the men were absent from the place of prayer on that all-important Sabbath morning. They were undoubtedly the ancient counterpart of our present day men who are "brothers-in-law" to the church, these foolish men who seem to assume that a bit of "religion" second hand through wife or children will suffice.

Lydia was a woman of distinction, business ability, and of high moral character. But Paul knew that even good people need to be saved. He spoke the truth of God. She accepted the message as God opened her heart, and at once she entered into

III. Fellowship in Service (v. 15).

Lydia proved herself to be one of that noble succession of women who have served Christ and the church. She and her household shared in the ministry of Paul by their Christian hospitality, thus helping forward the missionaries. Observe carefully that she was not saved by her works, but that her works followed naturally after her salvation.

Turning now to one of the epistles of Paul we look at his exposition of certain

IV. Fundamental Missionary Principles (Rom. 15:18-21).

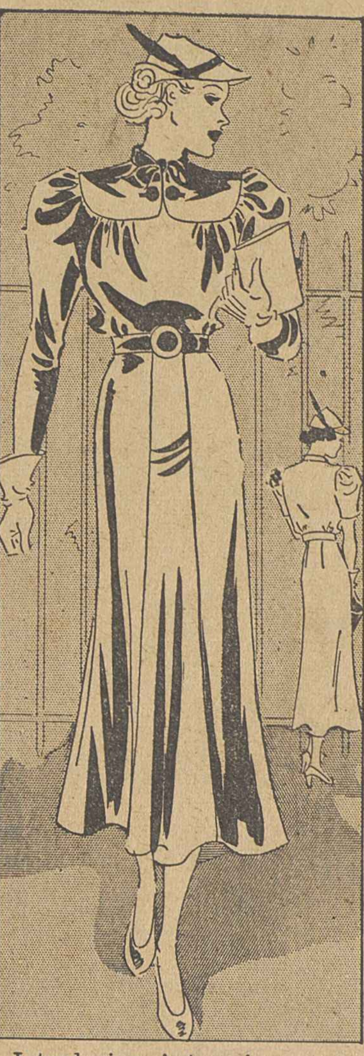
Those things which Christ had wrought (Paul took no glory to himself) through him Paul had consistently directed into fields where no one else had preached the gospel.

The spirit of the missionary of the cross is that of the pioneer, pressing ever onward, taking new land, not duplicating the work of others, not jealous of their success, not seeking comfort or glory. Men need the gospel; they are lost without it. Let us press on into the yet unoccupied territory.

Our Place in the World

Whatever the place allotted to us by Providence, that for us is the post of honor and duty. God estimates us not by the position we are in, but by the way in which we fill it.—Tyron Edwards.

Black Satin Frock for Autumn Wear



Introducing Autumn's smartest frock. Snug at the waistline and flared below, a youthful interpretation with snap and dash.

The blouse has a clever feminine touch in its soft gathers that peep cunningly from beneath the yoke, which is topped by a narrow standing collar that ties in a dainty knot. To please your whim, omit the necktie and substitute a neckerchief, or ascot tie; then again forget about the buttons, open the yoke, press down the sides forming a V and trim it with a bright bouttonaire. You may have your way about the sleeves, too, for the pattern offers both, long and short. A graduated gore reduces the sweep at the hipline and gives the much desired flare to the hem.

Barbara Bell Pattern No. 1949-B is available in sizes 12, 14, 16, 18 and 20. Corresponding bust measurements 30, 32, 34, 36 and 38. Size 14 (32) requires four and three-eighths yards of 39-inch material, four and one-fourth yards with short sleeves. Price of Pattern, 15 cents.

Send your order to The Sewing Circle Pattern Dept., 367 W. Adams St., Chicago, Ill.

Most Dynamic Love Team Of Film History

Teaming of the world-wide popular Joan Crawford with Robert Taylor, most sensational "find" in the history of Clark Gable, in the new Early American romance, "The Gorgeous Hussy," is considered Hollywood's master-stroke of casting for the year.

This picture is on the Strand program for Thursday and Friday this week.

Not since the celebrated love team of Garbo and the late John Gilbert has there appeared on the cinema horizon a romantic team so full of romantic allure and emotional power as that presented by the coupling of the dynamic Miss Crawford and the handsome and virile Taylor.

In the new picture, based on the best-seller novel, "The Gorgeous Hussy," by Samuel Hopkins Adams, and directed by that master-megaphonist, Clarence Brown, who has guided Miss Crawford through such successes as "Chained, "Chained," "Lettie Lynton" and "Sadie McKee," the new love team have roles that give them every opportunity for outstanding dramatic performances.

Miss Crawford, in the title role, plays that gorgeous hussy, Peggy O'Neal, daughter of a Washington innkeeper in the Jacksonian period of America's history. A beautiful and flirtatious creature, Peggy O'Neal trips from one romance to another, becomes both the toast and the scandal of conventional Washington, and in the end rises to prominence as the First Lady of Democracy.

Taylor, as "Bow" Timberlake, officer on the S. S. Constitution, is the man who sweeps her off her feet and into a marriage which proves a gripping test of Peggy O'Neal's character and convictions

NO MERCHANDISING MONOPLY

Some observers, asked for their opinion on the chain store question, have said that they believe the chain system is sound and beneficial—but that it may in time breed monoply, and therefore it may be necessary to regulate the chains in some manner.

Fortunately, past experience shows that there is small chance of any group, even though it wishes to, achieving a monoply of the necessities of life. Today chain systems face the stiffest kind of competition—not only from independents, but from other chains. If any chain attempted to effect an unjustified increase in prices it would see its customers disappear overnight—the store next door or down the street would get the business.

Furthermore, when a retail business becomes too big it loses efficiency. It develops more and more overhead costs. And small retailers then find it easy to undersell the "big fellow".

It is possible that there are good arguments for reulation of chain systems. But it is a fact that regulation, necessarily administered as it is by political groups, can defeat its own purpose—protection of the public. It tends to become inelastic and overly stringent. Thus, regulation of chains, instead of keeping prices down might drive prices up, to the detriment of the consumer.

Free competition is the best regulator of all. Proff of that lies in the fact that the average chain grocery system's net profit is only three or four or five per cent. It must operate on an extremely small unit profit, and trust to big turnover to keep it out of the red. In late years, the independents have grown in number and size, and they are givin the chains plenty of competition. The is no monoply in merchandising, and there won't be.

SOUND PRINCIPLES ESSENTIAL TO THE FARM COOPERATION

The benefits of agricultural cooperation are great—but a cooperation must operate on a sound basis if it is to survive.

For example, since 1897 there have been 5 cooperative milk marketing organizations in the Chicago area. Two of them failed because they opposed reasonably sanitary regulations. The third failed because of internal dissension. The fourth failed through insisting on a higher price for milk than the market would stand.

The fifth alone remains. It has followed sound marketing policies and has fully complied with health regulations. It has not been endangered by serious internal troubles. It has not tried to inflate prices to unjustified levels. And it has succeeded.

A similar situation exists in other parts of the country, such as New York, where the Dairymen's League Cooperative Association has learned from the failure of other co-ops and has made a fine record of achievement. No cooperative can pursue unsound economic policies and keep in business long.

SAVING LIVES AND DOLLARS

During Fire Prevention Week, which is to be observed from October 4 to 10 this year, every effort will be made to instruct the public in the elimination of fire hazards. Newspapers and periodicals will publicize the week. Insurance organizations will give every effort to making the week a success. Fire prevention organizations will send speakers about the country. Fire marshals and fire departments will cooperate.

But all of this work, no matter how aggressive and well planned, will fail unless the public does its part to cooperate and save itself from fires.

Fire prevention, like accident prevention, is largely an individual matter. It is impossible to do away with the multiple hazards found in the average home unless the owner takes an interest, and it is impossible to eliminate industrial fire hazards unless factory managements help to the extent of inspecting their factories and enlisting the interest and aid of workmen.

During the week, every person in this country should give an hour or two to learning the simple lessons that, if remembered and followed, will prevent most fires. It will cost nothing—and it may pay tremendous dividends in life and property. Some of the worst fires start from hazards that could be corrected in five minutes.

Every town government should carefully inspect its public buildings, especially schools, during the week. Cases have been found where new and expensive school buildings presented a large number of grave hazards. Fire in a school is the most horrible of all—as a long list of disasters that snuffed out thousands of young lives witnesses.

Remefber the date—October 4 to 10. It should be regarded as both a duty and a privilege to take advantage of the week and join in the war against fire.

AMERICANS ARE THRIFTY

Thirty-five years ago, but one person in 10 possessed a life insurance policy.

In 1935, every other person was a life insurance policyholder.

That is largely due to increase in national income and stimulated earning power of workers. But the life insurance industry itself has contributed a great deal toward making this remarkable record possible—a record that is not even approximated in any other country.

Policy contracts have been made more liberal and inclusive, and have been designed to cover a far greater number of human needs and potential future exigencies. And, equally important, late years have witnessed a great improvement in the calibre of the life insurance agent. The modern agent isn't out to sell "any old policy," but to prepare an insurance plan that fits his client's needs.

Through life insurance, 65,000,000 foresighted Americans have taken a long step toward the goal of social security.

Cost Of So-Called Comptroller Measure

Section 3, Article 2.—"The Legislature of Alabama may from time to time by general or local laws change, merge, alter, consolidate or abolish county offices or the functions of office in Jeferson County, except Probate Judge and Sheriff and may change modify or transfer their duties except those conferred by the Constitution of Alabama, and the Legislature may create new or different officers to perform the services hitherto performed by those officers or offices which may have been changed, merged, altered, consolidated or abolished.

(3) "And the Legislature by general or local laws may revise and change existing laws relating to the assessment or collection of revenue in Jefferson County for the purpose of increasing the efficiency or lowering the cost of such collection."

Mr. Voter of Alabama:

If government of the people, by the people and for the people is to continue, it is vital that this pernicious amendment be voted down on November 3. Vote for popular government by marking a big "No" against Amendment No. 1.

Universal Credit Company Great Expansion Program

Upon Completing its eighth year of exclusive service to the great Ford Market, Universal Credit Company has in operation offices in 100 cities from coast to cosat, serving in a convenient and courteous manner the many thousands of time buyers of Ford cars and trucks.

More than 60 of these offices have been opened since late summer of 1934. Additional operating offices are planned for the remainder of this year and further expansion will follow where necessary during 1937.

This expansion program has been undertaken to keep pace with the great public acceptance of the Ford V-8. Throughout the country Ford dealers have come to look upon Universal Credit Company as an outstanding sales adjunct and many outstanding dealers have stated that UCC low cost, flexible plans for the Ford buyer will play an even more important part in future sales than in the past.

The outlook for Ford dealers for the remainder of this year and for 1937 is assured with the highest type of sales leadership indicated on every hand. Universal Credit is proud to play a part in bringing the great Ford products to constantly increasing thousands of the buying public by making possible the purchase of Lincoln, Lincoln-Zephyr, and Ford V-8 cars and trucks, out of income, at new low costs in the industry.

During the comparatively brief period that has elapsed since the Universal Credit Company was established, that institution has financed the purchase of Ford transportation by the motor-buying public of America in the amount of more than $2,000,000,000, serving a total of more than 3,000,000 customers of Ford Dealers.

Ever since Universal Credit Company commenced operations, over eight years ago, financing costs on Ford products have been materially reduced. It is estimated that time payment buyers of Ford cars and trucks have thus been saved in excess of $75,000,000 through the lower financing costs made available by the Authorized Ford Finance Plans of Universal Credit Company. These lower credit costs have been and continue to be constructive contributions toward national economic recovery.

When asked regarding the outlook for 1937, Mr. Ernest Kanzler, president of the Universal Credit Company, recently said:

"I consider our expansion program the best expression of our confidence in recovery and in an expanding business future. We are going ahead with our expansion plans without hesitation. We have increased our offices to over 100 located in all sections of the United States to meet the growing demands of the public for Ford cars and for our credit services.

"These are, more than ever, days of building goodwill through efficient service and courtesy in the credit industry. Our company has always served the Ford Dealer and Ford time buyer with these factors uppermost in our mind. Throughout all our growth," said Mr. Kanzler, "We have always kept before us our original statement of purpose made several years ago when we were first organized, in which we said: 'In the performance of our many duties, we can remember always that beyond our contribution to the advancement of organized industry, UCC is at the some time contributing substantially to the happiness and contentment of society.

"'By extending credit to every deserving person in the nation, we are enabling him to purrhase Ford produrts at the lowest possible cost and are thereby bringing greater health and happiness to a large group of American eople, heads of families as well as their children.

"'In the process of transition from the crowded city to the healthy country districts, UCC is aiding the American family to establish itself with economic advantages in more desirable locations and thus helping to raise the standard of American living conditions.

"'Because we are making a moral and social contribution, and because we have such a fundamental mission and purpose, we are confident that the company is on the road to further achievement and success.

"'We are indeed fortunate that such worth while purposes are being accomplished and are bound inseparably with our daily tasks. With these thoughts in mind, individual success cannot help but follow the inspired and painstaking efforts of every person in Universal Credit Company.'"

Universal Credit Company serves Ford Dealers exclusively and UCC Plans are available through Towery Motor Company, the local authorized Ford Dealer in this community.

Opposition To Ellis Is Report

REPORTED OPPOSITION BY REPUBLICANS IN NOVEMBER

(From Birmingham Post)

L. H. Ellis of Columbiana, chief lieutenant of Governor Graves in the 1927 Legislature, is slated to become administration floor leader of the House in the coming special session—if any—it was learned today.

Mr. Ellis, who served in the Senate in the first Graves administration and led the bloc which drove through a tax program that increased state revenues millions of dollars annually, is the nominee of the Shelby County Democratic Executive Committee for the House vacancy caused by resignation of Representative R. A. Reid.

Faces Fight

He is facing a fight in the November General Election, according to reports from Shelby County. A movement is reported under way to put a Republican or independent candidate in the field on a platform calling for "no additional taxes."

A meeting of Shelby County anti-administration groups is slated this week-end to select a candidate. Shelby is one of the Alabama counties that is "close" between Democrats and Republicans.

A week ago administration leaders at Montgomery indicated there would be no special session until next year, but today the word went out that determined efforts are being made for a session shortly after next month's election.

Graves Majority Claimed

The Governor's leaders completed a check of the legislature and reported to him that the administration could count on more than 70 votes in the House and a clear majority in the Senate for new levies to ease the educational, health and social security problems.

Jeff Beeland of Greenville, head of the Consumers' Anti-Sales Tax Association, who was in Birmingham, expressed belief these estimates of administration strength were "much too high." He said the economy forces would be able to hold their lines virtually intact.

A report on school finances by an auditor employed by the economy forces will probably be ready for release next week.

$60,700 Spent By RFC In Shelby

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation, during the period from February 2, 1932, to June 30, 1936, distributed the sum of $60,700 in Shelby County, according to information received by Judge John D. Petree, State Director for the the National Emergency Council for Alabama.

Disbursements in Alabama aggregated $31,568,044.60, not including amounts that went to various government agencies, or relief grants to the State of Alabama as authorized under the Federal Emergency Relief Act of 1933.

The principle purpose for which the money was disbursed was as follows: Loans to banks and trust companies, includinp receivers, liquidating agents and conservators, $9,313,223.91; subscriptions to preferred stock of banks and trust companies, including receivers, ed by preferred stock in banks, $3,148,575; loans to building and loan associations, $110,188.04; and an additional amount of $1,381,419.65 to mortgage and loan companies.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation gave assisttance to industrial and commercial businesses in Alabama totaling $325,700. Self-liquidating proects were aided in the sum of $74,500, while the State received a disbursement of $4,211,688 for relief and work relief.

Total disbursements made in the United States during the same period not including amounts disbursed in the form of relief grants to states amounted to $6,012,771,180.71.

The loans made to operating banks in this state have been slightly more than 94 per cent repaid. Those to insurance companies have been repaid in full.

Stars, Songs, Dances, New Film Shirley's Own

It's always an event when Shirley Temple comes to town, but according to advance reports, when "The Poor Little Rich Girl," the tiny star's new Fox hit, opens at the Strand Theatre Thursday, it will be something in a way of a celebration, an epoch, a new milestone in entertainment.

For, definitely, the talented Temple miss is said to give the performance of her life in this new film and, to top it off, she's surrounded by a veritable gallery of Hollywood's brightest stars, including Alice Faye, Gloria Stuart, Jack Haley and Michael Whalen.

Add to the star and the cast a modern, stirring, romantic story and five bubbling new song hits by those ace composers, Mack Gordon and Harry Revel, and you have a few of the reasons why "Poor Little Rich Girl" is being hailed so highly.

Shirley, of course, plays the title role. She is seen as the daughter of Michael Whalen, a wealthy young business man, who is far too occupied making money to devote much time to his daughter.

Shirley persuades her daddy that she should be sent to boarding school where she can associate and play with other little children. Whalen agrees, but instead of attending to the task himself, delegates Sara Haden to accompany wanders off. The busy sidewalks her to the school.

Waiting for the train, Shirley of New York lure her on to adventure.

She is entranced by Tony, the organ grinder, and follows him to his home. Tony already has a big family but the new "bambina" so wins him that he lets her stay with his other children.

In the meantime, Miss Haden has been run over by an automobile and during the following days, Shirley's absence goes unreported.

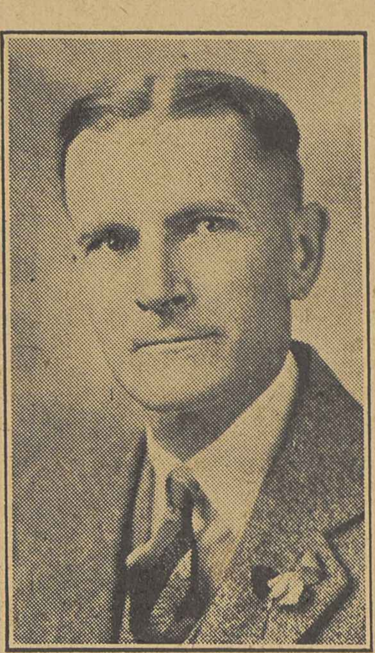
Jack Haley and Alice Faye, an out-of-work vaudeville team, notice Shirley singing and dancing. Haley is inspired with the thought that she is just what the act needs and despite Miss Faye's protestations, she is taken into the act.

The trio are successful in a radio audition and are hired by Claude Gillingwater.

Whalen has met Gloria Stuart, and the two have fallen in love. She persuades Whalen to listen to Gillingwater's new radio program and he is astounded to recognize Shirley's voice coming over the air.

Whalen doesn't just dash down to the broadcasting studio and bring Shirley home, for several other complications enter into the plot and there is a whirlwind of exciting events before the thrilling climax is reached.

OUR NEW MAYOR



DR. CHARLES T. ACKER

Dr. Acker was elected Mayor of Montevallo without opposition on September 21. He assumed the duties of the office Monday night. He will serve a term of four years.

Having served as a member of the Council two years, during which time he was acting Mayor, in the absence of Mayor Lyman, Dr. Acker gained a knowledge of the town's affairs that will stand him well in hand for approaching the duties of the office in future.

At the first regular meeting held on Monday night the new town officials of Montevallo were duly installed, as follows:

Dr. Charles T. Acker, Mayor; Dr. Hallie Farmer, C. G. Sharp, J. A. Brown, S. M. Mahan, and F. P. Givhan, Councilmen.

CHINESE REVOLT IS BACKGROUND OF FILM ROMANCE

The awakening of China's teeming millions to battle against age-old oppression is the basis of a thrilling romance of intrigue and adventure, "The General Died at Dawn," which opens on Sunday at the Strand Theatre.

With Gary Cooper as a dashing soldier of fortune who links his fate with the oppressed, and with beautiful Madeline Carroll as the woman whose charms are used by a scheming war-lord to destroy him, "The General Died at Dawn" was based on factual background.

Enmeshed in the web she helped to prepare, Miss Carroll finds her admiration for her victim blooming into love. She offers her life in return for his freedom. But their destinies are worked out as they could be only in the modern, war-torn Orient.

Sign Petition For Telegraph Office

A petition has been circulated in Montevallo, in which practically every citizen engaged in a business or profession has requested the Western Union Telegraph Co., and the Alabama Public Service Commission to establish an office of the telegraph company in the business district.

The petition is held for a time at Wilson Drug Co., in order that any who have not had an opportunity to sign it, may do so. Ask for it at Wilson's and put your name on it, if you have not already done so.

New Pistol Toting Law Now Effective

Chief C. M. Gardner has been appointed deputy by Sheriff C. H. Fore to register persons and issue licenses for carrying pistols under the new state pistol law which went into effect October 1.

Mr. Gardner will have charge of this work in this vicinity. No one will be permitted to carry a pistol on his person, except in cases where a man is handling payrolls for a firm or corporation, and proves a good reputation. Then he will be issued a license.

Only Sheriff Fore and Chief Gardner have authority to register and issue pistol licenses in Shelby County. They can issue same only to residents of this county.

The public sentiment is in favor of this law, which is believed to be a good one. Sheriff Fore says he is going to see that the law is enforced, and will make it hard on all offenders.

At a recent meeting of the membership committee the members accepted as their goal, not only to enroll members but to encourage participating ones and urge them to attend the meetings so that they may be informed.

In order that the association may function successfully it is necessary to have a greater part of the homes represented. The committee plans to visit the homes in the near future and we trust you will give them a sympathetic hearing. The dues are 50c a year, less than five cents per month, and we ask you to attend one meeting a month. The program committee has planned a good program with interesting speakers.

Baptist Church

What kind of Christian are you? The pastor will discuss that question Sunday morning. At the evening service he will speak on the question, "Whose Marks Do You Bear?"

Lost, Strayed or Stolen. More than 200 Baptists who live in Montevallo were not in Sunday School or at the worship service last Sunday. We have Sunday School at our church every Sunday at 9:45. Worship services are held at 11:00 a.m., and 7:30 p.m. The young people meet at 6:45 p.m. in the Baptist Training Union. CIVIC CLUB

The Montevallo Civic Club held its regular meeting at noon Wednesday. Dr. H. W. Vaughan presided. Attendance at the meeting was above the average. Indeed it was excellent.

Dr. J. Alex Moore, chairman of the Hospitality Committee, reported that he is developing his program for next meeting, in which he will present to the club the new men members of the faculty of Alabama College; also other faculty members (men) who are not members of the club.

Mr. Charles G. Dobbins extended an invitation to the club to take part in the various activities which will be at the College Saturday and Sunday of this week. It is a celebration of the fortieth anniversary of the founding of the institution; and the annual alumnae home coming.

L. E. Shaw, chairman of the membership and attendance committee, reported that his committee will endeavor to make the next meeting a 100 per cent attendance of the Club Members.

The program for Wednesday was in charge of the committee on commercial development, Mr. R. A. Reid, Chairman. The guest speaker was Mr. D. A. Thomas, president of the Montevallo Coal Mining Co. Mr. Thomas' remarks were made very aptly fitting to the subject of community development. At the conclusion he was heartily cheered when he announced that from now on he expects to be a resident of this community.

Bleakley and Lehman to Fight for New York Governorship—Communist Candidate Browder Jailed in Terre Haute—France Devalues the Franc.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union.

REPUBLICANS and Democrats of New York state met in convention at Albany and Syracuse respectively, selected their state tickets and started on a hot campaign. The Republicans entered the fight under a new leader for they named William F. Bleakley of Yonkers, supreme court justice, for the governorship. The fifty-two-year-old jurist prepared to resign from the bench and take command at once.

William F. Bleakley

Col. Ralph K. Robertson of Buffalo was nominated for lieutenant governor, Nathan D. Perlman of New York city for attorney general and John A. May, Gloversville, for comptroller.

The convention at its evening session heard Col. Frank Knox, Republican vice presidential candidate, in a strong attack on the New Deal.

The Democrats re-nominated Gov. Herbert H. Lehman, and his candidacy was warmly espoused by President Roosevelt, who went to Syracuse to deliver his first speech as an avowed candidate. The President took occasion to deny again that he seeks Communist support and alleged that issue was a "red herring" dragged across the trail by his opponents.

FRANK KNOX, President Roosevelt and Al Smith, all on the air the same evening, provided a political feast for radio listeners. Colonel Knox, speaking at Pittsburgh, reiterated and substantiated his former assertion that New Deal financial policies were imperilling savings accounts and insurance policies. Mr. Roosevelt, not so eloquent as usual, defended the spending policies of his administration. He, too, spoke at Pittsburgh. The high spot of the evening came at the close of Al Smith's address to a women's organization in New York city. He had been treating of the New Deal and its leaders with biting sarcasm and wound up with the dramatic declaration:

"I firmly believe that the remedy for all the ills that we are suffering from today is the election of Alfred M. Landon."

Whereupon arose a shout that literally echoed throughout the land.

EARL BROWDER, Communist party nominee for the Presidency, achieved the distinction of being the first Presidential candidate to be jailed since Eugene V. Debs was incarcerated during the World war. Browder was scheduled to make a campaign address over the radio from Terre Haute, Ind., but when he arrived in that city he was nabbed by Chief of Police James C. Yates and put in the hoosegow on charges of vagrancy and "for investigation." Held with him were Seymour Walden and Waldo Frank, both of New York City; Charles Stadtfeldt, secretary of the Indiana Communist party, and Andrew Remes of Indianapolis. All were released the next day.

Chief Yates, who had the backing of Mayor Samuel O. Beecher and the Terre Haute Merchants' association, said neither Browder "nor any other Communist" would be permitted to air their party doctrines over the local radio station; but David J. Bentall of Chicago, Browder's attorney, slipped into the broadcasting booth and delivered the speech his principal had prepared while Yates fumed outside the locked door.

JUST as the maritime unions on the Pacific coast were about to go on a strike that would have tied up the great shipping industry, the trouble was averted by the signing of a fifteen-day truce between the employers and the workers and the nominal extension for sixty days of working contracts negotiated after the strike of 1934.

The truce provides that maritime unions at the expiration of the period, October 15, would either agree to arbitration of issues involving wages and hours which are not settled, or relations with employers would be broken completely.

The negotiations, handled principally by the Department of Labor's ace trouble-shooter, Edward F. McGrady, will continue during the fifteen-day period of peace.

IN WHAT was said by court attaches to be the first important ruling anywhere on numerous suits filed by packing companies and others against government collection of the "windfall" tax, Judge Robert C. Baltzell of the United States district court at Indianapolis, overruled the government's motion to dismiss a suit for an injunction filed by Kingan and Company, meat packers.

The company seeks to enjoin federal government officials from collecting a $2,500,000 "windfall" tax, levied in the revenue act of 1936, to recover processing taxes previously assessed under the AAA but later ruled invalid by the Supreme court.

Judge Baltzell said that he found various "unusual circumstances" creating a doubt as to the possibility of the packing company's having adequate remedy at law in some other court. Because of this, he said, it is imperative for his court to grant the packing company the right to sue in federal court. The decision is said to be directing but not controlling in other similar cases in the district.

Dismissal of the injunction suit was sought by the government on the ground there is no authority in law for restraining collection of a tax.

APPEALS filed by the national labor relations board offer the Supreme court five new opportunities to pass on the constitutionality of the Wagner labor relations court. The board asked the high tribunal to review rulings in a case involving the Jones & Laughlin Steel corporation of Pittsburgh, two involving the Freuhauf Trailer company of Canton, Ohio, and two affecting the Friedman-Harry Marks Clothing company, New York. The labor relations board lost all five cases in lower courts.

FRANCE at last came to the conclusion that it could no longer support the franc and Premier Leon Blum's government decided to abandon the gold standard and devaluate the franc to between 4½ and 5 cents. The Netherlands, Latvia and Switzerland immediately determined to follow suit. To save the world from a currency war, the United States, Great Britain and France entered into a "gentlemen's agreement." The exact nature of this agreement was not revealed, but the United States promised to employ its $2,000,000,000 stabilization fund to head off the feared struggle. Certain it is that each of the three nations reserves the right to depart from the pact if and when its own interests require such a course. An expected outcome of the now general dropping of the gold standard may be an international conference for stabilization of world currencies. This probably would be held in Washington.

Leon Blum

Blum called a special session of the French parliament to pass the necessary legislation, and his plan was given grudging approval by the finance committee of the chamber of deputies. Its adoption by the chamber, where the "popular front" has a big majority, was easy, but a fight developed in the senate.

The dangerous political situation ended when the senate passed a substitute measure to revalue the French currency but denied the government's original request for full power to control price rises. The government approved the substitute bill, withdrawing its opposition to senate objections to particular clauses in the original measure.

The price-fixing problem was solved in this way: After devaluation, the government may be given the right to control prices for six months by issuing decrees. These decrees, however, must be submitted to the national economic council for ratification.

From the Chicago Journal of Commerce is taken this plain statement as to what France's action means to the ordinary American citizen:

"Reducing the amount of gold represented by one franc will mean that the average American will be able to travel cheaper in France than for the last two years. French wines should be cheaper in this country and women should be able to buy French perfume for less. That should be true of nearly everything else that France exports to the United States—unless this country hikes the tariff on French exports or French prices boom out of proportion to devaluation. Indirectly, franc devaluation may keep Americans from war as the act may be a wedge for currency stabilization the world over and more brotherly relations between all nations. But don't lose any sleep over it unless you are getting an income from someone in France. In that case, since it will take more francs to buy dollars, your income will be cut. Everyone should have an interest in developing sound foreign trade and if franc devaluation starts the ball rolling in the right direction the eventual hope for development is free foreign exchange movements. It's necessary for one country's money to be negotiable in all capitals of the world if trade is to flow freely. That's the big goal."

THE government wound up its affairs for the first quarter of the 1937 fiscal year with a deficit of about $530,000,000 compared with a deficit of more than $880,000,000 for the same period last year.

Receipts in the July 1-Sept. 28 period were $1,119,196,888, compared with $986,888,265 last year, while expenditures were $1,635,909,816, against $1,815,219,471. General expenditures were $1,047,514,060 this year, compared with $939,977,775 last. Recovery and relief expenditures amounted to $588,395,755, compared with $875,241,695.

Income tax collections for September will amount to about $287,000,000, against $231,000,000 last year, and for the first quarter of this year approximately $358,000,000, compared with $278,000,000. Miscellaneous internal revenue netted the government $617,307,783 in the July 1-September 28 period, as compared with $517,986,451 last year.

The public debt at the end of the month stood at $33,831,790,000, compared with $29,423,624,000 on the same date last year.

GEN. FRANCISCO FRANCO'S furious Spanish Fascists reached the ancient city of Toledo and drove out the government troops with shell and bayonet. The rebels fought their way through strong defense and as they reached the center of the city there was a great shout from the Alcazar. Out of that battered citadel rushed the ragged, battered and half-starved cadets who had withstood a terrific siege for almost ten weeks. This heroic garrison joined the insurgents in charging the defenders and finally the Socialist troops scattered and fled southward over the Tagus river. Their way to Madrid was blocked by Franco's columns.

Gen. Franco

Fascist bombing planes made several destructive raids on Bilbao, killing a large number of the citizens, smashing innumerable buildings and damaging two warships in the harbor. The enraged government sympathizers demanded that Fascist hostages held in the city be executed in reprisal, and finally a mob of anarchist amazons swarmed aboard a vessel on which many hostages were kept and brutally slaughtered 210 of them after putting them to the torture. The savage women were on their way to a prison to kill 60 woman hostages when they were dispersed by civil guards.

That the Spanish government realizes its precarious situation is evidenced by its proclamation ordering Madrid to prepare for a siege, followed by a manifesto calling on everyone, women as well as men, to rally to the defense of the capital.

POLAND'S government began the confiscation of the lands of the nobility and large estate holders by seizing 60,000 acres from tax indebted properties. The land will be divided among the peasantry. This is the first step in carrying out a radical project that has been shelved for ten years.

Jules Poniatowski, minister of agriculture, had a hard fight before the president and cabinet indorsed the decree. Much pressure was brought to bear on the government and confiscations were reduced almost 50 per cent from the amounts suggested by the minister.

More than one-third of the sequestrated land is in east Galicia, the remainder in the east and south of Poland.

SHANGHAI dispatches say the Chinese government has rejected the latest demands of Japan and countered with a list of demands of its own that include recovery of Manchukuo and a halt to increases of Japanese troops in North China. Negotiations between Japanese Ambassador Shigeru Kawagoe and Chinese Foreign Minister Chang Chun were at a standstill. The Nanking government through its embassies informed all the powers of the seriousness of the stiuation and the probabiltiy of international complications unless Japan was checked.

HIGH ranking officers of the navy and army and many federal officials were present at the funeral of Rear Admiral William S. Sims in Washington and his interment with full military honors in Arlington national cemetery. The war time commander of America's naval forces in European waters died suddenly in Boston of heart attack. During his long years of service he was a severe critic of naval matters, and, he was given credit for developing gunnery in the navy to a high point of excellence.

MAJ. GEN. FRANK PARKER, who won fame for his distinguished service in the World war, has retired after forty-six years in the army and becomes vice president and general manager of a Chicago chain of department stores. General Parker was graduated from West Point, served through the Spanish-American war and was commander of the First division of the A. E. F. in the World war. He was cited twice for gallantry in action, was awarded the distinguished service medal and was promoted to the rank of major general. Since the war he has commanded two of the four tactical armies of the United States.

We Borrow a Billion

Washington.—Mr. Secretary Morgenthau lately has gone into the money market to borrow approximately one billion dollars He asked the banks and other people having idle money to purchase four hundred millions in new government bonds and at the same time asked them to extend loans totalling about $550,000,000 that matured on September 15. The maturing securities, of course, do not take new money out of the money market, but it is borrowing just the same despite the technical name of refunding.

The Treasury's action in borrowing such a huge sum at this time came as a surprise. To many financial authorities, in fact to most of them, there was no need for borrowing additional funds at this time. It was a circumstance in which, as far as most observers could see, the Treasury had idle money in sufficient amount to meet the needs for the next several months.

Aside from the fact that the Secretary's action results in an increase in the public debt by the amount of new money borrowed, it is a matter deserving more than passing attention — much more attention than Treasury borrowings heretofore. The reason is that the administration is again piling up in the Treasury a huge amount of idle funds. As nearly as I can calculate the results of the September borrowings, the Treasury will be left with a mere $1,700,000 in unused cash. Of course, to the Roosevelt administration which has dealt only in billions, this sum may not appear important. Mr. Morgenthau said it was necessary to have these funds available because of "unsettled conditions" abroad. But that answer, to me, does not suffice.

I recognize that most people find little interest in discussing Treasury financial policies. I know from the type of letters that I get from those who do me the honor to read these reports that the subject of Treasury finance seems far removed from anything in which they can possibly have an interest. But notwithstanding those facts, I feel the matter should be discussed in every section of the country because it directly touches every taxpayer; and that is of vital importance.

Here is how it affects the taxpayer and when I refer to the taxpayer I refer to every individual in this country, because all of us are paying taxes either directly or indirectly: When the Treasury arranges a cash balance, it provides funds upon which the various government agencies may draw in accordance with congressional appropriations. To that extent it is like money you deposit in a bank. But otherwise it is quite different. The cash balance in the Treasury lies idle. It brings no return, no profit to anybody.

But it is important to remember that there are only two ways in which the Treasury can get money for this cash balance, namely, by borrowing or by taxing you and me. During the Roosevelt administration the Treasury has borrowed about $2.12 for every dollar it has collected in taxes. The result is a gigantic public debt.

There is another result, however, that is not as apparent to individuals. Since the Treasury is borrowing money it has to pay interest on what it borrows. You and I are paying this interest in the form of additional taxes. So, therefore, not alone are we being taxed for the money that is spent and which must be repaid, but we are being taxed to pay the interest on idle funds.

Mr. Morgenthau's reference to unsettled conditions abroad directs attention to what is happening in Europe and Asia and the link that exists between those conditions and our own.

* * *

Conditions Abroad

President Roosevelt lately has said on several occasions that he did not like to be away from Washington more than four or five days at a time because of those unsettled conditions. Every one knows that our foreign friends are rearming. I believe every one realizes as well, however, that each of those foreign nations is in a position where it cannot initiate hostilities. At least, each one is in a position where very great provocation must occur before it can justify the starting of a war in the eyes of nations like our own.

Any one who wishes to examine those unsettled conditions will find at the very bottom two types of propaganda. One comes from Russia, the other from Germany. The two types of propagandists, while violently hating each other, are preaching exactly the same sort of thing. They are telling the world that if the world wants peace it must align itself with one or the other of the two schools of thought, depending upon which type of propaganda you read. With circumstances like that going on abroad, it seems to me that we as Americans ought to realize fully—and ought to defend—the type of government that we have. Neither Stalin nor Hitler preaches our type of economic thought. In view of that, Americans surely ought to tighten their girdle and take a definite stand for the preservation of our traditions, our practices, because it is under those traditions and practices that our nation has grown great.

American Doctrine

I have been a little bit disappointed that Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Secretary Hull of the State department have not preached the American doctrine at more length. I am sure pronouncements by them in condemnation of communism or fascism would find a hearty response at the hands of the American people.

It is to be recognized that changes take place in world economic and political thought. They are taking place in our country. More are coming. But I condemn the practices of communism and fascism because they have ruined the lives of all excepting a few people in every nation where those policies are operative. They will destroy the independence of thought and action, the happiness, that we have come to know in this country as a natural right.

In negotiations with foreign powers, Mr. Roosevelt has not been fortunate. I think it is generally agreed among observers that the President fumbled the ball when he failed to take advantage of the splendid opportunity to deal with France and Great Britain when he first became President. Likewise, I know there are many students who are convinced that the President by his own acts broke up the London economic conference in the summer of 1933 and with the collapse of that London meeting went any hope for an early recovery from the depression on a world basis.

The war debts question still hangs in mid air. The recognition of Russia I am convinced turned out to be a fizzle. The far eastern program, if there was a program, has yielded nothing because it must be said in truth we have not cemented our friendship with Japan and there are factions in China that no longer respect the United States.

* * *

France Off Gold Standard

Within the last few days we have seen the collapse of the French currency. We have seen the President join with Great Britain in co-operating with the French in their difficulty. Yet, it is apparent to anyone who will review the financial and economic history of the last three years that the French have made a great effort to remain on the gold standard—and they had no help from us until they could no longer stand the strain.

It is always easier to use hindsight than foresight. It is easier as well to call attention to mistakes three years after those mistakes have been made than to take a bold stand when the errors were first discussed. These facts, however, do not in any way lighten the responsibility that was ours as a nation in 1933.

I refer again to the London economic conference and the events prior to it in 1933. There were plenty of men in the United States at that time who said openly that the United States should move quickly and take leadership in world stabilization of currencies. It appeared for a time that President Roosevelt would take that action but instead he is charged with having broken up the London conference because he failed to assume that leadership which he could have had.

That brings us to the link between the United States and the conditions of Europe. Mr. Roosevelt, through Secretary Morgenthau, says now that the United States will stand with Great Britain in helping the French. The question naturally arises why did not the United States stand with France in 1933 when France and a half dozen other European nations wanted to remain on the gold standard for its currency.

Personally, I have never seen any reason why the United States should have devalued its dollar as was done. If we had not devalued, one thing is quite certain: Maintenance of the gold standard by the United States would have continued to strengthen the currency of those countries in Europe, including France, that desired to continue that currency basis.

I have heard it said as well that if the United States had remained on the gold standard instead of devaluing its dollar, Great Britain would have been able soon to have restored her currency to a gold basis. Certainly, the British could not have remained off of gold as long as they have if gold coin were allowed to circulate in the United States. I believe no one can forecast at this time exactly what the results of the French devaluation will be.

One Human Shipload
A Floating Microcosm
Intelligent Mrs. Widener
Mrs. Astor and Dr. Carrel

On Board the Normandie. — The ancient writer made this admission: There be three things which are too wonderful for me, yea, four which I know not:

The way of an eagle in the air; the way of a serpent upon a rock; the way of a ship in the midst of the sea; and the way of a man with a maid.

Arthur Brisbane

What would that inspired writer say of this modern ship in the midst of the sea? The biggest ship he ever saw could be hung from the ceiling of the dining salon on this boat or tucked away in a corner of the sun deck, disturbing no one.

A modern ocean liner, Queen Mary, Normandie, Rex or Europa, as it crosses the ocean indifferent to waves and winds, is a small world in itself, a microcosm, with this little earth playing the role of "Cosmos." If this ship should sail to some new, uninhabited island of Utopia, it might supply everything necessary to start a new civilization better than the one invented by Sir Thomas More, who has been made a saint since he wrote "Utopia" to amuse himself and had his head cut off for his Catholic faith.

On board, with his friend, George Bacon, is Myron Taylor, head of the United States Steel company, biggest industrial unit on earth. He would supply the material for skyscrapers, ships, railroads and machinery, plus organization.

Simon Guggenheim would tell them how to make corporations profitable, by "holding on."

Various newspaper workers on the boat would be ready to start "the New Utopia Gazette"; Floyd Gibbons for war correspondent, plus members of the Edward H. Butler family, that own the Buffalo News, and the able Abraham Cahan, known to more New Yorkers than any editor in America, with one exception. And, most important to newspaper prosperity, the ship carries Mrs. George D. Widener of Philadelphia, who has traveled up and down in every corner of the earth and says to your narrator:

"Mr. Brisbane, I have always wanted to meet you, because I read your articles every day."

There spoke the nucleus of a highly intelligent reading public.

Mrs. Vincent Astor, on her way back from a grouse moor in Scotland, would resume her real job of promoting deep music, finding co-operators in the passenger list—Madame Flagstadt, the admirable Norwegian singer, a deep soprano able to make Isolde more impressive than Wagner ever imagined her. On board also is Arthur Bodanzky, ready to conduct the "New Utopia orchestra." Mayor LaGuardia of New York will tell you how earnestly Mrs. Astor talks to him about her plans for a great musical center. But Mr. LaGuardia will never know what shudders would sweep from Ward McAllister's pineal gland to his Achilles tendon if he could hear Mayor LaGuardia say of the young lady in question, "That Mrs. Astor is a nice, serious girl, thoroughly in earnest."

To make this list complete, P. G. Wodehouse is on board, one who could and should describe this shipload of "important humanity" going nowhere in particular, for no reason in particular, some in the steerage, some "tourist" and some, with cabins on the sundeck, whose names break up passenger list continuity to make room for the magic words "maid, valet and chauffeur."

The contest between modern ships for the "Atlantic blue ribbon," or ocean championship, held at this moment by the British Queen Mary, supplies most amazing proof of modern engineering efficiency. Consider that, in a race across 3,000 miles of water, the Queen Mary, after being beaten several times by the French liner Normandie, beat the latter and took the Atlantic blue ribbon by a margin of less than half a mile, across 3,000 miles of ocean.

The oftener you cross, the more clearly you realize that the ocean is a great deal too big for our small planet. It is all one ocean—Atlantic, Pacific, Arctic, Antarctic, all touching—water covering three-quarters of the earth's surface.

Consider the Pacific; take your world map, Mercator's projection, fold it over from Asia toward New York and beyond. It will cover the United States, the Atlantic ocean and all Europe to the Bosporus.

—11—

After a painful night, Jane rose early to go again into town. In the yard she encountered McCrossen.

"Ridin' out?" he asked.

"I am."

"I'll saddle up for you."

"Have the horses been fed?"

"Yep."

"I'll saddle up myself."

"Your father rode over to the pastures with Page this mornin'," volunteered McCrossen, walking alongside Jane. She made no answer; indeed, she rather quickened her pace; her companion stepping up his own.

"Your father left word I was to ride out with you, if you went off the ranch."

"I don't need anybody to ride out with me."

"I don't care a rap what the old man says. I'll ride out with you if you want me. If you don't, say so."

"I don't."

"O. K."

Jane undertook to mount.

"Look here, girlie!" said McCrossen suddenly. "Why don't you like me?" Without further preface than a laugh he caught her in his arms. "I'll do anythin' to please you."

Jane, struggling angrily, stood pinned. He laughed immoderately at her efforts to tear herself away. She rained blows on him with her fists. "Let me go!" she panted. "I hate you."

Still laughing, he tried to talk down her anger. She got away from him. "Hate me as much as you like, Janie, but I'm goin' to have you. I'll kill any man that tries to take you away from me," he continued coolly.

Panting, and furious with anger and fear, she got into her hand the riding whip dangling from her wrist and lashed him across the face and head.

As she dashed away, McCrossen drew paper and tobacco from his pocket, rolled a cigarette, and licking the paper's edge as he looked after Jane riding toward Denison's ranch, struck a match, lighted up, and started for the bunkhouse.

Jane, her heart beating tumultuously, galloped swiftly along the trail, completely upset by McCrossen's bullying and the worry in her breast.

Instead of heading first for town, she rode over to Denison's ranch.

The sight of the ranch-house ruins was a shock, even though she tried to steel herself against it. A man down near the corral was leading one of Denison's horses to the barn.

"Are you Ben Page?" asked Jane abruptly.

"Yes'm."

"How did this happen, Ben?" she asked sympathetically.

"You tell," he returned sullenly.

"Tell me all about it, Ben. I'm from Gunlock and a friend of Bill's."

He regarded her with suspicion. "Must be the only one he's got over there," he growled.

Jane swallowed. "I hope it isn't as bad as that," she exclaimed. "What caused this dreadful fire, Ben?"

"How the hell should I know?"

"Don't know what caused the fire, eh? Well, you ought to at least know how to be civil to a lady. Since you don't, I advise you to come over and take a lesson from your brother Bull." Jane galloped swiftly away, more than ever upset mentally. Once in town, she sought Dr. Carpy.

She encountered him in the street. They walked together back to his office.

"How are you, Jane?" asked the doctor.

"I just rode in from Bill's. He has Ben Page there looking after things, and the insolent blockhead wouldn't even answer me civilly when I tried to find out how it happened—so I rode away into town."

"That fire has stirred Bill up terribly—out of all proportion to its importance. It maybe was done to annoy him."

Jane looked frightened. "Why, doctor! What do you mean? Do you believe the ranch house was set on fire?"

Carpy was taken aback. He had said more than he meant to. "Why, no one can tell for sure about that, of course. Some drunken Indian might have set it afire."

"To annoy Bill?" asked Jane incredulously.

"You can't tell," persisted the doctor, gathering courage as he proceeded.

"How is he coming on, doctor?"

"All right, so far. It'll take time to tell the story, Jane, just's I said."

"Could I see him this morning, do you think?"

"If it was anybody else on earth, the answer would be no. If you go over, don't stay long, and tell Sister Virginia it's O.K. with me—back here at twelve to take lunch with me—promise?"

"I promise."

"And remember"—Carpy raised the forefinger of his right hand—"mum's the word."

The utter absence of authentic details concerning the cause of the fire called for a more active effort on the part of the imagination; and this in turn indicated its stimulation at Jake Spotts' bar. So the old guard were gathered on this morning still discussing the "outrage."

Among those grouped at the inner end of Spotts' long bar were three veterans of the frontier. Henry Sawdy, calm, portly, pulled reflectively at his long-horned mustachios and fingered his well-filled glass without raising it to his lips. John Lefever, likewise full-bodied as old port, whistling "sotto vokey," as Sawdy described it, twirled his glass and listened for the next fire theory offered by Jim McAlpin, the thin, nervous, weather-beaten-faced liveryman.

Toward this trio there now sauntered Bill Pardaloe.

"What's the last news, boys?" he asked in a general appeal.

"Just like the first and that's nothin' at all," said McAlpin. "Give me the same, Oscar, with more bitters. Hold on, boys! By the Lord, if I'm alive, there comes Ben Page now."

"Hey! Ben! This way," cried Sawdy as the stumpy bowlegged cowman walked down the barroom towards them. "Come along and wet up."

"Well, Ben," demanded Sawdy, when the glasses were set down, "what about the fire?"

"I jumped through the window."

The longer the group tarried the more resentful they grew at the thought of Bill Denison's being burned out. It was at last decided to let Sawdy and Pardaloe ride to Denison's together to make an "official investigation." They took the Reservation trail and halfway out met Bob Scott riding into town.

The two adventurers halted Bob, explained their errand, and asked him to join them.

Scott wheeled his horse around, and the three galloped for Denison's ranch.

That night, late, Sawdy, Lefever, McAlpin, Pardaloe, and Ben Page met.

"Boys," began Sawdy, gravely, when the doors were carefully shut and outer approaches examined, 'it's just's we figured—dirty work out at Bill's ranch. It was lucky Pardaloe and I picked up Bob Scott. He's magic on trailin'. If it hadn't been for Bob, Pardaloe and me'd been scratchin' around Bill's place yet. There wasn't a thing to show where or how the fire started—the job was too well done. But what couldn't be coveerd up was the ground sign in the yard. Who'd been there last? Lucky for us, there wa'n't many horses'd been runnin' around the yard. Bob spotted three; one was Music, Bill's horse—Ben's been ridin' her. The other two were Gunlock horses, boys. One that Jane rides—that was fresh track. But there was older track—of a Gunlock horse."

"Gunlock horse?" echoed Lefever.

In the murky light of the lantern Sawdy pulled his mustachio deliberately. "A Gunlock horse," he repeated. "And it was the sorrel gelding that most of you've seen. Bob knows every horse in the hills by his hoofs, and as luck would have it, he himself traded the sorrel to McCrossen about a year ago.

"That horse was over to Bill's place maybe thirty-six to forty-eight hours before Scott read the sign. The man that rode that horse over to Denison's night before last knows a lot about who started that fire. Who rode it?

"That horse, boys, has been rode by Barney Rebstock since he's roosted over at Gunlock with his old pal and boss, Gus Van Tambel. After Bob fixed on the sorrel, Pardaloe sends him up around by Gunlock to scout the question, who rides the sorrel. Then Pardaloe and I rode straight back to town to send out Carpy. You see, Bob could appear up at Gunlock casual-like and ask questions and nobody would think anythin' about it. Bob rides in and out there often.

"Of course, he had to be careful. But there's two honest men over there, Bull Page and the Chink. Bob set down in the kitchen for a cup of coffee—hadn't had no breakfast—and buzzes the Chink. Finally he comes around to the sorrel he'd traded in to the ranch, and asks who rides it now. 'Rebstock,' says the Chink.

"Then Bob waits for Bull Page. He asks Bull whether he thinks there's any chance to get McCrossen to trade the sorrel back to him. Finally he asks Bull who's ridin' the sorrel. Bull says since Barney Rebstock come back, he asked McCrossen if he could fasten onto the sorrel and McCrossen said yes."

Sawdy paused again. There was a general silence.

"That's the story, boys. No, hold on! Barney and Van Tambel left the ranch at daylight this mornin' for the pastures, with Barney on the sorrel!"

"Story enough," grunted McAlpin. "But," he continued, "Barney's pretty cute. If he was goin' to start a fire, wouldn't he take somebody else's horse?"

"I thought that way for a while," intervened Pardaloe. "But Barney can be careless, too—you know that, boys. So I asked Bob to find out, was Barney out that night of the fire; was the sorrel out. Old Bull is a nighthawk around Gunlock—you know that. He may have suspected what was in Bob's mind, but he wouldn't give a whoop anyway. He hates Barney like poison. He told Bob that Barney was the only man outside the bunkhouse that night. And he heard him ridin' away."

Sawdy stopped the general discussion. "Boys, what you goin' to do?"

Pardaloe rose. Some experience in frontier courts of this kind had convinced him that it was time for a sheriff or an ex-sheriff to be moving on.

"Run along, Bill," added Sawdy. "We'll see you later—maybe."

With the ex-sheriff gone, Sawdy called for opinion as to what, if any, action should be taken.

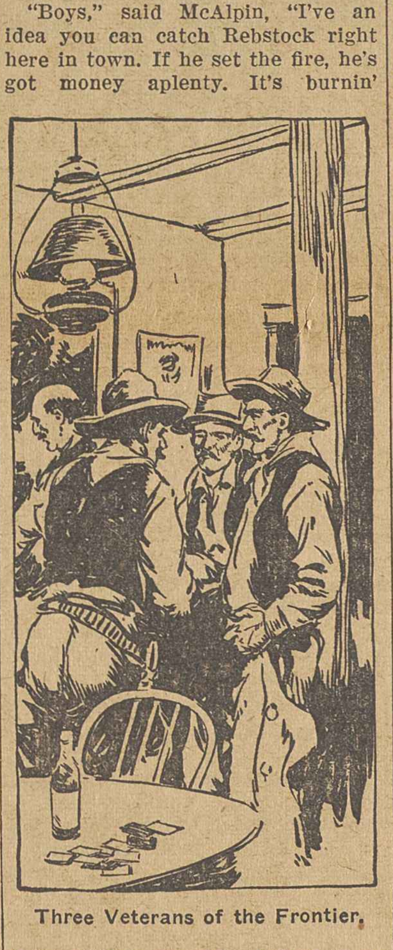
"If any!" exclaimed McAlpin, echoing the words scornfully. "Man alive, you know it ain't a question of 'if any' action. It's a question of what kind of action."

"Got a rope here, McAlpin?"

"Got 'em big and little, old and new."

"Don't misunderstand me, boys," interposed Sawdy. "I want to string him up and down a few times to get the story out of him. A little argument like that'll bring it."

"Boys," said McAlpin, "I've an idea you can catch Rebstock right here in town. If he set the fire, he's got money aplenty. It's burnin' holes in his pockets. Catch your cat in the Red Front saloon; call him out the back door; set him on a horse and ride him down to the bridge—that's gentlemanly and private."



Three Veterans of the Frontier.

"It's the first time in your life, but I guess you are right, McAlpin," said Sawdy. "We've just got to set the rope watch on Barney."

Ten minutes later found the worthies concealed—except McAlpin, detained at the barn—lined up at Jack Spotts' bar.

"Have you seen Barney Rebstock this evenin'?" asked Lefever, casually.

Spotts' face darkened—he, too, hated Barney. "I ain't seen him, and don't ask nothin' like that to make me swear. Boys," he added, addressing the group, "you know Panama spent a whole year tryin' to break me of my bad habit of swearin'. Now, when it's too late for him to know, I'm goin' to quit swearin'. I give public notice, here and now, if any damned man gets me so angry I've got to swear, I'm not goin' to cuss him out, like I used to. No! I'm just goin' to lick hell out of him then and there, so you fellows can tell the boys what to expect."

At that moment the back screen door banged on its hinges and McAlpin, sharp-faced, keen-eyed, and out of breath, rushed into the room. With much celerity and many pantomimic gestures, the Scotsman drew Sawdy far into an empty corner of the saloon. "What's up, Scotty?"

"He's in there," whispered McAlpin. "He's in there right now!"

"Who?"

"Barney!"

"Where?"

"In Boland's saloon! I seen the sorrel standin' at the hitch rack in front when I come along up street, to join you here, so I went in. Hurry, he's there!"

Sawdy pulled a moment at his mustache. "No hurry," he said reflectively. "It's early yet for him. If he's our man, he's got a pocketful of money to blow." He thought a minute further. "Look here, Scotch! Tell our boys over there at the bar to string out quiet and meet back of the barn. Watch your chance. Sneak around to the hitch rack and get the sorrel down to the barn on an old feed-bill claim. I'll tackle Barney in the saloon and see what chance there is to gettin' him down there. Got a rope ready?"

"I have."

"Vamos!"

McAlpin joined the men at the bar. Sawdy slipped out the back door and, half a block down the alley, walked out into River street and down to the Red Front saloon.

But from the moment the big adventurer stepped out of the back door of one saloon and in at the front door of the other, a curious change took place. He had left Spotts' place sober—Sawdy was in fact a very moderate man. He strode into the Red Front reeling.

The bar was well filled. Sawdy saw at a glance that among the men lined up there were a number of town loafers who never drank except at somebody's expense. When Sawdy caught sight of Redstock with the loafers around him, inference was swift and correct. Barney had money.

The saloonkeeper, Harry Boland, foxy-eyed and alert at the head of the bar, saw Sawdy stagger in through the green baize; he watched the big fellow closely. Sawdy zigzagged back towards the loafers among whom Barney was holding forth.

He greeted Barney gravely, then ordered drinks for everybody in Barney Rebstock's honor. Having lingered over the round, Sawdy cast his eye approvingly upon the thirsty crowd, passed the forefinger of his right hand thoughtfully under each wing of his mustache in turn, drew from a vest pocket a gold double eagle, and made a general proposal.

"I'll match any man here for twenty-dollar gold pieces." It was a fairly safe offer, because he well knew all the loafers put together could not raise twenty dollars.

Barney, after some shilly-shallying, accepted the challenge. He asked Boland to lend him a gold piece. When Boland produced a twenty-dollar coin and tossed it out to Barney, it did not take Sawdy long to figure out that Barney had money and that it was in the keeping of the saloonkeeper. Sawdy, notoriously lucky at matching, lost out after several trials: he quit forty dollars to the bad. But he had Barney greatly inflated by his triumph, with the whole room crowding eagerly around the contestants.

After a round of drinks at Barney's charge, Sawdy brought the talk around to a fine-looking sorrel outside at the hitch rack. Barney claimed it. Sawdy wanted to buy it. Barney demurred.

Boland heard the talk. He drew Barney to the rear end of the bar. "Sell it to him, you fool," whispered Boland. "Don't you see he's drunk as a fiddler? You can get twice what the horse is worth."

Thus encouraged, Barney stepped out of doors with Sawdy, followed by a little circle of the curious.

The horse was gone. This fact caused no great excitement; Sawdy suggested he had got loose and strayed up or down the street and that they take a look around to find him. The curiosity of the crowd weakened, and they re-entered the saloon, hoping for another chance to get a drink. Sawdy and Barney walked down the street together, wrangling as they went over the mischance and the merits of the missing horse. As the pair passed McAlpin's barn it occurred to Sawdy they had better look in and ask for information.

CHAPTER X

A HANGING lantern lighted the bar gangway dimly. Sawdy's call for a hostler was answered by McAlpin himself, who, lantern in hand, ambled in his peculiar gait briskly forward.

"Hello, Mac," exclaimed Sawdy, waving like a tall tree in a number four breeze. "We're looking for Barney's horse," he continued gruffly—"got loose up the street just now—seen anythin' of a stray?"

McAlpin, raising his lantern, looked at Rebstock. "Why, yes, I seen a stray," he admitted sulkily.

"Was it a sorrel?" asked Sawdy with some hope.

"It was a sorrel, Sawdy; saddled and bridled. What about it?"

"It's probably Barney's horse. Let's see it. Where is it?"

McAlpin jerked his head back over his shoulder. "In the box stall. Your horse, Barney?"

"Sure, it's my horse."

"Right this way, Barney," returned McAlpin. "Put out your cigars, boys, and come along with me," he added, lantern in hand. He scuttled down the gangway, Rebstock and Sawdy after him, stopped at the stall box, hung his lantern on a high gangway hook, unlatched the stall door, and pointed within.

Brain Becomes Hot When Eyes Are Busy, Scientist Reveals

Delicate Meter Tests Temperature Changes

Chicago. — Measuring the heat of a brain-wave is the latest achievement of Dr. R. W. Gerard of the University of Chicago, who 10 years ago, with Dr. A. V. Hill, British Nobel prizeman, first measured the heat of a nerve message.

In the past four years much attention had been aroused since scientists found it possible to measure the electricity which the brain produces when it works.

More recently, Dr. Gerard reported to the American Physiological society, the amount of oxygen used by portions devoted to the senses of sight and touch has been measured. He has now been able, with a thermometer which records a change in temperature of 0.00075 degrees Centigrade to measure the temperature changes of the living brain.

The thermometer is an electrical one, and the "bulb" is the size of a fine needle. This is inserted into the particular part of the brain of the laboratory animal to be studied. When it is desired to find out the heat involved in seeing, the needle goes into the paths that lead from the optic nerves and the eye, for instance, where it is located within one twenty-fifth of an inch.

Illuminating the eyes of the experimental animal, the experimenters found that these optic pathways in the brain began, within a minute, to get warmer.

For two minutes more the temperature rose, until it was a hundredth of a degree above normal for the resting brain. Four minutes after this, the temperature was again that of the resting brain.

Reaction of Paws.

The Chicago physiologists found a similar response to pressing the paw, when the tiny thermometer bulb was placed in that part of the brain which has to do with touch. In some parts of the brain, both pressing and "seeing" had the effect of raising the brain temperature.

The investigators have evidence that these changes in the brain temperature are in part due to an increase of blood flow to the portion of the brain used in sight, when the eye is illuminated, and to that portion which is used to distinguish touch when the animal is pinched; but in part due to the actual work done by nerve cells.

Suicide Decrease Is Recorded in Year's First Half

New York.—A new drop in the suicide death rate among insured wage-earners is in prospect for this year, if the better record of the first half of this year is maintained.

Figures compiled by Metropolitan Life Insurance company statisticians show that the suicide rate was 8.9 per 100,000 during the past six months.

At Peak in Depression.

The fact that the increase in suicides reached its peak at the very height of the depression caused some speculation as to whether economic conditions influenced self-destruction.

Dr. Louis I. Dublin, Metropolitan's statistician - vice president, points out that it is equally significant that the suicide rate rose steadily in the feverishly prosperous years immediately preceding the depression.

Plants Crossed Pacific 200,000,000 Years Ago

Cambridge, Mass.—Evidence that plants migrated across the Northern Pacific ocean nearly 200,000,000 years ago in the epoch of time that geologists call Lower Pernian has been unearthed in Texas by Harvard explorers.

The discovery of two new species of Tingia, a genus of long extinct plants hitherto unknown in America but found in China, was announced by the Harvard University Botanical museum where the specimens were studied.

Tingia are plants like cycads, a group that flourished for about a hundred million years (during the Mesozoic era) after the age of the discovery just made in Texas. Cycads living today in various parts of the world look like palms or ferns, with root-like trunks rising 20 to 60 feet crowned with leaves.

DR. JAMES SENDS CONGRATULATION TO DR. ACKER

Dr. Chas. T. Acker, new mayor of Montevallo, has received a much cherished letter of congratulation from Dr. H. W. James, president of the New Mexico State Teachers College, and former member of the Montevallo Town Council.

Dr. Acker has released the letter to The Times for reproduction. Dr. James said:

> "Dear Dr. Acker:—I wish to congratulate you upon your election to the mayorship of Montevallo. The fact that you were unopposed is a tribute to the fine work that you did in the last administration when you served as acting mayor. This tribute shows the confidence that the people have in you. While I know the problem you have is a difficult one, I am sure that you will adequately cope with it. You have my best wishes.—Cordially yours, H. W. James, President."

In submitting the letter for publication Dr. Acker expressed his appreciation of the sentiments of the writer. "I know the feeling and thorough understanding which Dr. James has, because he was here with us in the former administration."

THINGS ONE REMEMBERS

Reading the daily news, one cannot help but be impressed by the similarity between civil wars and the wars between capital and labor, in their waste and barbarism.

For the moment the Spanish civil war is a case in point. If the government wins, Spain will be subjected to an iron-handed communistic dictatorship. If the rebels are victorious, a Fascist military dictatorship will be established, according to rebel leaders, and all newspapers, except Fascist organs, will be suppressed, and all civil liberties will be abrogated.

Thus the old story is repeated. The common people will be losers. No matter how the war turns out, constitutional government and freedom in Spain will end. Leaders the world over are mad for power, as press dispatches from leading nations indicate.

With such examples to go by, we are threatened with a labor "war" between workers and employers in our own United States. If it comes,, both sides will lose, no matter who seems to "win." Lost wages, lost opportunities, lost good will and lost morale are never returned. When humans sidetrack intelligence for tactics of barbarism, the world loses.

Yet, with horrible examples of the folly of blind strife all around us, extremists in our country, on both sides of the labor question, are fanning the labor war flames. Their actions remind one of a couple of dogs circling around for a chance to fly at each other's throats. There is some excuse for the dogs. There is no excuse for the humans today who have every facility at their command for investigating, arbitrating, legislating and settling their controversies in an orderly and intelligent manner.

That old quotation, "The more I see humans, the better I like dogs," becomes more impressive every day.—R. M. Hofer.

ALABAMA WINS EPIDEMIC

Montgomery, October 3 — Alabama's infantile paralysis epidemic which struck down nearly 400 children and brought death to 25, was declared to be officially over by state health authorities today.

One new case, however, was reported in Jefferson County yesterday. A two-year-old white boy just beyond the Birmingham city limits near Wylam, was the victim.

Dr. J. N. Baker, state health officer, announced the disease "is almose back to its normal annual incidence level." He said preventative spray treatments may now be discontinued and crowds may gather without fear of infection.

More than 100 nurses supplied by the State Works Progress administration today were released from their duties of instructing parents in caring for stricken children and in administering the spray.

Whether the preventative picric acid-alum nasal spray, used widely for the first time here, is successful, was still to be determined.

Doctors and laboratory assistants under the direction of Dr. D. G. Gill, director of the Bureau of Preventable Diseases of the Health Department were studying a voluminous mass of data gathered during the five-month epidemic in the northern half of the state.

"I don't mind washing dishes for you," wailed the henpecked husband. "I don't object to sweeping dusting or mopping the floors, but I ain't gonna run no ribbon through my nightgown just to fool the baby."

State Capitol News

Montgomery—As Governor Bibb Graves prepared to join the Demicratic party's ace campaigners for a speaking tour which will take him into several states, party chieftains in Alabama girded themselves for a final drive to assure victory in many local contests in which Republican candidates are entered.

Speaker Will Bankhead addressed a large gatherng in his home town of Jasper last week where a negligible G. O. P. faction still survives. Representative Lister Hill invaded the one-time Republican stronghild when he spoke in Clantin, in Chilton County.

Judge James S. Parrish, of Montgomery, chairman of the party's special campaign speakers' committee, called on all county and district leaders to avail themselves of the services of a brilliant group of speakers working under his direction.

Meanwhile, Judge Matt Boykin, of Mobile, chairman of the State Democratic finance committee, directing the drive for $75,000 from the state to aid in the reelectiin of President Roosevelt, announced the states's quota had already been pledged and an appreciable oversubscription would be shown in his report to national headquarters.

Lloyd Hooper, Governor Graves' recording secretary, in charge of solicitation of State officials and employees, had approximately $1,100 in cash last week with indications of additional pledges which wlll bring the total to nearly $2,000 despite the fact that his quota was only $1,000.

'Al Smith's speech Thursday night in which he bolted to Landon greatly stimulated contributions to our party's 'war chest,' according to Pitt Tyson Maner, the Governor's secretary, who is in charge of the Montgomery finance committee's headquarters.

"No Democratic party leader considers Al's rank desertion as a serious threat in the ultmate outcome of the natonal election," Maner added. "The feeling of resentment engendered by his action has served to renew our faith and confidence in the President and the New Deal."

With a cash balance of almost $5,000,000 in the State treasury at the close of the State's fiscal year September 30, indications of unprecedented increases in collections of all State taxes were revealed as Governor Graves completed a report of his year's stewardship.

Department heads and clerical workers were busily engaged in the task of preparing the report of the State's financial condition which may require a week or ten days.

Henry S. Long, chairman of the tax commission said available data showed increases in all major tax receipts, with the exception of ad valorem taxes on real and personal property, attributable to lowered assessments during the depression years.

The highest percentage of increase was shown in income tax receipts of 129 per cent, with a total for the year of $1,100,530.89.

Other reports from different divisions of the tax commission showed:

Gasoline and lubricating oils receipts for the year, $11,421,303.47, compared with $10,170,717.79 last year; tobacco tax, $2,755,220.55, as compared with $2,085,000 last year; registration of foreign securities, $180,316, an increase of $41,633 over last year; corporation franchise tax, $1,439,013, compared with $1,504,246 last year; corporation permit fees, $115,308, compared with $117,840 last year.

Final revenue for the states's 15 toll bridges which were freed on Tuesday, will be received this week. Collections for the last day under toll operations was received Wednesday from eight of the bridges, amounting to $700.

Final reports from a few other tax units will be made this week, Chairman Long said.

Alabama's $10,000,000 State Docks were out of the red ths week under the able guidance of Governor Graves and his docks commission, reporting receipts for the fiscal year ending Setember 30 totaling $419,937.50.

Collections exceeded the amount required for interest charges on the outstanding bonded debt authorized for the construction of the port terminals at Mobile nearly ten years ago.

"It is the first time that the income of the gigantic state-owned docks has been sufficient to meet annual interest charges and leave sufficient funds on hand for capital outlay," commented General R. E. Steiner, vice charman of the commssion.

Richard M. Hobbie, former Montgomery business man, is general manager of the docks, and Frederick I. Thompson, publisher of the Montgomery Journal, and R. I. Ingalls, of Birmingham, are associate commissioners.

Governor Bibb Graves last week announced the appointment of Malcomb Harper, former chief clerk of the franchise tax division of the State Tax Commission, as executive director of the Alabama Unemployment Compensation Commission.

Prior to joining the tax commission's staff early in the present Graves administration, Harper was assistant internal revenue collector for Alabama. He is also a former mayor of Geneva.

The Governor said Jake L. Kaufman would remain as chairman of the commission, and that Harper would assist in the administration of the unemployment compensation act.

Employers and employees alike viewed with interest the test case of the state and federal unemployment compensation acts initiated in U. S. Federal Court here last Wednesday by the Gulf States Steel Corporation, seeking to prevent collection of the insurance tax due October 1, as the first step in a probable test of the constitutionality of the act before the U. S. Supreme Court.

Judge Charles B. Kennamer issued a temporary restraining order last Friday which will have the effect of holding the taxes in the state pending disposition of the action.

Approximately $1,000,000 in unemployment insurance taxes were due October 1. Announcement was made by Borden Burr, Birmingham attorney, representing the Gulf States Steel Corporation, that more than a hundred other corporations would ask Judge Kennamer for a similar injunctive relief.

The recent reduction in freight rates on coke shipped from Alabama, approved by the Federal Interstate Commerce Commission "is the opening wedge to equalization of rates on all commodities shipped from the South to the great markets of the East and middle-West," in the opinion of Governor Graves.

"However, the big railroads of the country are seeking to rob us of this advantage," he added. "A hearing on their injunction suit is slated for October 17 before the federal judges in Chicago, and I have authorized the employment of expert legal counsel to assist Mr. Hugh White, president of the Alabama Public Service Commission, to uphold the I. C. C. rate ruling.

"The future of Alabama's rich steel, pig iron, coal, coke and textile industries may be assured if we win this fight—and win we must!" the Governor said.

Secretary of State Howell Turner has certified to probate judges of the 67 counties of the State the names of candidates who will go on the ballots in the November 3 general election.

The state-wide ballots will bear the names of candidates for presidential electors, representing the Democratic, Republican, Communist, Prohibition, Socialist, and the Union parties, along with a blank column in which other candidates names may be written in.

More than 1,300 Alabama youths between 18 and 25 years of age were enlisted in the CCC from four recruiting offices last week, filling vacancies in the State's basic quota of 6,300. Approximately $2,000,000 a year will be disbursed to the families of the 6,300 boys, it was explained. Enrollees are required to remit $25 of their $30 a month stipend to their families. All boys are selected from needy families, which might otherwise becomes charity wards of the communities in which they reside.

Rural Electrification

In Alabama

Rural Extensions Even During Depression Years

By E. C. Easter

CHAPTER III

THE following table will give you a picture of the extent to which rural electric service was widened by Alabama Power Company even during the depression years:

Date		No. of Rural Lines★
1923		14
1924		28
1925		52
1926		67
1927		126
1928		268
1929		416
1930 (depression year)	an increase of 178 over 1929, to	594
1931 (depression year)	an increase of 79 over 1930, to	673
1932 (depression year)	an increase of 47 over 1931, to	720
1933 (depression year)	an increase of 46 over 1932, to	766
1934 (depression year)	an increase of 91 over 1933, to	857
1935	an increase of 120 over 1934, to	977
1936 (August)	an increase of 169 in 8 months, to	1146

★The number of rural lines includes those originally constructed as rural lines, but later changed to urban.

From the above it will be seen that there has never been a serious let-up in the construction of rural lines by Alabama Power Company, although in the depth of the depression, due to shrinkage of the amount of money available for the extension of electric service and, likewise, the hesitation of prospective customers to purchase electrical equipment for their homes and farms, there was some slowing up—as in the expansion of practically every other business.

Within the past two or three years the Federal Government has become interested in Rural Electrification as a part of the Recovery Program and in the interest of providing electric service to more farms. The Government's rural electrification activities have been conducted by the CWA, FERA and the Federal Rural Electrification Administration.

CHAPTER IV

Federal and State Agencies Express Appreciation for Alabama Power Co-operation

In 1934 the Company co-operated with the CWA in making surveys of several counties in Alabama, by furnishing maps of the counties, showing the Company's lines, surveys of prospective lines, and information pertaining to the Company's rural customers in those counties. Representatives of the Company assisted in every way possible in making the surveys.

Early in 1935, the Alabama Relief Administration started a statewide Rural Electrification survey. At its request the Company co-operated by furnishing maps showing the Company's lines in every county in which it operates, and by furnishing lists of more than 2,000 miles of prospective rural lines of which the Company had made surveys to study the possibility of serving. The Company's Agricultural Engineers and other employees co-operated in this work.

Subsequently the Federal Rural Electrification Administration was organized, and shortly thereafter the Alabama Rural Electrification Authority, with Mr. Gordon Persons, of Montgomery, as its head. In April of 1935 the Company submitted to the State Rural Electrification Authority, at the request of Mr. Persons, a list of completed surveys of prospective rural line projects, consisting of 181 projects in 51 counties to extend over 849 miles, expected to serve 3,981 prospective customers, and involving an estimated construction cost of nearly one and a half million dollars. This was done at a meeting where, among others, a TVA representative was present.

The Company later in the year co-operated further with the Relief Administration by employing persons from the relief rolls on such work as they were capable of doing, in its construction of additional rural lines.

Numerous conferences were held with State and Federal Rural Electrification representatives. At all times Alabama Power Company furnished all information that was requested of it, and expressed its sincere desire to co-operate with any agency in a further expansion of electric service to the rural and farm citizens of the State.

In the meantime the Company's rural line construction was increasing, due to increased requests for service, and on September 4th, 1935, the Company approved for construction a list of rural lines throughout the State with a total of 850 miles of line. Such list was carried in news items of many of the newspapers of the State. The Company received numerous expressions of appreciation for its progressive policy in this respect from the Alabama Public Service Commission, the State Rural Electrification Authority and officials of the Federal Rural Electrification Administration.

IN THE MEANTIME, WHAT HAPPENED?

These startling facts will be related in our next advertisement, to be published in this newspaper at an early date—Adv. Alabama Power Company.

This advertisement is the second of a series which has also been printed in booklet form. T. W. Martin, President of Alabama Power Company, Birmingham will cheerfully send a copy to any interested person requesting it.

Economic Highlights

At the time this is written, the election is just five weeks in the future. The issues—such as they are—are drawn. The rattle of political machine gun fire grows constantly louder.

The average citizen has neither the time nor the inclination to keep up with the presidential campaign in its hectic closing period. To do that, he would have to read a dozen speeches each week; peruse a score of columns authored by observers ranging all the way from GOP-sttalwart Mark Sullivan, to New Dealer Jay Franklin, and keep up with hundreds of thousands of words of news matter sent out by the big press associations.

In the week ending September 27, a number of highly dramatic and potentially important incidents occurred. Both the President and Governor Landon took to the radio to expound their views on the various issues. And, on a lower political level, scores of party followers carried on for their chiefs.

Most dramatic event was William Randolph Hearst's attack on the President, in which he said Mr. Roosevelt had the support of "enemies of the American system of government" —, that is, the Comfunists. This was promptly denied by Earl Browder, official Communist presidential nominee.

Of more practical importance in the vital matter of vote-getting was the attention paid to the long-debated subject of farm crop insurance by both contenders. Mr. Roosevelt announced in a press conference that he had appointed a committee to formulate plans, and said that "crop insurance and a system of storage reserves should operate so that surpluses of the fat years could be carried over for use in lean years." A day or two later Governor Landon made public a part of a yet-unspoken speech, in which he too endorsed crop insurance. Inasmuch as crop insurance is mentioned in neither party platform, unprejudiced commentators think that both candidates are out to get the jump on the other with something new and compelling—that a stalemate resulted.

Unusually aggressive was Governor Landon's speech on social security, in which he assailed administratiion methods, though he approves of such a plan in principle. He said the New Deal law was a "cruel hoax," that it endangered "the whole cause of social security," and pledged his party to the enactment of a "pay-as-you-go" old age pension system which would "provide for every American citizen over 65 the supplementary payment necessary to give a minimum income sufficient to protect him or her from want."

On the radio, the President continued his policy of making well-phrased, calm speeches, in which he criticizes his opponents only by reference. His big drive is yet to come—he apparently feels it is more or less a waste of motion to make major speeches as early as this, and will wait until mid-October.

In the meantime, the endless speculation as to who will win continues. The Literary Digest poll, on the basis of early returns, gives Landon a big lead—most other polls give Roosevelt a small but seemingly safe margin. State primaries so far have shown little. Anti-New Deal Democrats have been badly beaten for the most part, as have the Townsendites. The Maine election is said by Republicans to make a GOP victory certain, while Democrats pooh-pooh it. As a matter of fact, in the past when Democrats have carried elections in Maine a Democratc president has always been elected. But when the election was relatively close, as it was this year, the following national election has always been close as well. In that, the Maine results echo the views of most political experts—the next President will win his office by a very slim margin.

The Supreme Court hasn't been an issue in the campaign—those who thought the President would speak in favor of measures limiting the trbunal's powers were mistaken. Likewise, the Court has been on vacation and out of the headlines. But when it convenes again it will pass on a number of vital measures.

On the docket is the new Frazier-Lemke Farm Mortgage Moratorium law. The first law was declared unconstitutional—the new law was designed to overcome legal objections. Opinion is that it too will be thrown out.

Also on the docket is a case involving the right of the PWA to lend money to a local government for the purpose of building electric systems in competition with private systems.

Another power case involving the constitutionality of TVA is based on dfferent legal grounds than the case which the Court decided last term in favor of TVA.

The National Labor Relations Act is also up for judgment, along with the Commodity Exchange Act, the Railroad Retirement Tax Act, and others.

8,500 BALES USED IN ROAD BUILDING

Washington, Oct. 3.—The Agricultural Adjustment Administration reported today 8,500 bales of cotton were used during the Summer by 24 States as reinforcement material in building highways.

Highway departments put about 6,166,500 square yards of fabric in bituminous-surfaced roads in an experimental effort to cut down repair bills, and concrete curing projects in 23 States accounted for the use of about 89,500 cotton mats.

Government contributions of cotton to the States were divided about equally between the two types of projects.

Marketing diviston officials said the Staes were interested chiefly in the use of cotton fabric for secondary or farm-to-market roads, where heavy trucking and climatic conditions cause repair bills to run high.

At a certain college in the north of New England the male students were not permitted to visit the resident lady boarders. One day a student was caught in the act of doing so and was court-martialed.

Said the dean: "Sir, the penalty for the first offence is 50 cents, for the second $2.50, for the third $5, and so on up to $15."

In solemn tones the trespasser inquired:

"How much would a season ticket cost?"

Here's Early Slant on Major Eastern Grid Alma Momsies

YOUR scribe may as well put his neck out among the celebrated gentlemen who boast how they can handicap a most humanly erratic sport with prim statistics. Herewith is the dope concerning the 1936 prospects of the East's leading gridiron alma momsies.

YALE—After two years of probation Bob Beckwith is back at center and the line seems likely to be the strongest since Pond and Neale took over the coaching assignment. Bob Train will be missed at end but, if Scott passes his exams and teams up with Wright at tackle, they'll make a strong combination.

HARVARD — Fair enough line, especially at the tackles, where Gaffney and Kerkovian perform. Offense seems woefully weak, though, and, unless some sophomore back surprises, Prof. Harlow may need to call out some of those marines who used to perform for him at Western Maryland.

Fritz Crisler

PRINCETON—When Gil Lea, last and greatest of the football Leas, graduated in June, Princeton took stock and found three other first-string ends also were missing. This is the only spot causing Coach Crisler much concern now and the Sophs insist he really has nothing to worry about. Charley Toll, who may go down in Nassau history as another such tackle as Ceppi, Barfield, Keck, Cooney, Hart, Hillebrand, Biffey Lea and Hector Cowan, is the one to watch in the line. Although there is no fullback quite as good as the departed Pepper Constable, Chick Kaufman and Ken Sandbach are dashing ball-carriers and it is difficult for neutrals to believe the Tigers will not be as good as last year.

PENN—Veteran, mostly seniors, team which should be one of the best but which probably will encounter the customary Penn political reverses. Gisburne is the key tackle.

COLUMBIA—Far better than last fall. Sid Luckman, triple-threat back, and Art Radvilas, a fine end, are the best of some unusually strong sophs, while Tackle Bateman is the ace of the line.

DARTMOUTH—Weak at guards and none too sure Mutt Ray will recover sufficiently to resume starring at center. Hollingsworth, late 1935 discovery, may star as a triple threat along with several other fleet backs.

CORNELL—Several teams will find the Big Red tough to take but Cornell is at least a year away from what old grads hoped for when they hired Coach Snavely. Very good sophomores and Captain Jack Batten, already celebrated as a defensive star, may be the season's best kicker.

FORDHAM—Spies insist Jimmy Crowley is working with numerous rugged and powerful candidates, but that the Rams are by no means as strong as touted. There may be some trouble filling the tackle gaps left by Sarno and Sabo.

MANHATTAN—Line is certainly big and fast and probably dumb. Tuckey could be the best fullback in the East. Chick Meehan is optimistic as usual and he may be right about several of those surprises he promises to spring.

N. Y. U.—Not as strong as last year and definitely misses the kicking and passing of Big Ed Smith.

PITT—A fine big bunch of boys with just one weakness, the lack of a Nick Klisky at center. Jock Sutherland, ordinarily very good at developing pivots, now is working on that problem.

ARMY—Gar Davidson says the Cadets are big and strong with more reserves than last year but that they lack speed. Monk Meyer, of course, is the pigskin toting star and Bob Kasper seems to be doing all right, so far, at the difficult job of replacing Quarterback Grohs.

NAVY—Another possible dark horse inspired by the revenge motif. Still sore over that first half runaway last December, and even now more concerned with the Army contest than with early season affairs. Whisperers confide that so far it shapes up as one of the weaker Middy teams.

HOLY CROSS—Big, strong and fast with a nice smattering of sophs headed by Hank Ouellette, former Haverhill high star. This crack ball carrier may shove Rex Kidd, ace pilot for the past two seasons, right out of the lineup.

By VIRGINIA VALE

FRED ASTAIRE, when he and his wife arrived in New York after their European vacation, staged what may be called either an outrageous attack of temperament or a burst of completely justified anger.

He was willing to pose for photographers for newspapers and news reels, but his wife was not. Somebody snapped her anyway — and Astaire proceeded to raise the roof until he got the plate.

He explained that Mrs. Astaire does not want publicity; that she is not a Hollywood celebrity, but his wife, and does not want to be anything else. She feels, apparently, that the public can have no interest in her.

Astaire would seem to be right. And there's a question as to whether he'd ever have got that plate if he hadn't made himself very disagreeable in order to do so. Perfectly calm and even-tempered people have discovered, the moment they came into contact with the motion picture business, that they weren't taken seriously unless they flew into a rage every so often.

Madeleine Carroll

Madeleine Carroll, whom you'll see in "The General Died at Dawn," (that is, you'll see it if you want to see a swell picture) is in pictures because she wants to be, not because she has to earn a living.

She is the wife of Capt. Philip Astley, who was considered one of the greatest catches in England before they were married. At that time she had not made a name for herself; she was just one more girl who was doing all right in pictures.

She went right on doing all right in them. Hollywood discovered her, and claimed her. Beautiful, intelligent, talented, she manages both her career and her marriage very well indeed. One thing she couldn't manage—she and her husband had planned to go to their castle in Spain last summer, and the revolution spoiled their plans.

Joan Crawford

We're always hearing about the effect that the gowns worn in pictures have on fashions. So it may interest you girls to know that at the presentation of "Fashion Futures" at the Waldorf-Astoria in New York, held recently by fashion authorities, these were among the dresses chosen from pictures which, it is said, will be modified for the rest of us to wear this year: Joan Crawford's red velveteen robe, worn in "The Gorgeous Hussy"—it has huge sleeves, mink reveres, and braided cuffs and shoulders. Loretta Young's blue challis, with shirred skirt and sleeves and a ruffled petticoat, worn in "Ramona." And Olivia de Haviland's bouffant organdie, with a pleated flounce for a hem worn in "The Charge of the Light Brigade."

When the football broadcasts get under way Albie Booth, who was chosen for the All-American team when he played at Yale, will describe them for WHN, New York.

Last fall he attended one of the big games in the party with your correspondent. And, unlike many men at football games, he just watched the game. He didn't call plays, he didn't express opinions about players, he didn't even say what he thought of the game.

Jane Hamilton, RKO actress, bought a new coupe the other day and went into a huddle with the salesman over having it painted a special shade of gray. She couldn't decide on the shade, and was thinking it over when a gray car was driven in.

"Well," says Jane. "I think that color will probably do."

"It should," retorted the salesman. "That's Clark Gable's $20,000 Dusenberg."

They're making pictures fast with Shirley these days, because she's growing up . . . In two years Robert Taylor has become Metro's most popular player . . . If you've read "Gone With the Wind" don't you think that Miriam Hopkins ought to have the role of the heroine when the book is filmed . . . And Clark Gable is perfect for the hero . . . Loretta Young has gone off to Honolulu, alone . . . Rumor had it that she and Eddie Sutherland would travel there on their honeymoon . . . "Swing Time" has been held over for the third week at New York's Radio City Music Hall—that's how good it is . . . Jack Oakie is very funny on the radio (did you hear him with Bob Burns during Bing Crosby's absence?), but for some reason sponsors don't appreciate him.

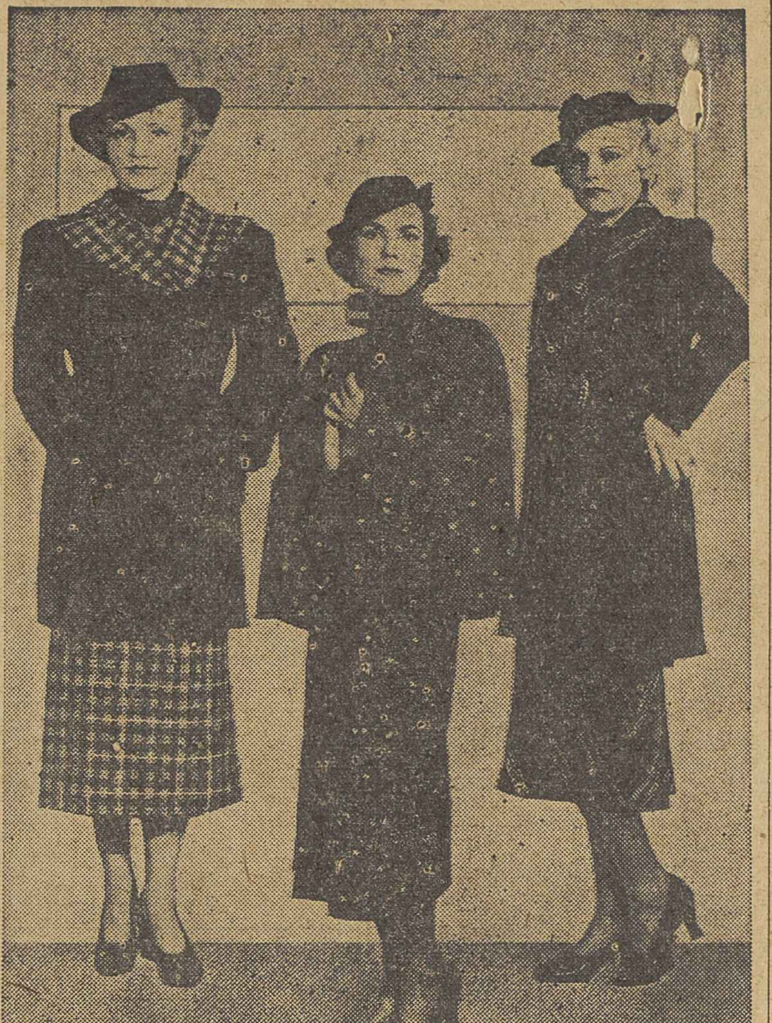
It's Season of Intriguing Woolens

By CHERIE NICHOLAS



THE new woolens are having their day and a grand and glorious day it is, marked with new triumphs in color, in designfulness and versatile weave. They are grand and glorious beyond description and they have taken on a sheerness and featherweight texture that adds much to their lure. With the college girls the thought of a back-to-school wardrobe that does not include a costume suit fashioned of handsome wool is inconceivable. And so it's wool-gathering these fair collegians are going with all the enthusiasm of youth that sets forth to get what it wants.

Not that college-faring girls are the only ones engaged in the wild scramble to be first in fashion by going stepping in a brand new autumn ensemble styled of chic and handsome wool weave. Fact is every woman who is fashion-wise is making one grand dash in the direction of the glamorous wool fabric sections, which is exactly what she should be doing to be smartly apparelled in the days to follow.

Among the woolens to meet the rapturous gaze of the woman in quest of modish materials for her fall costume are the most enticing jacquard-patterned weaves fancy could possibly picture. These are that new you will get all the thrills that come with having a forward look into fashion futures. In these jacquard wool weaves the patternings are woven right into the material. Then there are the cunningly embroidered woolens which promise to be quite the rage. These make up ever so smartly in tunics, and waistcoats. They come in pretty florals and bold coin dots and other clever motifs mostly wide-spaced but not infrequently all-over designed. As to wool plaids and stripes and checks their name is legion. The big idea right now is a gay plaid skirt with monotone blouse or sweater. The flaring plaid tunic is also outstanding in the new stylings. As to the fantastically nubbed tweeds that are so important this season, everyone who sees falls prey to their wiles at first glance.

Designers are playing up the new woolens for all they are worth, using them by the two's and three's in combinations that stress striking contrast both in color and weave.

Two of the three models in the picture make contrast their theme, in use of versatile woolens. The ensemble to the left can be worn from early fall to early spring in perfect comfort, with or without its matching coat. Here a plaid rabbit's woolen dress in pencil silhouette with a high surplice bodice and a bright velveteen ascot has a plain rabbit's hair tunic coat with double-breasted front and wide revers of the plaid. The new "swing" effect is achieved with unpressed box pleats that start from the waist.

To the right in the trio a striped rabbit's woolen plays in duet with a plain rabbit's wool weave. The dress in pencil silhouette has as complement a flared tunic coat of the plain wool with tuxedo fronts of the stripe. A bright velveteen ascot and belt buckle match the color in the stripes. The dress is ideal to wear under a separate winter coat later on.

Centered is a cape outfit of jacquard tweed. It is this sort of novelty woolens that is glorifying the fabric style picture just now. The raised shoulder line which is the much-talked-of new silhouette is carried out in sunray tucks. The long sleeved dress has a flared skirt. The popular stand-up collar adds a keen touch, also a patent leather belt to match the patent leather shoes.

NEW-STYLE BAGS

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

Alert manufacturers of bags have set to work to devise distinctive openings, out of the ordinary, yet practical. Perfect with all sorts of tailored clothes, football togs and travel costumes is the new double-zippered transatlantic handbag (top picture) the unusual opening of which resembles a suitcase fastening and a roomy interior that provides ample space for anything from a passport and travel papers to a pocket-size novel. With a smart fall dress of nubby homespun as pictured below it is the very essence of good style to wear washable kid gloves matching the leather of an underarm bag.

ROSE DECORATIVE THEME FOR AUTUMN

Newest feature of this season's costume flowers is the American beauty rose. Singly, or in clusters, it is worn with full-length stem almost to the knee. The flower, flatteringly soft and graceful, is posed just below the shoulder.

The rose motif is also prominent on printed and blocked scarfs and in formal chiffon evening handkerchiefs. Rich evening brocades follow the romantic mode in large allover rose or leaf designs. Rose patterns have all the old-world air so typical of the Victorian and Edwardian revivals that are dominating the fall modes.

Accents of rose on black are a leading theme for fall: copper-rose buckles, necklaces of rosy crystal, touches of lace in a faint blush-rose, nail polish in old rose with faintly smoke-blue undertone. Polish this autumn is going romantic, along with everything else. Soft shades of old rose, coral, mauve—or if you're wearing gold or autumn-leaf red, a new light rust polish—faintly echo the undertone of the gown or its accessories.

Knitted Reading Jackets

Novel nightdresses and matching reading jackets in pale blue, loosely-knit fine wool are featured in the fall collections.

Those Swiss!

Hand-painted buttons, decorated in the Swiss peasant style, are now to be had, and are strongly advised for the ski suit.

Lady Bug Clips

Lady bugs set in semi-precious stones in silver or gold are used as clips on gloves, belt buckles, dress clips and even as earrings.

"The Man Who-o-o"

Tales and Traditions from American Political History

BY FRANK E. HAGEN AND ELMO SCOTT WATSON

THE DEMOCRATIC DONKEY

ALTHOUGH Thomas Nast is usually credited with being the man who made the donkey one of the emblems of the Democratic party, the fact is that some other cartoonist, whose name is unknown, used the same symbol fully three decades before the famous Harper's Weekly artist did.

When Andrew Jackson retired from the presidency in 1837 he dumped in the lap of his successor, Martin Van Buren, a flood of "wildcat currency" and wild speculation caused by his destruction of the United States bank and the distribution of the treasury surplus in private banks. So a cartoonist of that period drew a picture entitled "The Modern Balaam and His Ass" which showed Jackson mounted on a donkey, across whose withers hung a bag labeled "Specie Currency—Circulating Medium." A ghost, labeled "Bankrupts of 1837," was causing the donkey to balk and its rider was belaboring it with a cane labeled "Veto." Behind the rider and his mount walked Van Buren saying "I shall tread in the footsteps of my illustrious predecessor."

From that time on, during the disputes over the money question, the donkey frequently appeared in the cartoons and became the accepted symbol of the Democratic party. But it was the genius of Thomas Nast which made this symbol familiar to millions of Americans.

During the feud between President Andrew Johnson and Edwin M. Stanton, secretary of war, Nast was a strong ally of the latter. When Stanton died soon after President Grant had made him a justice of the Supreme Court, the southern Democratic papers, continuing the feud, attacked Stanton even in their obituary notices of him.

On January 15, 1870 Nast drew his first donkey cartoon. It pictured Stanton as a dead lion being kicked by a donkey labeled "Copperhead press." Underneath it were the lines "A live Jackass kicking a dead Lion and such a Lion! and such a Jackass!" In later cartoons he also depicted the Democratic papers, especially James Gordon Bennett's New York Herald, as a donkey and after a while began applying the symbol to the Democratic party as well as its press.

HEADGEAR

"IF YOU lose your standards, rally to my white plume!" cried Henry of Navarre before the Battle of Ivry and so the helmet of Navarre with its snowy decoration became the sign and symbol of a cause which won and made him king of France.

In American politics, too, voters have rallied behind candidates whose headgear or some other bit of apparel have been characteristic of the man. In the days of Andrew Jackson, loyal Democrats brandished hickory canes in imitation of the one which "Old Hickory" carried. In 1840 the Whigs clapped coonskin caps on their heads and went out to sing and cheer "Old Tippecanoe," the Indiana frontiersman, into the White House.

On the streets of New York the white beaver hat worn by Horace Greeley, editor of the Tribune, was a familiar sight. But perhaps even in those days the "peepul" were suspicious of a "high hat" candidate, so Greeley's supporters, wearing "white plugs," failed to elect him. Ulysses S. Grant once worked in a tannery, therefore parades in his honor were marked by men wearing shaggy and obviously untanned fur coats and bearing signs which declared "Bring on the enemy and we'll tan his hide."

In the Cleveland campaign of 1888 his running mate was Senator Thurman, the last member of the upper house to use snuff. After doing so he would sweep a red bandanna handkerchief out of his pocket with a grand gesture. So Democrats that year had whole suits made of bandannas and women wore bandanna dresses.

Another vice-presidential candidate who furnished a striking headgear symbol for his party was Theodore Roosevelt. Thousands wore Rough Rider hats in the campaign of 1900 and it was still a potent emblem in 1904 when T. R. was candidate for President.

But another quarter of a century was to elapse before a bit of headgear would be a feature of the campaign. In 1928 Alfred E. Smith made the brown derby famous from one end of the land to the other but it became a symbol of defeat instead of victory.

Pyrethrin, Insect Killer

Pyrethrin is used to kill insects. Many tons of pyrethrum are brought into this country annually from foreign countries, chiefly from Japan. It is a strange crop to most farmers in this country. The pyrethrum belongs to the great Compositae group of plants, which include the chrysanthemum, aster, daisy, dandelion, ragweed, and wormwood. William J. Bryan's Famous Ode to Water

At a banquet given in his honor in Japan, Wm. J. Bryan declined wine, and using water instead, gave the following toast: "Water — the daily need of every living thing. It rises from the earth obedient to the summons of the sun and descends in showers of blessings. It gives of its beauty to the fragrant flowers. It is the alchemy that transmutes base clay into golden grain. It is the canvas on which the finger of the Infinite traces the radiant bow of promise. It is the drink that cheers and brings no sorrow with it. Jehovah looked upon it at Creation's dawn and said, 'It is good'."

Farm-Proved FOR PERFORMANCE and ECONOMY
Firestone
GROUND GRIP TIRES

SAVE time and money and get greater efficiency by equipping the rear of your car and truck with a pair of Firestone Ground Grip Tires. They will give you the super-traction needed to pull through mud and unimproved roads and will save you the time, trouble and money of applying chains.

Harvey S. Firestone was born and raised on a farm in Columbiana County, Ohio, which he has operated ever since 1904. It was here on this farm that Mr. Firestone conceived the idea and worked with his tire engineers in developing a practical tire for farm use. Mr. Firestone's experience in farming gave him the realization of the need for a pneumatic tire with lugs of rubber that would increase the drawbar pull, roll easier, save time, and speed up farm operations on cars, trucks, tractors and all wheeled farm implements.

Firestone engineers are continually working with Mr. Firestone on his farm to secure greater farm efficiency. They developed the Ground Grip Tire which is so designed that in soft mud roads it cleans itself and the bars of rubber are so placed that they will not bump on paved roads. The design of this tire is so unusual and its performance so amazing that a patent has been granted by the United States Patent Office. covering its exclusive features. The secret of the extra traction of Firestone Ground Grip Tires is the scientifically designed rubber lug of the tread. Under this extraordinary super-traction tread are placed two extra layers of Gum-Dipped cords. This is a patented Firestone construction feature which makes it possible to weld this heavy tread to the Gum-Dipped cord body, making it one inseparable unit.

Go to your nearest Firestone Tire Dealer or Implement Dealer or Firestone Auto Supply and Service Store today and ask to see these money-saving tires. And when you order a new tractor or implement, specify Firestone Ground Grip Tires.

Pigmy Elephants With Huge Circus

Mighty Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Combined Organizations Offer Among Vast Hosts of New Features Col. Tim McCoy, Screen's Great Western Star, Midget African Elephants and Pongurs.

With one hundred double-length railroad cars, bearing 1,600 people, African pigmy elephants, African Pongurs, seven herds of full-sized elephants, 1,009 menagerie animals and 700 horses, the Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Combined Circus will arrive in Birmingham Thursday, Oct. 15, for afternoon and night exhibits.

The crcus is especially elated this season over the amazing success of the Big Show's sensational new superfeature—the first herd of African pigmy elephants (tiny huskers that years ago attained their full growth) ever to leave the depths of darkest Africa, and the first herd of African elephants ever to set foot in America. The weird midget pachyderms are accompanied by a herd of miniature African pongurs, world's smallest beasts of burden. These new importations have taken America by storm.

The Big Show's big top, seating 16,000 persons, covers seven rings and stages, a huge hippodrome track and encircling grandstands, and is one of 31 great tents, among them the menagerie, sheltering the world's largest traveling zoo. In its center this season will be seen Col. Tim McCoy's Indian Village, with Sioux and Blackfeet warriors encamped. Col. McCoy, the screen's most outstandng western star, will himself lead his congress of rough riders of the world in the main performances and in the wild west.

The Greatest Show on Earth offers scores of foreign features this year, incluling the Naittos, the Royal Bokaras, the Imperial Viennese, an assemblage of 60 free-running horses, ponies and elephants; the largest aerial ballet ever produced. Fresh from Europe are the Walkmirs, the Antaleks, the Buemrangs, the Romeos, the Maschinos, the Robertos, the Willos, the Torrence-Victories, the Rooneys, aerial novelty sensations. The Loyal-Repenskis, the Rieffenachs, the Walters, famous bareback riding troupe, the Guice aerial comedy troupes on the lofty bars; the two renowned Wallenda troupes of high wire thrillers; the Otaris, who fly in mass somersaults from an aerial cross; the Flying Cancellos, with Antoinette, only girl to accomplish a two and a helf mid-air somersault to a hands to hands catch; the Flyinp Comets; Dorothy Herbert, madcap rider of reinless jumping horses over fire hurdles, and Hugo and Marii, human projectiles, these are some of the most prominent features of the superb 1936 Rinpling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey program.

Bulldogs 37—Siluria 0

Last Friday at Montevallo the Montevallo High School football team scored a decisive victory over Siluria by the score of 37 to 0.

For the first two or three minutes of play the teams looked evenly matched. Then Montevallo made a touchdown. After that Siluria couldn't stop them. Four touchdowns and one extra point were made before the first half ended.

Frost Sensational

In the last minutes of play in the first half, Fred Frost, left halfback, ran 70 yards for a touchdown. The interference was superb. They had him guarded from behind and on one side with the sideline on his other side. The half ended with the score 25-0.

In the next half Siluria tightened up a bit. But they didn't score although four good threats were made with lay-out passes. The outstanding player for Siluria was Bobbie Lacey.

The lineup was as follows:

Montevallo—left end, Spurgeon; left tackle, G. Cahoon; left guard, Comer; center, Griffin; right guard, Leslie; right tackle, Liddle; right end, Hartley; quarterback, Lee; left halfback, Confer; right halfback, Weems; fullback, Harrison.

Substitutes—Frost, A. Cahoon, Carr, Carey, Johnson, S. Lee, Maddox, Garrett, J. Winslett, Vaughan, T. Winslett, Brown.

Score by quarters:

Montevallo	19	6	6	6	—37
Siluria	0	0	0	0	—0

Piper Picked

Though Montevallo scored more points against Siluria than Piper did, Siluria men picked Piper to win.

Change In Schedule

Montevallo will play only two more games at home, Vincent and Isabella. The game with Clanton has been changed to Clanton.

Next Friday's game will be played at West Blocton.

GUN RUNNERS LEAD DETECTIVES A MERRY CONTINENTAL CHASE

The Strand Theatre's change of program next Saturday brings Edmund Lowe and Constance Cummings co-starred in "Seven Sinners," a GB production based on a story by Aronld Ridley and Bernard Merivale and directed by Albert de Courville.

The story deals with the efforts of a criminal investigator — an American—to discover the reason for the wreck of a French train in which he is riding. His clues carry him and a girl insurance investigator into an amazing series of adventures that leads after many dangerous and narrow escapes from death, to the capture of a gang of gun runners who have also been committing murders and wrecking trains—bringing doom to human cargo!

The territory covered by the story is the South of France—a carnival at Nice—Paris, London and an English Village. The scenario and dialogue by S. Gilliat is said to have given comedy treatment to the mystery, which also has its full quota of romance. In support of the stars are Thomy Bourdelle, celebrated French actor, Henry Oscar, Joyce Kennedy, Felix Aylmer and others.

Montevallo 6 — West Blocton 0

For the first time in the history of football relations between the two high schools, Montevallo won over the strong West Blocton team in the game played at West Blocton last Friday. The only touchdown came in the fourth quarter on an end run with Weems carrying the ball after it had been worked down to the five yard stripe from midfield.

Montevallo threatened to score more than once earlier in the game. But close to their own goal Blocton played inspired ball. In the first half Spurgeon took a pass from Capt. Lee and raced to the half-foot line. But there the Blocton line held for four downs and the ball went over.

The game was hard fought throughout but the play of both teams was so clean that not a penalty was called. Few college teams can claim a record like this.

The victory over West Blocton indicates that the 1936 team is probably one of the strongest Montevallo has ever had. And it encourages the hope that Montevallo will be equal to scoring a victory over another old, and always strong rival, when it plays Centreville under the lights next Friday night at the Bibb County capitol.

Piper Strong

Last Friday night, October 9, Centreville bowed in defeat to a Strong Piper team. The game was played at night with Piper on top of a 38-0 score.

Coach Tucker, of Piper, has developed one of the best and hardest charging lines in this section. In the backfield McDonald threw passes time after time to Terpo for touchdowns, while Potts' talented left toe got off beautifull place-kicks for the kickoffs and the extra points.

Though Centreville did not look good against Piper, they are a very strong team.

Montevallo faces Centreville next Friday night, October 16th, at Centreville at 7:45 p.m. We hope Montevallo will be well represented.

Baptist Church

Dr. Pearson will preach at the morning service Sunday. He will leave in the afternoon for a series of meetings with the Boys High School of the Berry Schools at Rome, Georgia. The congreation will worship with the Methodist Church Sunday evening. The Sunday School will meet at 9:45 a.m. The Baptist Training Union will meet at 6:45 p.m.

The Alabama Baptists Student Union Convention will meet at Judson College, Marion, Ala., this week end. Some thirty or more of our young people plan to attend. Dr. Riddle will teach the Sunday School lesson for the convention Sunday morning.

A committee on arrangements has been appointed by Commander Pendleton. This committee will announce full details of the Armistice Day celebration in a few days.

Texas Film Comes To Strand

"The Texas Rangers," King Vidor's historical epic of the men who molded a state from the territory of Texas, comes Saturday to the Strand Theatre.

The picture features an all star cast headed by Fred MacMurray and Jack Oakie, and including among its headliners Jean Parker, Lloyd Nolan, Edward Ellis, Bennie Bartlett and a score of others.

Filmed on location in Texas and New Mexico by a company of several thousand persons with the assistance of officials of both States, "The Texas Rangers" combines a fast moving, action and thrill-filled story and a panoramic view of the unfolding of the history of the Lone Star State.

Banded together under an oath to "drive out hostile Indians, stop feuds, destroy cattle and horse thieves, gangs of stage and train robers, kill or capture murderers, and make Texas a reasonably safe place in which to live," the Rangers contributed much to the color of the State's early days. Both MacMurray and Oakie join the fearless band in the course of the motion picture.

Encounters of Ranger companies with bands of marauding Indians and with stage coach robbers are a part of the plot development. Miss Parker, remembered for her sincere interpretations of important roles in "Sequoia" and "Little Women," is cast as the daughter of the head of a Ranger unit.

Dr. Carmichael Points To Work Of Alabama College

Alabama College and the town of Montevallo were thronged and gay Saturday as the largest homecoming crowd in history came to celebrate the college's fortieth anniversary. An audience of alumnae, students, and townspeople filled Palmer Auditorium in the morning for the anniversary program, featured by former President O. C. Carmichael's address on "Education and Southern Progress."

Dr. Carmichael, now vice chancellor of Vanderbilt University, declared that it was not possible for the people of Alabama to comprehend the contribution made to the state by Alabama College.

"This contribution to the state, he said, "is not one of dollars and cents, nor of doctors, lawyers, and professional men who can hand back gifts of money. Alabama College's contribution has been the more than 10,000 young women who have gone forth to enrich the school life, the church life, and the community life of Alabama.

"Yet I have heard some men cmplain about the cost of education. I wonder if we can turn these men's thoughts toward the cost of ignorance? Can we imagine what Alabama would be like if we had never had our three major institutions of higher learning—the University, Auburn, and Alabama College?"

The anniversary program began at 10 a.m. with a colorful procession of seniors and alumnae from Main Dormitory to Palmer Auditorium. President A. F. Harman delivered the welcome address, and Mrs. Frank Chappelle, president of the alumnae association, Birmingham, responded to his greeting.

An "Interpretation of Alabama College," by Miss Mary McWilliams, '11, history professor at the college, was read by Miss Frances Foust, '37, of Cullman. The paper traced the growth of Alabama College from its founding as the result of a great need in the state for women's education, to its present remarkable development as a liberal arts college with facilities to care for the academic, professional, and cultural needs of modern womanhood.

Following the reading of this paper, Prof. Ziolkowski, head of the college piano department, played Chopin's "Polonaise in R Flat Major."

In his address Dr. Carmichael pointed out that although there is encouragement in the fact that the South since 1900 has advanced more, economically and educationally, than any other section of the nation, there still remains a great disparity between the South's wealth in natural resources and its poverty in human economy.

Quoting from Odum's "Southern Regions of the United States," he said that because of poor education in the care of lands, Southern farmers pay for commercial fertilizers $2.71 an acre, whereas Midwestern farmers spend only 30c. He showed further that while the South has 17 per cent of the nation's industrial workers, they receive only 11 per cent of the industrial payroll.

"Just as educational progress is the best mark of economic progress so economic progress is the best mark of educational progress," Dr. Carmiachel said. "Unless our Southern leaders are willing to recognize this, and make more than an easy effort to provide educational funds, then it is entirely possible that the South rather than continuing its progress, may begin to go backward."

At luncheon Saturday visiting alumnae and friends of the college were guests in the new dining room.

Saturday afternoon the play, "Merrily We Roll Along," based upon events in the history of Alabama College, was produced in Palmer Auditorium. The author and director was Mrs. Willilee Reaves Trumbauer.

Final event of Saturday's celebration was the informal dance for all visitors at 8 p.m. in the parlors of Main Dormitory.

An hour's radio broadcast, from 2:45 to 3:45 Sunday, with talks by four alumnae and an address "Looking Forward," by President Harman concluded the fortieth anniversary program.

Dr. A. W. Vaughan was announcer for the radio program which was presented in the following order:

Music of 1936, Purple Slow Song (College Night).

Gaynor, Young, Bennett Star In New Hit With Simone Simon

With the most exciting and brilliant star combination ever to appear in one picture, "Ladies in Love," new Twentieth Century-Fox production, appears Sunday and Monday at the Strand Theatre, a bitter-sweet romance of four lonesome, lovely girls, and their adventures in search of love.

A quartette of Hollywood's most famous feminine personalities, Janet Gaynor, Loretta Young, Constance Bennet and Simone Simon, appears in the film, with the cast featuring Don Ameche, Paul Lukas, Tyronne Powers Jr., and Alan Mowbray.

Of the four lovely ladies, one gambles for love and loses, one gambles and wins, one asks for love and gets it, love asks for the fourth—too late.

Janet, Loretta and Constance, modern young ladies all, have pooled their resources and taken a small apartment, where they eagerly plan for the romances they intend to have.

Janet is employed by Don Ameche, a young doctor, to feed his laboratory rabbits. Loretta is in the chorus of a reigning musical hit, and Constance is a model, with dreams of becoming a luxurious lady.

Loretta falls in love with Tyrone Power, Jr., a wealthy young man, and is heart-broken when she hears that he is soon to be married. Janet is in love with her doctor, but when the opportunity comes, incredibly, for a job as valet to Alan Mowbray, a famous magician, she leaves the young physician. Constance is having a mad round of pleasure with Paul Lukas, a mining engineer on vacation from South America. Constance and Lukas have a creed—no good-byes, no tears when it is ended.

Simone Simon, an appealing but determined young girl, is also in love with Lukas, who does not realize that she has grown to womanhood.

Between Constance and Simone, an intense rivalry for Paul's affections arises. Constance has told Lukas that she does not believe in love—that all she wants is someone to be happy with—for the moment.

These four wise girls—Jane, Loretta, Constance and Simone—living by their wits, trusting their charms to make their dreams come true, supply a fascinating answer to the romantic question—how can a girl get married till she's asked?

All do not succeed in their love affairs. To two comes happiness, to the others heart-break. But all, in some measures, succeed in making their dreams of real romance come true.

News Review of Current Events the World Over

Lewis Doesn't See Peace in Federation of Labor—Russia Resents Fascist Aid Given Spanish Rebels—Mormons All Off Dole.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union.

WILLIAM GREEN, president of the A. F. of L., who had just been calling on President Roosevelt at Hyde Park, N. Y., told the newspapermen that the prospects for peace between the warring factions in the federation were better and that those participating in the controversy were becoming "more temperate." However, that same evening John L. Lewis, the dynamic leader of the Committee for Industrial Organization, rather dashed the aforesaid prospects for peace. In Washington he laid down, as the only basis for restoration of peace in the ranks of organized labor, a program consisting of these two propositions:

John L. Lewis

1. Revocation by the executive council of the American Federation of Labor of the order suspending ten C. I. O. unions on charges of insurrection.
2. Isolation of certain mass production industries which would be organized strictly on Lewis' "one big union" theory.

It had been stated that David Dubinsky, head of one of the suspended unions, had submitted a compromise peace proposal, but Lewis told the correspondents that he knew of no change in feeling between the battling factions; that he had made no move for peace and contemplated none; that the C. I. O. drive to unionize the steel industry was "proceeding satisfactorily" and that the Dubinsky proposal was similar to the one previously offered to and rejected by the A. F. of L. council.

POLITICAL expediency brought about a strange state of affairs in Minnesota. Fred Curtis and Patrick J. Delaney, respectively Democratic gubernatorial and senatorial nominees, withdrew from the race in favor of the Farmer-Labor candidates in return for Farmer-Labor support for the re-election of President Roosevelt. The members of the Democratic party throughout the state were rather dismayed by this action and some of the leaders protested vigorously.

John E. Regan, the party's 1934 gubernatorial candidate, issued a statement asserting that Minnesota Democrats had traded votes and engineered "coalition of parties" before, but "never has there been an absolute sellout."

Alric Anderson, St. Paul attorney who was the Democratic candidate for attorney-general two years ago, marshaled his followers into the "Democrats-for-Nelson Club." Martin A. Nelson is the Republican gubernatorial candidate.

Joseph Wolf, former national committeeman, and Judge J. D F. Meighen, state central committee chairman, led that group of Democrats supporting both Farmer-Labor candidates and President Roosevelt.

ATTACKING abuse of the franking privilege, which has been practiced by followers of any and all parties when they got the chance, Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg of Michigan proposes that congress pass legislation that will put a stop to this evil, "for the sake upon the one hand of the postal revenue and for the sake, on the other, of political fair play."

J. G. Winant

When John G. Winant resigned from the social security board, his letter to the President was a strong pro - New Deal document. It was printed by the press bureau of the social security board and franked to a large mailing list, and Senator Vandenberg asked Mr. Winant whether he thought that was a legitimate use of the franking privilege. Mr. Winant replied promptly that, lest there be any question of the propriety of the matter, he had paid the mailing costs. This attitude was warmly commended by Senator Vandenberg, as it must be by all good citizens.

HELP given the Spanish insurgents by Fascist countries so enraged soviet Russia that she gave notice that, unless it ceased she would free herself from any obligations to the agreement for neutrality. The representatives of the 27 nations on the international committee of non - intervention in the Spanish war were about to meet in London, and Moscow's challenge caused a real sensation. Moiseyvich Kagan, soviet delegate on the committee, specifically named Portugal, Italy and Germany as the offenders and called for an investigation. It is believed that if Russia is not satisfied in this matter she will send airplanes and other war material to the Spanish government.

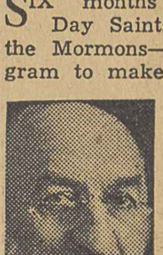
Kagan's communication made the direct charges that German airplanes reached the Spanish rebels from Germany, that poison gas reached the rebels from Italy, and that Portugal permitted its frontier to be used by the rebels.

Spanish Fascists pushed their lines so closely around Madrid that they called on the government to surrender the capital immediately and thus save it from a destructive bombardment. An airplane fleet showered the city with circulars telling the citizens that further resistance was useless. One of the most threatening of General Franco's advances was directed at Aranjuez, whose capture would cut off Madrid's food supply from the Mediterranean.

The government claimed that an army of loyalist miners had fought its way to the center of Oviedo against the desperate resistance of the rebel defenders.

Gen. Francisco Franco, chief of the insurgents, decreed a Fascist dictatorship and created a "junta of state" which will govern subject to his will. In his first statement of policy, Franco assured workers they would be "protected against the ills of capitalism" and that "steps would be taken to regulate favorable working hours."

SIX months ago the Latter Day Saints church—otherwise the Mormons—inaugurated a program to make every able bodied member self-supporting by October 1. In the great tabernacle at Salt Lake City Heber J. Grant, president of the church, told an audience that the plan had succeeded and that the drive had taken all the needy members off public relief. The church has consistently opposed "pay without work." In reading his report President Grant took occasion to criticise the Townsend pension plan and government control of crops, and he warned the members to avoid "political entanglements."



Heber J. Grant

Under the church relief drive, land was leased and the needy provided with implements for tilling. Womens groups have made clothes and bedding. Members have contributed the financial equivalent of two meals monthly to a special fund.

In scattered storehouses, Mr. Grant reported, supplies have been laid up in generous quantities for distribution among the needy who helped produce them.

Under the program, the speaker declares, "the curse of idleness would be done away with, the evils of a dole abolished, and independence, thrift, and self-respect will be once more established amongst our people."

AS THE time for the expiration of the Washington naval treaty draws nearer, the utterances of Secretary of the Navy Swanson take on more and more the nature of sharp warnings to Japan not to get too gay in the Pacific. In a press conference the other day he said:

"Fortifications are intended to answer fortifications. One menace must be met by another menace."

And he gave notice that the navy should be ready to do the necessary meeting.

About the same time the state department was studying a proposition, made to it and to Japan by Great Britain, for an extension of the treaty pledge of the three nations not to build new fortifications or naval bases in certain of their Pacific possessions. In Tokio it was said the government might agree to this provided certain changes were made giving Japan "fairer" treatment in the light of an altered international situation.

ACCUSED of complicity in the plot against Dictator Stalin for which 16 prominent Russians were executed in August, Karl Radek, brilliant journalist, is under arrest and in danger of losing his life. He disappeared just after the executions of the others, but was caught a few days ago.

In his last article, published in the official newspaper Izvestia, Radek confessed his unfaithfulness to the communist party, but defended himself with a vitriolic attack on Trotzky and claimed he had "expiated" his sins by foiling Trotzky's attempted sabotage of the Stalin regime.

KURT BJORKVALL, Swedish aviator, made an attempt to fly alone from New York to Stockholm. Thirty-two hours after the start he was picked up from the ocean about one hundred miles off the coast of Ireland. Supposedly he ran short of fuel. The rescue was made by a French trawler. The plane was badly damaged and was abandoned.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE C. B. KENNEMER of Montgomery, Ala., issued an order halting collection in Alabama of a one per cent payroll tax to finance the unemployment program. The result, it is expected, will be a clear cut test of the validity of the New Deal's social security act, for lawyers had no doubt the case would be carried to the United States Supreme court. The order was granted the Gulf States Steel corporation of Gadsden, Ala., on a plea that the unemployment insurance program, operated in co-operation with the federal government violates both state and federal constitutions.

JESSE ISADOR STRAUS, merchant prince and, until his resignation last August, American ambassador to France, passed away in his New York home at the age of sixty-four. The immediate cause of death was pneumonia, but Mr. Straus had been in ill health for some time, this being the reason for his retirement from the ambassadorship.

Jesse I. Straus

Graduating from Harvard in 1893, Mr. Straus began work as a bank clerk. In 1896 he obtained employment with R. H. Macy & Co., big New York department store, and by 1919 was its president, holding that position until he was given the Paris post by President Roosevelt in 1933. He was a Democrat and was a member of the board of overseers of Harvard and of the American Academy of Political and Social Science. He maintained a country estate at Mount Kisco, N. Y., as well as a city apartment.

FOLLOWING the example set by France and other countries, the Italian cabinet voted to devalue the lira, setting its value at approximately 5.2 cents, as compared with the latest previous figure of 7.6 cents. The cabinet also let it be known that it would take action to prevent rent and price increases; and it voted a new 5 per cent capital levy to which property owners are obliged to subscribe to the extent of 5 per cent of their wealth.

The gold value of the lira was placed at 4.677 grams of gold for each 100 lire. Gold reserves of the Bank of Italy will be revalued on the basis of the new lira with the surplus to be placed at the disposition of the treasury.

FRANCE may be on the verge of a civil war between Communists and Fascists comparable to the terrible conflict in Spain. In Paris desperate fighting already has begun. The Reds, numbering many thousands, and the nationalists, under orders from Col. Francois de la Rocque whose Croix de Feux organization was disbanded by the government, undertook rival demonstrations; and the result was a day-long series of street battles in which hundreds were wounded. Order was finally restored for the time being by a force of 12,000 republican guards and police.

In London, also, there was a big riot in which a hundred persons were injured. Sir Oswald Mosley's Black Shirts, a Fascist organization, planned a parade but Communists and Socialists numbering 100,000 were determined to prevent it and battled with a big force of east end police to get at their enemies. The authorities forbade the parade as scheduled but the opposing mobs got together in various localities and fought desperately.

RESIDENTS of Frankfort, Ky., stopped work and politics for three days and, with thousands of guests, celebrated the sesquicentennial of their city. A pioneer touch was given the affair by the arrival of many families from other parts of Kentucky in horse-drawn vehicles and on horseback. There were historical parades and services, an old fashioned burgoo feast, and a formal banquet at which addresses were delivered by Admiral Hugh Rodman of the navy and Governor Chandler of Kentucky.

PRINCE ERNST VON STARHEMBERG of Austria ousted from the Fascist Heimwehr or home guard Maj. Emil Fey, once his trusted lieutenant, and thereby stirred up quite a muss in Vienna. It was reported that Premier Mussolini of Italy had taken a hand in the quarrel by demanding that Chancellor Schuschnigg give complete control of the heimwehr to Von Starhemberg.

The prince declared in a public document that Fey's conduct at the time of the assassinatin of Chancellor Dollfuss never was satisfactorily explained. The major, enraged, challenged the prince to a duel; but dueling is illegal in Austria.

THREE complaints were filed by the federal trade commission under the Robinson-Patman act, naming five concerns, launching the first move to test its powers under this far-reaching legislation which forbids the granting or receiving by merchandisers of discriminatory price discounts in interstate commerce.

The complaints named Montgomery Ward and Company, Inc.; Kraft - Phenix Cheese corporation, Chicago; Shefford Cheese company, Inc., Syracuse, N. Y.; Bird and Son, Inc., and Bird Floor Covering Sales corporation, East Walpole, Mass.

One Thing Needed

Washington.—Several years ago I expressed in these columns the conviction that one thing America needed was a congress which would cease attempting to amend the law of supply and demand. The observation was made in the midst of the most depressed economic conditions that modern times had known and it brought down upon my head a vast amount of criticism. Readers wrote me at length about the stupidity that I had displayed by making such a statement.

Reference to that circumstance is made here at this time, because it is apropos again. It is apropos because we are in a political campaign out of which will come either the re-election of Franklin D. Roosevelt or the election of Governor Landon of Kansas. The results of this political campaign are going to hinge to a considerable extent on the attitude of the farmers of this country and if there is one segment of the American economic structure to whom the law of supply and demand means more than to another, it is to the farmers.

Now, Democratic spokesmen are going about the country talking about soil conservation, about relief for the farmers, about anything and everything that will give the farmers money.

Republican spokesmen are shouting and waving their arms with other propositions to aid the farmer. Some of them probably are workable, and if they are workable they must be considered constructive.

But the point I am trying to make is that in the case of either candidate, there is still too much of the idea of the superficial, of surface help, for agriculture. In other words, the programs still take into account some circumvention of the law of supply and demand. That statement is not wholly true of Governor Landon's farm program, but unless the New Dealers come forward with more than they have thus far advanced, I think it can be said their program offers nothing more than a continued raid on the Treasury of the United States with no plans at all for correcting underlying conditions.

There was one phase of Governor Landon's program, as advanced in speeches at Des Moines, Iowa and Minneapolis, Minn. that appealed to me. Brushing aside verbiage and detail, Governor Landon basically has in mind, apparently, a desire to get the government out of the farmer's hair. He seems convinced that there are many things which the farmers would like to do for themselves and will do for themselves if the machinery upon which they can operate is made available. He proposes, for example, to seek legislation that will enable the farmers to finance themselves through borrowing from commercial agencies, banks and trust companies, instead of from the government. With that I agree to the fullest. It means simply that farmers again can be masters of their own souls as well as the crops which they grow for it, puts them in a position to sell when they want to sell, without the necessity for asking permission from a bureaucrat in Washington. It means further that no bureaucrat in Washington can issue an order to that farmer that he must dispose of his stored crop.

It seems to me as well that anyone who analyzes the present regimentation of the farmers from Washington must recognize that which has always been true: Every time the government, which means politicians, attempts to mess into private business, that private business goes from bad to worse and it does not matter how bad it was when bureaucrats took hold. It will be worse thereafter.

Hits Root of Farm Problem

I have been wondering, however, how far Mr. Landon will go in encouragement of the family type farms. You will remember that he spoke at length of family type farms in his Des Moines address. Personally, I feel that he hit upon a very important point. I think it is important because it strikes at the root of the farm problem.

In discussing help for the man who owns or wants to own a small farm, Governor Landon surely is proposing a program that will serve this nation well because no nation whose farms are widely owned by those who operate them can be headed toward fascism or communism. I do not know how the Governor as President will be able to put the federal government behind such a program, but it is to be assumed that he had definite ideas on the subject or he would not have boldly stated his position. My hope is that it can be done not with government money, but with money supplied from private institutions since there has been too much goverment competition with business of the nation already. Further, regretful as it is, the federal government has not and cannot have any function in that field for the reason that it inevitably leads further into politics, further into waste and the eventual destruction of the people whom the demagogues claim they are helping.

The reason I have advocated this action so strongly is the fact that there are too many tenant farmers in the United States now, far too many. It is fundamental, in my opinion, that this nation can get on with the present trend. Is is sad, but it is true, that there are about forty per cent of our farms now operated by tenants. In other words, one out of less than three farms in the United States is worked by a man who does not own it.

Press for Landon

Some information was made public the other day to the effect that 85 per cent of the newspapers of the country were supporting Governor Landon as against President Roosevelt in this campaign. I do not know the actual percentage and I do not vouch for the figures I have reported to you. But of this I am certain: I believe that Governor Landon does have more editorial support than any presidential nominee has had in the last six campaigns, with the exception of President Roosevelt as a candidate in 1932.

It has been interesting to watch the various important independent newspapers as they have studied the two candidates this year and have reached conclusions as to the nominee they will support. I am not now referring to hide-bound Republican papers, nor to newspapers that could normally be expected to support the more conservative of the two candidates. I am thinking of independent or distinctly Democratic newspapers that have announced their opposition to the Roosevelt cause. Let me mention a few of them: The St. Louis Post-Dispatch, the Omaha World Herald, the Baltimore Sun, to mention only three.

* * *

New York Times

There was a great newspaper, one of the greatest, that took a stand for President Roosevelt a few days ago. I refer to the New York Times. No one can ever say that the New York Times ever has failed to arrive at its conclusions without giving all factors concerned careful study. I am saying by this that the New York Times is honest and sincere. But I must say at the same time that the New York Times has a background as an institution and it has a clientele of readers for whom it speaks and its accession to the Roosevelt cause is a perfectly natural position for it to take. For years the New York Times has contended that America should participate to a greater extent in world affairs. It has contended, without exception, for policies of an internationalism with which a great many thinking people disagree. Its view, concretely, appears to be that we cannot correct depression conditions unless the United States as a nation wholeheartedly moves in the circle of governments that rule Europe and Asia, especially in matters of an economic character.

I do not know what Governor Landon's pronouncements on foreign policy are going to be. But I have observed the policies that have had the backing of the New York Times over a number of years and it seems to me that they result in greater benefits to a limited class than to the country as a whole. I am not a rabble rouser; I do not link the New York Times with the money-changers of Wall street as the demagogues describe them. It is just the perspective that I have gained of the whole picture since I have no axes to grind.

In the case of those newspapers that have turned against Mr. Roosevelt, there is to some extent a consideration of local interests, circumstances of concern to the communities which they serve, just as in the case of the New York Times. The point is, however, that in the case of newspapers turning against Mr. Roosevelt, their new positions are predicated on what appears to me to be traditional American bases. That is to say, they are adhering to the principles which I believe to have been the foundation stones of American history. I have no quarrel with the attitude of that school of thought that believes we should engage further in international affairs than we have done. It is their conviction and they have a right to it. Yet, it is not mine.

I have said may times in these columns that I will support any proposition that is good for America as a whole; I have contended consistently for Americanism and the things which that means, and I have argued always for sound government.

Yes, a Queer World
Supply and Demand
If All Worked Hard
The Biggest Brain

How Queer is our world!

Fascists, led by Sir Oswald Mosley of the English Blackshirts, who think they ought to change the British government, learned from a mob that fascism does not suit England—yet. The Blackshirts were driven home.

Arthur Brisbane

Next day, bands of the Fascists invaded the London Jewish quarter, smashing windows. In the first day's rioting between Fascists and the crowd that does not want fascism, hundreds were hurt.

England is becoming modernized. One of her race track gambling-gangsters, murdered "American fashion" in the course of gangster business, was honored with a funeral that would make Chicago or New York stare.

Mussolini does not believe that old "supply and demand" is necessarily omnipotent. While cutting four per cent from the value of Italian money, he forbids any increase in prices, any rent increase for two years. That experiment will be watched with interest. The word "money," most important in the world to many, has less real meaning than any other word in the dictionary, nobody knowing anything about it.

A new law in Paraguay compels every able-bodied man to work, whether he wants to or not. Here men that want jobs can't get them. There men can get jobs, but don't want them.

The general idea is good, but if all able-bodied men had been compelled to work always the human race would still be far back in the dark ages. One of the greatest Greeks said truly that bodily slavery was necessary, because it gave leisure to a few, leisure made thought possible and thought created progress.

If all men had worked hard, by compulson, there would have been no deliberate thinking. Slavery would be necessary now for the world's progress had not machines taken the place of slaves.

Scientists of the Smithsonian Institution announce discovery by Dr. Hrdlicka in the Aleutian islands, off the coast of Alaska, of a skull that once held the biggest brain on record, excepting that of the Russian novelist Turgenieff, who had a brain cavity of 2,030 cubic centimeters. The biggest American brain belonged to Daniel Webster, 2,000 cubic centimeters.

But brain size and weight are not everything. Beethoven, with a 1,750 cubic centimeter skull, will outlive in importance Webster, the French naturalist Cuvier, and other "big brains."

Adaptation to usefulness is the important thing. It is said that the eye of the eagle is twice as heavy as the eagle's brain.

Wine bottled in Germany hereafter will have, instead of a cork, a plug of German wood.

To help make Germany independent of the outside world, the use of cork, that does not grow in Germany, is forbidden. This will save 10,000,000 marks a year, spent abroad for cork.

German wood, according to authorities, is cheaper, better, resists breakage, acid, alkali, and eliminates cork taste.

One question is, will the wooden cork swell up at the lower end sufficiently to overcome the pressure of gas in a champagne bottle?

At Jonesville, Va., Rev. T. Anderson, in a demonstration of faith, allowed poisonous serpents to bite him three times, assuring his congregation that they could not harm him.

A copperhead moccasin snake bit him twice on the right hand; a rattlesnake once on the left.

Unfortunately Rev. Mr. Anderson, member of the Holiness persuasion, died soon afterward.

We go up and down quickly in the United States, particularly in new enterprises. William Fox, once one of the most energetic, successful of moving picture men, now a bankrupt, tells the court that in 1930 he was worth one hundred million dollars; now he has only "odds and ends," meaning only a few hundred thousands, here and there.

Our South American neighbor, Nicaragua, forbids all slot machines and other gambling devices in that country. All must be destroyed.

Nicaragua's government says such machines teach children to gamble, and their owners are parasites of the worst kind, making a profit of 68 cents on every dollar.

Value of Accuracy

I do not know that there is anything, except it be humility, which is so valuable as an incident of education as accuracy. And accuracy can be taught. Direct lies told to the world are as dust in the balance when weighed against the falsehoods of inaccuracy. These are the fatal things, and they are all-pervading. I scarcely care what is taught to the young if it will but implant in them the habit of accuracy.—Arthur Helps.

—12—

"There's your horse, Barney. Maybe I better give him a bit of oats before you go . . . . No? Water then?"

"Rebstock and Sawdy had stepped into the stall with McAlpin. The liveryman led the horse out. Rebstock started to follow. Sawdy laid a hand on his shoulder. "Just a minute. I want to talk to you, Barney. We'll join you in a minute, Mac."

"What's up?" asked Rebstock, eyeing Sawdy closely, and always suspicious.

Sawdy was standing backed against one side of the box stall. "Barney," he said in confidential fashion, "I'd like to have just a little horse-to-horse talk with you."

"What d'you mean, horse-to-horse talk?" snapped Barney.

"Just this: Do you feel just exactly right, leavin' your money with Harry Boland?"

"What do you mean?"

"Do you feel safe? I ask you as man to man, Barney, and an old friend, do you feel safe, leaving a roll with Boland?"

Barney fumbled mentally. "Why shouldn't I?" he countered bluntly.

"I'd hate to see you, after this trouble you've had, lose your money with Harry Boland," persisted the cowman. "I'll tell you honest—and you can tell the critter himself if you like—I wouldn't never leave five hundred of my money with Harry Boland."

"Never had it to leave, did you?"

"Well, no foolin', Barney, I wouldn't do it. So that's what I say, as man to man—keep your money in the bank, not in a dive. Have you got a receipt for your money?"

"No."

"How much money are you leavin' with him?"

"None of your damned business, that's how much. I'm headin' up the street. Get out of the way."

"Don't get sore, Barney. I'm meanin' the best for you. Just wait a minute an' I'll walk up the street with you—gettin' kind of thirsty myself. Did you hear, Barney, about Bill Denison's place gettin' burned down?"

"I heard about a fire out that way—what about it?" demanded Rebstock.

"Why, nothin'—nothin' at all. But, Barney, this is why I wanted to talk to you: There's folks here in town that don't know you as well as I do, are mean enough to say you know a lot more about that fire than you want to tell. I claim they're wrong—what'll I tell 'em?"

"Tell 'em to go to hell."

"Suppose they won't do it, Barney?" asked Sawdy calmly.

Rebstock shuffled angrily. "Look here, Sawdy. You can't bunk me any more. If they don't want to go to hell, you go for 'em."

With this suggestion, Rebstock started again for the stall door. Sawdy's hand came down a bit heavier on Barney's shoulder.

"Barney, I want to be friends with you. What's the facts about that fire?"

With a volley of oaths, Rebstock tore loose from Sawdy's grasp, backed hurriedly away, and tried to spring over the side wall. Sawdy was too quick. He jumped to him, caught him by the arm, and slammed him halfway across the stall. Barney landed on his hands and knees, sprang to his feet, and faced his old-time acquaintance with wicked eyes. In the dim light of the lantern, high in the gangway, Sawdy caught the flash of the blade of a knife.

Both were quick. Rebstock, smaller and lighter, could strike and spring like a wildcat, but he faced a foe who, though larger and heavier, was esteemed among his fellows as one hard to corner. Sawdy held the door side of the stall with his back to the light. He could see Rebstock's eyes flashing green. Rebstock wanted to get close enough to Sawdy to cut him and jump through the door.

Sawdy carried his gun—Rebstock had left his own with Boland—but he disdained to use it on a partly unarmed man. It was no part of his program to get himself embroiled with the law by shooting the criminal; what he and his cronies wanted from Rebstock was information.

In a moment, both men, one big, the other small, were jumping about the stall like boxers stripped for the ring. But Sawdy, though big, was the fastest on his feet among the cowmen that rode the Gunlock ranges. He had little alcohol aboard, was naturally as quick as a flash, and knew he was facing the most dangerous man with a knife along the Spanish Sinks. Ten youthful years spent among Mexican bandits, together with a lean and jumpy physical make-up, had given Barney Rebstock the name of a mean man with a knife, and Sawdy had no intention of adding to the outlaw's reputation as a killer, if he could help it.

The fight was in the lap of the gods. A misstep or a foot slip might end it any second.

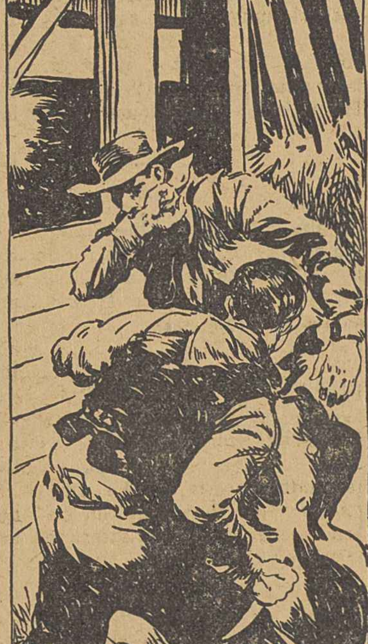
Barney, enraged at his plight, was breathing hard, and wind was too precious to waste in words. This silent struggle for the one slight advantage that would end the fight went on to the music of jerky breaths and nimble footing. It was soon a question as to whose wind would give out first—Sawdy, heavier, was at a disadvantage in endurance. While they feinted and jumped about, his foot slipped.

Barney saw the opening. He lunged forward. Sawdy instinctively whirled sidewise and threw up his knee to save his stomach. The savage thrust of Barney's knife caught the calf of his leg. As the cowman went down, his fingers gripped Barney's wrist. With a mere twist of the deadly grip learned long ago in Panhandle knife fights, he snapped like matches the two bones of Barney's forearm.

The wiry outlaw screamed. He was through; the rear gangway doors were flung open, and the confederates came running in from the corral.

From the darkness of the box stall came only the swish of hard breathing and the oaths and cries of Barney. Lefever grasped the bail of the lantern and threw the light rays within.

"Henry!" he yelled in alarm. "What's a-matter, pard? What's wrong?" He unlatched the gate of the stall as he called and hastened inside with Scott and Page at his heels. McAlpin ran down from the office. It was a moment before Lefever could make out just what was happening on the floor, as Barney, half choked, writhed under the remorseless grip that closed his windpipe. Sawdy, spread out on his stomach, lay, a huge bulk, with one arm over his antagonist. Only his heavy breathing indicated life. "Henry!" exclaimed Lefever. "What the hell's happened?"



He Could See Rebstock's Eyes Flashing Green.

"Nothing's happened yet. John. Look at my leg. Where's his knife?"

"God a'mighty! It's in your leg, Henry."

Lefever started to draw it out. "Hold on, John! Don't touch that till you get a tourniquet on. Who's here?" His heavy bloodshot eyes turned on Scott. "Bob! Look-see whether he's slit an artery or a vein."

Scott found blood spurting from the wound. He fashioned a tourniquet from a thong of rawhide.

"Get up and get Carpy, quick!" muttered McAlpin to Page. "What you moonin' about? Henry is bad cut. Run, Ben!"

"All right. You hold Barney," growled Page, turning over his writhing prisoner.

Turning to the prostrate cowman while Scott twisted the tourniquet, McAlpin, gripping Rebstock, gave orders to Sawdy; the liveryman always took the stage. "Henry!" he shouted, in his excitement. "Lay right where you are. Don't stir till Carpy comes. Why didn't you call for help?" he thundered at Sawdy.

"Ain't never learned how yet," retorted the wounded man majestically.

Carpy reached the box stall ten minutes later.

The doctor held up the lantern. "Hell's bells!" he exclaimed to McAlpin and the hostler. "Don't leave the man lying in this dirt. Henry,"—he knelt at Sawdy's head—"what have they been doing? Who stuck you?"

"Doc," declared the notorious bachelor, "you might say I stuck myself. Sew me up and send the bill to my father-in-law after I get married, will you?"

"I wouldn't want to impose like that on a decent father-in-law, Henry; it'll be bad enough for any man to have you hitched into his family. Lift him out of here, boys—give me a hand. We've got to get him up to the office. What's that noise out in the corral?"

"Nothin' at all," blustered McAlpin, struggling along the gangway with Sawdy's feet. "Just a few bucks from the Reservation, initiatin' Barney Rebstock into the tribe. Henry, you're heavier than a ton of bricks. I can't hold on much longer."

Not until the doctor had nearly finished dressing the cowman's leg did the wounded man begin to tell the story. And he had hardly been made ready to send to the hospital when John Lefever and Bob Scott appeared at the box office door with Barney Rebstock, white and scared.

"What's a-matter with the rest of you?" exclaimed Carpy testily, as he eyed the three.

"Why, Barney," explained Lefever blandly, "fell off his horse a few minutes ago and broke his wrist. Fix him up, will you, doc?"

"What the devil's this cutting and squawking all about?" asked Carpy of Lefever later that night.

The two were seated in the doctor's office about midnight. "Doc," explained Lefever, "the boys are pretty sore about Bill Denison's ranch house gettin' burned down. The day after the fire Barney Rebstock left two hundred with Harry Boland. Where'd he get it? The boys made up their minds to find out. Sawdy got him down to McAlpin's barn, but when he began to pump Barney the cuss showed fight. You know Henry. He'd never used a gun on a shrimp with a knife. So the rest of us, waitin' in the corral, carried Barney out of the barn, showed him a rope by the light of the lantern, and asked him how about that fire."

Carpy shook his head. "Dangerous business, John. Did you string him up?"

"Hell no. I hadn't no more'n adjusted the noose and asked him was it comfortable under his ear, when he told the whole story. McCrossen hired him to do it for Van Tambel—"

Carpy muttered an angry epithet.

"—gave him two hundred and promised two more when the job was done. What do you think of that, Doc?"

"You fellows ought've asked me that afore you began stringing Barney up," added Carpy, after a moment's thought, "there's only one thing I know of you can do now. Bill Denison is the man most interested in the situation the way it stands."

"I guess we can't get away from that," admitted Lefever.

"Lay the whole mess before Bill and ask him what's to be done."

Lefever was doubtful. "I don't know what the boy will say, doc."

"And I don't care a hang," retorted Carpy. "That's all they'll get from me."

Next morning Carpy was making his rounds at the hospital. In the carridor he encountered Lefever. John took off his hat and scratched his head. "Well, doc!" he exclaimed.

"Well," echoed Carpy, "what you doing up here?"

"We talked it over."

"Who's we?"

"Why, Sawdy, McAlpin, Bob Scott, Ben Page, 'n' me. We talked it over 'n' concluded to follow your talk—put it up to Bill."

"Sit down there in the office till I see him myself."

"O. K., Doc. I'll go in and set with Sawdy."

Dr. Carpy opened the door of Denison's room. Close to Denison, who sat, with bandaged eyes, in an armchair, stood Jane, arranging some briar roses in a vase.

Jane turned. "Oh, here's Dr. Carpy, Bill. Good-morning, doctor!"

"Any morning's a good morning when a man can set eyes on an up-an'-coming girl like you," said Carpy. "Bill," he continued brusquely, "you're too slow. If I had as good a sight for sore eyes as she is, right close to me, I'd take a peek at her if I had to go blind the rest of my life."

Jane turned away with a protesting smile, Denison looked confused. "Say!" exclaimed Carpy suspiciously, "what's been going on here? What have you two been up to? Bill," he said suddenly, "you've been moving that bandage!"

"Why, I did lift the bandage for a few seconds," confessed Denison.

"What for?"

"To look at the roses."

"Bill, you're a blamed liar. You lifted it to look at this girl— didn't he, Jane?" Carpy thundered.

"How do I know, doctor?" asked Jane demurely.

"Bill," he said, sitting down by his patient, "tell me just what and how much did you see when you lifted that bandage.

"Doc, I'll confess, I couldn't see much—just a blur."

"'And your eyes ache and sting now, don't they?"

"They burn a little, Doc."

"I'll say they burn a little! How many mornings has this been going on?"

Denison was silent. "Only yesterday and today, doctor," confessed Jane, hesitatingly.

"Well, don't try it any more," said Carpy to Denison. "If you do, I'll put you back in a dark room. I only let you out here on the theory you'd behave yourself."

Carpy picked up his bag. He was part way down the corridor when he was waylaid by Lefever.

CHAPTER XI

"COME into Sawdy's room a minute, Doc," pleaded Lefever, "He'd like to talk this thing over with you."

Sawdy, propped up in bed, led the talk. But the talk was not to Dr. Carpy's liking. "Yes," he muttered scornfully, "I expected that's the way it would work out. If there's a mean job to be done in this town, put it on me."

But the pair now working on the doctor's sympathies knew their victim pretty well and, having once brought him to refuse their request, needed only to persevere in order to make him grant it. This brought Carpy back that afternoon to Denison, alone.

"Doctor," said the injured man, "I couldn't be sure this morning when Jane was here whether you were talking to encourage her and me, or whether you really think you can save my sight."

"Bill, I was honest in what I said," returned Carpy. "I believe and hope I can save your eyes. But it's not all in my hands; I told you that, too. If Nature's willing, we're going to get through all right—does that satisfy you?"

"That's all I can ask, Doc."

"Bill," said the doctor suddenly, "Sawdy and Lefever have found out who burned the ranch house—and why it was set afire."

"Who was it?" asked Denison violently.

"Keep cool, Bill; keep cool. It's a mean mess."

Denison was on fire. "Why don't you tell the story?" he demanded angrily. "What did they do?"

"First," responded Carpy, determined not to be rushed, "they found that Barney Rebstock had a pocketful of money since the fire. They lured him down to McAlpin's barn. When Sawdy began to question him, he showed fight. The upshot of it was, the two went at it hammer and tongs in a box stall. Barney had a knife—he drove it through Sawdy's leg, and Sawdy was choking him to death when McAlpin and the boys heard the noise and stepped in to save the thief. Then they took him out behind the barn till he told his story.

"Mind you, this now is Barney's story—might or might not be the facts. He claimed he was paid two hundred dollars to set the house afire, with a promise of two hundred more after he'd burned it."

Carpy paused. He thought the sickening truth must have already begun to penetrate Denison's mind; it had not.

"Who," asked Denison, with a fell epithet, "paid him to burn me up?"

"As Barney tells it," continued Carpy deliberately, "it was between McCrossen and Gus Van Tambel."

Denison sprang from his chair, He tore the bandage from his sightless eyes. From his disfigured lips poured a stream of bitter words.

"Not too fast, Bill—not too fast. Remember there'll be another to suffer like hell if this thing ever gets out."

"Oh, I know it must never get out. But that man! Doc, he ought to be roped and dragged to death by a wild horse. If ever a robber and a thief and a murderer deserved stringing up, that man does. He's killed, or had killed, every man that ever stood in his way of stealing land or cattle, or anything a man had that he wanted."

"Cool off, Bill, cool off."

Denison sat down with his hands over his face. It wrung Carpy's heart to see him suffer. "I can't Doc. I can't!"

Lightning's Action Not Checked by Any Object

Lightning is a powerful force. The formation of clouds, or the movement of water particles in violent cloud movement creates positive electricity that seeks relief. If the negative or ground charge is the stronger, it spills over as it were and passes skyward off the points of lightning rods or other prominent points. But if the positive charge in the clouds is the stronger and is not neutralized by the negative charge from below it comes to earth with a blinding flash and deafening crash, striking the most prominent point in range.

Breaking the connections between earth and sky does not stop the discharge of lightning. It has to be neutralized, asserts an authority in the Montreal Herald, by contact with the negative charge in the earth. But a broken connection, as when lightning rod is broken, or metal roof and spouts are not grounded, only causes the lightning bolt to go elsewhere and do damage. It stops at the break maybe, but holds out pleading hands to the positive force in the clouds.

Scatter-Brained Pair Skip Thru Romance

A newspaperman's idea of what constitutes an appropriate wedding present for his newshawk sweetheart is visually demonstrated on the screen of the Strand Theatre Thursday, where Paramount's comedy-romance "Wedding Present" openes today. Co-starring Joan Bennett and Cary Grant, "Wedding Present" is a fun-filled yarn told at rapid-fire tempo, with a chuckle at nearly every foot of film.

Grant and Miss Bennett are the star reporters of a Chicago daily, bossed by hard-boiled George Bancroft. Their work is Bancroft's chief pride, and their pranks are his chief nightmare. He boils when they spend the night in a round of beer halls with a visiting celebrity, but beams when they send the Archduke back to him with a big scoop. He boils again when they disappear on a plane flight—and they send him another big scoop of a Great Lakes rescue.

Bancroft finally quits as city editor and Grant succeeds him. Immediately he begins to become as hard-boiled as his predecessor. Miss Bennett, disgusted with the change in his nature, quits the paper and goes to New York, where she meets a novelist and convinces herself she's in love with him. News that she is to marry makes Grant follow her. He tries to win her back, with the unwanted aid of a New York gangster whose life he once saved. He fails.

With the gangster still aiding, Grant settles down to celebrating his sweetheart's wedding, due the next day. It occurs to him that Miss Bennett deserves a real- history-making present. Inspired, he plans it.

As delivered, the wedding present is so earth-shaking—literally—that it brings a reconciliation of the pair. Grant and Miss Bennett, who is dressed in her wedding gown, ride away together on the top of an insane asylum ambulance.

Conrad Nagel, Gene Lockhart, Inez Courtney, Edward Brophy and Damon Ford aid Bancroft in heading the excellent cast of supporting players. Richard Wallace, director, deserves much credit for retaining the pace of the original story by Paul Gallico, which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post.

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

"The Halo of Life" is the subject of the sermon to be delivered at the eleven o'clock worship hour on Sunday, October 18th. One may view human life from various angles — he may see it through the eyes of a skeptic, cynic, materialist, etc. But what does the true religious man see in the world about him and in human life? Mr. Cox will endeavor to give answer to this query in full. There will also be a special vocal solo by Miss Mary Stewart Howell. Everyone is urged to attend.

You are requested to remember the Church School, meeting at 9:45 a.m., sharp; and the Christian Endeavor Society, also feeting in the Church Annex, at 6:45 p.m. The members of the C. E. Society announce as their topic for discussion, "The Worst Sin a Person Can Commit." At the close of the last meeting each member wrote what she considered to be the "Worst Sin". These answers will be taken into consideration by the leader of the meeting, Miss Elizabeth Tutwiler. Town-folk are also invited to join this growing organization. A cordial welcome awaits you.

State Capitol News

Montgomery. — With national election day less than three weeks in the offing, Democratic party leaders throughout Alabama renewed their efforts to raise a campaign fund far in excess of the State's quota of $75,000.

Many cities and counties oversubscribed, and even doubled their quotas, but the response from loyal Democrats in a few sections was negligible for the reason that district and county finance committeemen have been repeatedly warned against aggressive solicitation.
